The infatigable Pierre returned at length, with a judge de paix, and a whole posse of officials on horseback, besides a troop of mounted gendarmerie. The prisoner was secured, and the house searched from top to bottom—not a living soul was discovered; but in a large vaulted underground-cellar, were skeletons, and human bodies innumerable—some of the latter in every stage of decomposition. There could not have been less than from three to four hundred victims. The bodies were subsequently removed by order of the authorities, and interred in the cimetiere of Mezières: the house was razed to the ground by the infuriated populace."

"Strange to say, the landlord and the lovely girl, who had been instrumental in bringing these dark deeds to light, have never been heard of from that day to this; and I much fear that the latter perished by the hands of the wretch who kept the house. I have sought, by every means in my power, to gain some tidings of this beautiful creature; but in vain. Money and large rewards have not been wanting; and I would at this moment give half I am worth in the world to discover what became of her—for to her I owe my preservation. My tale is done, and I fear I may have fatigued you in its narration. I ought to mention that Pierre received the large reward offered by government, under which he still holds a lucrative situation in the customs, obtained for him by the united interests of the old general and my father, as a reward for his courage, presence of mind, and fidelity."

As my companion finished the relation of his adventure, we pulled up at the Bear at Hungerford. Well! said our dragsman, that's the most interesting story I ever heard in my born days. May the reader be of the same opinion! I will only add, that it is strictly true in every particular. I parted with my intellectual entertaining fellow-traveller about four miles on this side of Marlborough, not without an earnest request on his part of renewing our acquaintance in Paris. That I availed myself of the cordial invitation may possibly be made manifest in a future number.

A NEW CONUNDRUM.

Why are the sentiments advanced in a Warsaw Message dirty. Exactly like the unclean Laws Of a certain famous city? Because, being far beneath a virtuous people's level, They breathe the little, nasty cunning of the devil.

mind of one against another class of our own citizens.

Resolved: That though the sentiments, policy and intention of the Anti-Mormons of this country vary and conflict with each other, yet we deem all such meetings called for such purposes, as injurious to the interests and peace of the citizens of our country and town, and only calculated to drive from our country good citizens, who would under other circumstances settle among us.

They certainly have done honor to themselves and when such resolutions are passed in their own meeting it clearly shows the tone of public feeling. Why do not the intelligent portion of the inhabitants of Carthage follow their example and thus prove to the world that they are republicans, patriots and honest men? Come now, let us all follow the advice of the prophet, and cultivate peace.

From the following it will be seen, that the editor of the "New-York Herald," is of the same opinion as ourselves in regard to Joseph Smith, his intelligence, influence, &c. And we verily believe that if he and others would only speak out what they believe that their opinion would be, that he would make a better president than either Van Buren, Clay, or any other man.

VERY IMPORTANT AND CURIOUS FROM THE MORMON EMPIRE ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

We received on Thursday some very curious and important intelligence from Nauvoo—the city of the new Mormon Empire which is rapidly rising in the West. It appears that the Mormons are preparing to regulate matters so as to control the presidential question in the coming election. We present extracts from their "holy paper," as they call it, "The Times and Seasons." The first extract gives us an account of the general progress of their affairs in the West; and a very flattering account it appears to be, indicating that their religion—their temple—their agriculture—their politics—and their morals, are all on the high road to improvement. But the most significant of all, is the curious correspondence between General Joe Smith, the great Prophet, and John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina.

It will be perceived from this correspondence that Joe Smith and his whole empire have taken ground not only against Mr. Van Buren in the next election, but also against John C. Calhoun, and that in Joe's letter he applies to the back of the latter, the Mormon lash without any stint. It is the most curious and unique correspondence on a political or religious subject, which we ever recollect to have read, and proves very conclusively that Joe knows very well what he is about—a devilish sight better than either Parson Potts or Doctor Wainwright.

We understand from other accounts that the Mormons are indeed making rapid progress in every point of view—that their "holy city" is filling up fast by emigrants from England—that money is increasing among them—industry increasing—population rapidly increasing. They have already, we believe, a military force of nearly two thousand strong, armed and equipped according to law, and commanded by their own military officers. Heretofore, Joe Smith and his disciples have principally distinguished themselves as religious innovators—the propagators of a "new revelation," as they call it, designed to swallow up all the other religions and sects that agitate the country. But it will be seen, from the intelligence that we give our readers to-day, that Joe Smith has gone a little beyond this, and has taken the field as a political agitator, determined to wield political influence and political votes for the purpose of advancing the temporal interest and prosperity of the empire. This presents a very singular case in politics. It is very well known that the Mormons are numerous enough in the State of Illinois to control the character of its vote. If they control the vote of that State, they will succeed in a great measure, in controlling the vote of the whole western country, for it will be a very close vote at best. It therefore will be seen, that this insignificant body of men, may, in the event of the next Presidency, control the destinies of all the candidates.

The Mormons have now declared their unequivocal hostility to Martin Van Buren and Calhoun; but so far as we have been able to learn, they have been silent with regard to Mr. Clay. It is probable that they may go for him—but this is not certain. At all events, their interference at this important crisis, presents a very singular state of things with regard to the next Presidency. It really would appear as if Mr. Clay, by all these items coming indirectly into the ranks of his allies, would be our next President. We have already seen that Four-crism, with all its phalanxes, and the "grand industrial army" to boot, is at his back—that the Transcendentalism of the East is with him—and now we have Mormonism apparently fast travelling to him, after proclaiming its hostility to the democratic leaders. We very well recollect that the great political wave, which carried General Jackson first into the Presidency in 1828, presented a similar state of things. All the isms—Owenism, Fanny Wrightism—and Communism—all the isms in fact, then in the country, united against Mr. Adams, and declared in favor of General Jackson. He was accordingly elected. Mr. Clay is as fortunate, it appears, as to have attracted a similar combination of friendly isms.

All those doctrines, and ologies and isms, which have no definite character, no definite destiny, and no definite moral principle, appear to be floating about to find somebody to which they can adhere, and by doing so they think they may be able to carry out their projects of revolution and change. In the eyes of all Mr. Clay presents, it seems, the strongest attractions.

With these remarks, we give the following extracts from the Mormon Journal as being the most curious and important we have seen, and probable tending in no slight degree to develop the result of the next Presidency, as well as the result of the new revelation of Joe Smith.

Mr. Editor:

As I shall soon be in want of a considerable amount of brick, I take the liberty to say, through your paper, to the Brick Makers of Nauvoo, give me your proposals for HALF A MILLION OF BRICK, to be furnished at the kiln or kilns, the present season; stating the time of delivery; the whole or part may be taken at one contract. The quality, whether pressed or unpressed, and the difference in price; whether the clay has been aired and frosted; and what proportion of broken brick will be included in the count. Terms, cash on delivery; time, price, and quality suiting. Address, through the Neighbor.

[We have seen 'A Builder' and are satisfied it will be for the interest of our Brick Makers to look to this thing without delay.]

THE EXILE'S RETURN.

O, my own native country, again I behold thee, Once more do I hail thee fair "Queen of the West."

Again in the arms of my fancy I fold thee, And call thee "Ma-Vernueen" "the Isle of the West."

The health on thy mountains hath oft been my pillow, And there, was the step of my boyhood full footed.

But years have elapsed, and the foam crested billow Hath borne me an exile from love and from home.

Deep, deep are the feelings reflection can wake, The visions of childhood now throng to my view.

The hopes in despair that long since were forsaken, I feelate renewed far more vivid and true.

But yet, oh my country, how changed do I find thee, The voice of affection no more shall I hear, No heart that I loved now remains to remind me.

That "Friendship" one shed for the Exile, "a tear."

No more do the scenes, which in youth so delighted, Retain the fond charm which before they possessed.

The love which was mine may long since have been blighted, With griefs yet unknown, as my soul is oppressed.

Alas! my sad heart overfloweth with emotion, For time hath not chilled the affection I bore.

And for Erin thy sons own a lasting devotion, When near thee they love thee, when absent adore thee.

Sweet Isle of the Ocean, a solemn benison Around thee, Spring seeks in thy valleys her lovely abode, Where nature smiles glad as when fairly she found thee.

An Emerald bright from the hands of her God, With pride then returning, my country I claim thee.

For where could I find such warm hearts as in thee, Thy sons and thy daughters, exulting may name thee.

"First flower of the Earth, and first gem of the Sea."

COMMANDER BEADON'S LIFE BUOY.

Which gained the Gold Iris Medal, in June last, from the Royal Society.

The loss of life by shipwreck on the sea coast is a subject of vast concern to every philanthropic mind. Every fresh accident gives an additional impulse to the fervent desire of bringing into use some means or other for the preservation of human life at sea. Amongst the many inventions and schemes devised for this purpose, we know of none that surpasses the ingenious and meritorious life-preserving machine, the invention of Commander Beadon, R. N. It is well known how easily, with a small piece of wood, a person can float himself for hours even in a tempestuous sea. Witness, for instance, the miraculous escape of one individual in this way from the Conqueror, off Boulogne, last year; where all the rest, crew and passengers, met with a watery grave, only two or three miles from the shore. Beadon's machine, or life buoy, is simply this—that the moment the ship is stranded on the coast where the sea is so boisterous that the boats cannot be made use of, as the last resource, that every available material of a buoyant nature to be found in the ship be collected and made fast separately (a few yards' distance from each other) to a line, forming a long raft to which the unfortunate sufferer can cling. The line of the raft is previously attached to the apparatus (life-boat) an illustration of which is given above, and a detailed account of its principles is here subjoined. By this life-buoy, guided by a mariner, the sufferers are secured against being drifted off to sea, at the mercy of the wind and waves, it being so constructed that one individual mariner is sufficient to bring it to shore, against wind and tide in most cases, where a common boat would be swamped instantly; so that, in this respect, it differs from, and surpasses most other benevolent inventions for the same humane object.

We may venture to assert that had such a rowing-buoy as the above accompanied the Pegasus, the immense sacrifice of life then made would have been prevented, and many of the now fatherless children would have rejoiced to find their parents' life spared to them by this inimitable invention.

With an honorable self-denying spirit (sailor-like), and worthy of imitation, Commander Beadon, after accomplishing his project, at an expense of £100 to himself, threw the invention open to the public, without any trammels, or patent, so that any one at liberty to manufacture from his model deposited at the Museum of the Society of Arts, Adelphi, London.

We sincerely trust that something will at once be done by every company interested in taking passengers by sea, especially our numerous steamboats; and as ten pounds is ample to construct a working life-buoy upon Beadon's scheme, surely the proprietors and directors of our navigation steamboat companies will be greatly to blame, should they not be provided with such a useful method in future of guarding against such an awful calamity as the loss of life upon the coast, under circumstances of shipwreck.

DESCRIPTION.

The drawing shows a man seated upon a moveable life-buoy, in the act of returning to a ship to leeward. It is a metal tube 8 feet long by 12 inches in its greatest diameter, and is tapered towards its after end so as to permit it to pass freely through the water. It is conical at each end, in which are eyebolts, for the double purpose of attaching a rope to tow it by, and to steady it when suspended at the stern by passing over guide rods fixed therein. The keel (a portion of which is seen) is 10 or 12 inches deep. The buoy is quite safe from filling with water, it being divided into compartments or cases; these cases or drums are water tight, and distinct from each other as well as from the outer cylinder, but are made to fit it nicely, whereby it is much strengthened and supported on the inside against any external blow or pressure. A saddle is formed in it, in which the man sits, quite secure from being washed off, his feet resting on man-ropes. On each side is attached a framework or wing with stop hinges, secured by bolts passing into circular pieces of wood, fitting the cylinder. On the under side of these wings are fixed semicircular extremities. These wings hang down when the buoy is suspended across a frail, but form outriggers when in the water, thus giving it stability. The light staff is moveable on an axle, and so arranged that it lies parallel with the buoy when hung up to the ship, and assumes an upright position when in the water; by this contrivance, there is not more available space occupied than by the buoy now used. It is fired and let go in the usual way, and is propelled by two oars attached with universal joints at the end, eight feet long, and fixed to a moveable pin, suffering it to have a horizontal and vertical motion, but securing it from loss. It may also be propelled by two paddles fixed in a similar way.

NOTICE TO EMIGRANTS AND LATTER-DAY SAINTS GENERALLY.

I feel it my duty to say to the brethren generally, and especially those who are emigrating to this place, that there is in the hands of the Trustees in Trust, a large quantity of lands, both in the city and adjoining Townships in this county, which is for sale some of which belongs to the church and is designed for the benefit of the poor, and also to liquidate debts owing by the church, for which the Trustees in Trust is responsible. Some also is land which has been consecrated for the building of the Temple, and some for the Nauvoo House.

If the brethren who move in here and want an inheritance will buy their lands from the Trustees in Trust, they will thereby benefit the poor, the Temple and the Nauvoo House, and even then only be doing that which is their duty and which I know, by considerable experience, will be vastly for their benefit and satisfaction in days to come. Let all the brethren therefore, when they move into Nauvoo, consult President Joseph Smith the Trustee &c., and purchase their lands of him, and I am bold to say that God will bless them and will hereafter be glad they did so.

We hold ourselves ready at any time to wait upon the brethren and show them the lands belonging to the church and Temple &c., and can be found any day either at President Joseph Smith's Bar Room or the Temple Recorder's Office, at the Temple.

From earliest childhood, he practiced successfully the art of healing; and in defiance of opposition, by friends and relatives, he succeeded in studying the art and science of medicine; and after untiring industry and immense research, and after having reached riper years, and traveled among numerous tribes of Indians, and visited many and various climates, Dr James M. Martien is fully purged that he has now realized his fondest expectations; that the object of all his toil, labor and hope, has been accomplished; and that he will be regarded by all future generations as the true Philanthropist; as having been the instrument, under the direction of an overruling Providence, of rendering and having rendered the greatest good to the greatest number, will be cheerfully conceded.

AN APPEAL TO THE STATE OF TENNESSEE, BY A. YOUNG.

An Appeal to the Citizens of the State of Tennessee, desiring them to consider the wrongs that have been done to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by Missouri, a Sovereign State of this great Republic by shedding innocent blood, driving American citizens from their own possessions lawfully obtained, mobbing, and robbing, and with ungodly hands polluting the sanctuary of female virtue.

I was born in Smith Co., Tennessee, September 23rd, 1805, an only offspring of my parents. My father John Young, was a native of South Carolina, but in early life adopted Tennessee as his home. In the last war with Great Britain, and the combined Powers, he enlisted and served during the war a regular soldier, and although he survived the war, and saw the happy situation of his beloved country, that she was yet free; I never saw him more. He never returned to Tennessee, but was soon numbered with the dead. My mother was then a widow, and I an orphan, and without means to subsist upon. We had a numerous connection of wealthy relatives, they extended to us the hand of friendship, and we thankfully received the little amount they bestowed. However we met with many disappointments and hardships.

About the age of seventeen years, I commenced and read medicine with Dr. O. Williams, a graduate of Transylvania University. After continuing with him for a time, I went to Alabama, at about nineteen, and read with Dr. Geo. Monroe, a licentiate of the Medical Board of Huntsville. He was formerly from Glasgow, Ky. When I began to think of setting up for myself, I found my circumstances so limited, that instead of practicing medicine I was compelled to take hold of the plough, hoe, axe &c. to earn a livelihood. I then returned to Tennessee. At the age of twenty-four I became the head of a family, and so managed as to gain a little property in a short time. Having frequent solicitations, in about three years after, I purchased a few books and some medicines, and commenced practice, which for awhile was confined to a few poor families, "birds of a feather will flock together." There were in the neighborhood, men of choice medical attainments, surrounded with wealthy friends, and consequently the rich, who desired to retain their popularity would not employ me. Months passed on, and little was said about me, unless it was occasionally, as I passed on, for the worshippers of great men, to laugh and make sport at the idea, of my making a living at the practice of medicine. I pursued an onward course, and soon it turned out that some important cures were effected, by the means I had prescribed; and I had the satisfaction to administer with great advantage to some of those identical persons, who had pointed the finger of scorn at me in the commencement, by pursuing a correct practice; the Lord blessed me abundantly, and gave me favor with that people, so much so, that in five years, I had more practice than any practitioner in that region of country. I mention these circumstances, merely to shew, that there are but few, if any impossibilities with persevering integrity; and know this, that those very things which we often consider as impossible to bring about are the purposes that the God of Heaven will accomplish.

During all this time, things passed on well, almost every man woman and child I met were my friends; notwithstanding I had taken upon me a name rather unpopular among the sectarians of the other sects, that of "Campbellite," and as for politics, I was a free-willer, talked and voted as suited. Those were joyful years, with respect to camp-meeting revivals; yet politics produced far greater excitement, than the difference in our religious views or opinions. By this time I had attained to the full half of my three score years and ten, and still surrounded with, and in, the society of numerous friends and relatives, enjoying with them the rights of privilege and blessings of a free-born American citizen, which was purchased by our Ancestors, at the expense of their blood and treasure.

We had made a fair compromise of political differences, each to think and act as we thought proper; and as to religion we agreed well enough, only on some non-essential points as though the God of heaven had condescended to speak from his holy habitation in nonsense and impart instructions, and give commandments to man, who was created after the image of God, and through obedience, was destined to become an heir of God, and a joint heir with Jesus Christ, and to whom it was said, "Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

"Now to middle age, from tiny boy,
My later days were filled with joy;
My comrades good and kind,
The scene soon changed as will appear,
Few friends I found my heart to cheer,
Each one and all, were mad and blind."
When light appears, darkness recedes,
"but if the light, which is in you be darkness, how great is that darkness." I was covered up with a dark mantle, wrapped up in carnal security, in so much, that the true light had never penetrated my mind; but truly I enjoyed blessings as far as I had knowledge.

In the winter of 1830, I availed myself of the opportunity that offered, of hearing two "Mormon Preachers," so called, Julian Moser and George W. Gee; they delivered discourses on first principles of the Gospel, in such a plain, simple, and impressive manner, while their arguments were so powerfully and understandingly conveyed to my mind, that I never could erase them. I had heard great many lying reports about the people before, but when I heard them for myself, I became convinced, and wondered how men, who professed to preach the Gospel, could stand up before God, and make such a monstrous false statement about an innocent God-fearing people, as I had heard done; but the mystery is solved, I have learned "Our craft is in danger." Teach for hire and divine for money. I immediately set out for investigating the doctrine, and the more I examined, the better I was satisfied with it.

Some of my pretended friends became quite interested for my welfare, and urged me to desist, some entreated, and others threatened, but I was inexorable, and when necessary I would contend for the men and their doctrine.

The next summer, A. O. Smoot, came to Tennessee, on a Mission; I saw him a short time after he arrived in Jackson county, and invited him to my house; he visited us from time to time, and I feel grateful to my Heavenly Father that he did so. I was convinced of the doctrine, and of my duty to yield obedience to its requirements. I now encountered the most powerful struggle, within my own breast, that I ever before experienced.

Eternal life was offered on one side, on the other, wealth, popularity, and earthly emoluments. However, I with my household, soon resolved what to do, like Mary to "choose the good part" and in a very short time amidst tempests of opposition, reduced our resolution to practice. We were conducted into the kingdom of Jesus, by legal authority, on the 8th day of August, 1840. I ascertained in a short time, that I was without friends, and had ever been, for so soon as I needed their friendship, I could not find them. My practice decreased gradually, I was mocked and laughed at by some, and cursed by others; and soon I was threatened heavily. Jesus said, "These signs shall follow them that believe &c. now, if they do not follow, it is evident that we do not believe, or that Jesus was an impostor. There is not a sectarian church on this Continent, that enjoys the Gifts, evidently they do not believe aright. I have been eye and ear witness, to the fact, and know of a truth, some of the signs do follow, which I testify to you in sincerity; by these and other demonstrative evidences, I know that Joseph Smith, is a Prophet of God, and under those circumstances, he that would deny that personage being a Prophet sent by Jesus Christ, who has lead out a numerous, a great people like this, from darkness, and they by the power of God, received those gifts after embracing the Gospel does in effect deny Jesus himself.

The Bishops of Rome acknowledged that Luther revived the Waldensian Religion. Rome, Luther, and all other sectarian reformers, deny a necessity or possibility of any more revelation; yet they are all without the gifts, and they do follow the believer in Jesus.

But, hark! an historian tells us: that Calvin with a wonderful religious zeal, murdered Michael Servetus, caused him to be burnt for a difference of religious opinion. Another historian tells us, that the "Pilgrim Fathers," of the Calvinistic faith, who fled from religious persecution in the old World, and came to Plymouth, to dwell among the rude savages, that they might enjoy the liberty of conscience, established a like precedent, but that they might avoid persecution in the New World, they entered into the following compact, A. D. 1620:—

"We &c. do solemnly and voluntarily, in the presence of God, and one another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil body politic, for our better ordering and preservation, and furtherance of the ends aforesaid, and by virtue hereof to enact, constitute, and frame such just and equal laws, ordinances, acts, and constitutions, and officers, from time to time, as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general good of the colony, unto which we promise all due submission and obedience."

But, wonderful to tell, these same humble reformers, fifteen years after, banished two of their number, on account of difference of religious opinion. Thus having violated and trampled upon their sacred obligation, which may be properly called the first "American Constitution." They soon proceeded to establish a wretched precedent, for the contemplation of posterity. Tortured the Quakers, cut their ears, bored their tongues through with red hot irons, banished and murdered others in cold blood. Yet lean upon the Lord, and declare (with blood stained hands) they are the elect of God!!!

When Andrew Jackson reflected upon those gone-by scenes of cruelty, no wonder that, in his farewell address, to the people of the United States, he with prophetic certainty, declared, "If the Union is once severed, the line of separation will grow wider and wider, and the controversies which are now debated and settled in the halls of legislation, will then be tried in fields of battle, and be determined by the sword." Think how your venerated constitution stands now violated, and stained with innocent blood, ye inhabitants of America. That constitution which cost such an immense quantity of blood and treasure to sustain it. The God of Heaven raised up a Washington to break the yoke of oppression, and sustain the newly framed constitution. To effect which he and our fathers waded through perils, hunger and cold, and secured privileges for their posterity, unknown on any other land beneath the sun. Thus was the foundation laid for the most effectual reformation ever known since the man of sin first seated himself in the Temple of God. Our boasted land of liberty has afforded a peaceful home for the oppressed; a shelter from the violent storms of religious persecution, that has raged in every other land, like a tornado. America is known a far off as the "asylum of the oppressed." But hark ye, venerated sages of the Revolution! lend a listening ear, ye noble spirits of our departed sires! Ye generous Polanders, and strangers from other isles! Ye whose blood on crimsoned the tree of our liberty! view the scene fifty years from the period, when your blood flowed for our freedom. In 1833, men, women and children, driven from their homes, that they had bought, while the pretended democrats in power, Martin Van Buren, said our cause was good, but he could do nothing for us. And John C. Calhoun declares the Government has no power to redress us. Thou uncompromising democrat, next to the great Washington, let us hear thy decision, on retiring from the cares and anxiety of public life.

It would cease to be a government, and be unworthy of the name, if it had not the power to enforce the execution of its own laws, within its own sphere of action. Again, "no free Government can stand without virtue in the people, and a lofty spirit of patriotism."—Andrew Jackson. "While experience shall not have demonstrated its practicability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its bonds." (The Union) Washington.

The saints were pursued from year to year, and as the laws had lost all virtue, they must leave their homes and property, suffer martyrdom, or deny the Lord who bought them, which some having done, were still denied the benefit of re-creation!

Ye that justify such cruelty as is practiced on us as a people, by Missouri; hear a Pagan Emperor, and blush! Adrian writes, "If the people of the province will appear publicly, and make open charges against the Christians, so as to give them an opportunity of answering for themselves, let them proceed in that manner only, and not by rude demands, and mere clamors, for it is much more proper if any person will accuse them, that you shall take cognizance of these matters. If, therefore, any accuse and shew that they actually break the laws, do you determine according to the nature of the crime. But by Hercules! if the charge be a mere calumny, do you estimate the enormity of such calumny, and punish it as it deserves. Also the bloody "Trajan," when interrogated by Pliny, respecting the Christians says, "After they are convicted, if they renounce their profession of Christianity, they shall be pardoned on their repentance." Hear all christendom, ye who call yourselves Christians. Ye that sanction rape, robbery, and murder of the Latter-Day Saints in Missouri, again examine the decision of the Pagan Emperors, Adrian, and Lidian! then blush for shame! Is it so! Alas! Alas! Your church government has been re-modelled again and again. — you have transgressed the law, changed the ordinances, and broken the everlasting covenant. Your prophets and seers are covered, and where there is no vision the people perish. The rulers are determined to shed innocent blood! The earth is defiled by violence. The innocent suffer, and the cry of the widow and fatherless, has entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye profess great reverence for the old prophets, though you neither follow their counsel, or imitate their virtues. But contrary to the laws of God and man, persecute and slay those that God sends to you. Just as the old rebellious Jews were, when Jesus came among them, held the scriptures in their hands, and yet they were of no value to them. They did not understand them, for the key of knowledge had been taken away. Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, &c.

That people was scattered and cursed for transgression, yet they were ignorant of it; but they have a promise of being gathered. Now in the dispensation of the fulness of times, all things are to be gathered into one. The work is begun. The first is to be last and the last first. A prophet is sent, and whosoever refuses to follow that prophet, will receive to himself eternal condemnation! Thus it has been in every age of the world. Remember Noah's flood, remember the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah, and also the end of the Jews. The key of knowledge is gone, and must be restored. Although the professing world, in their blind zeal, are determined to embue their hands in innocent blood! Remember that although old David was once a man after God's own heart, yet after that, he slew Uriah, the Hittite, with the sword; and Jesus said no murderer hath eternal life dwelling in him. Missouri, after pursuing the saints from place to place, for five years, caused their ruler, a modern Dominic, to issue an exterminating edict. — Thou venerable Washington, Jefferson or Jackson, was the like ever known before in a protestant Government! Like begets like. The terms were rigorous indeed; they were required to leave, and what they could not fly with immediately, was given the murderers for their trouble. Do not intend to implicate every citizen of Missouri; far from it. There are, doubtless, many high minded, honest men there. But let us see the terms of Victor Amadeus' edict, 1686: After he was satiated with blood, as in the case before us. He says, "No retreat is granted for goods, but they are to be detained to defray expenses. The ministers and foreigners were to be delivered into his hands. All must lay down their arms and deliver them to the Governor! Places of worship was to be demolished, and all divine exercises to be obstructed. I call on all honest men and women to judge between the Duke of Savoy and old Boggs with his satellites. No restraint on either. Men were driven from their homes, and many women who were endeavoring to make their escape, were caught in their flight, and ravished to death! One young woman was tied down fast, and forced by a cursed brutal mob, until she expired in agony! If you tolerate these horrid deeds, remember the justice of Sochem! Delicacy forbid that those outrages should be made public, until they can no longer slumber. A revolutionary soldier who was not able to make his escape, was severed joint by joint until his limbs were taken from his live trunk. A little boy who was in a blacksmith's shop, where some fifteen or twenty lay dead on the floor, crept under the bellows, and a devil in human shape put him through a crack of the house, and shot off the top of the child's head!!! He afterwards boasted of his brave achievement, and the Legislature paid him for it. Women gave birth to children in the open prairies, and death was the consequence. "Firmly they the path of suffering trod, And counted death all gain, to live with God." Now the prophets were thrown into dungeons, and flogged down with chains, while efforts were made to feed them on human flesh. When they complained of pain, their chains were bound on still faster, although their limbs were already mangled and swollen! This they endured for months, but God made a way for their escape. "All hail ye faithful shepherds of the flock. By tortures unnumbered, flogged on the rock: In your high scorn of honors, honor'd most, Ye chose the dungeons, not the traitor's post." Thirty-eight times has the prophet been arraigned before the tribunals of his country, for alleged crimes, since the Lord has called him to be his servant. — Many times his life was jeopardized, surrounded and judged by a host of his enemies; but amidst all the false witnesses that has ever been suborned, and testified against him, there has never been any thing proven, upon which an action could be sustained. Yet he has been confined in dungeons without having committed crime. Now ye sons of liberty, ye whose souls are free. Ye who believe in the existence of a God at all, remember Joseph and Potiphar's wife! Remember what Jesus and the apostles suffered, for alleged crime, and the ancient prophets too, and all who live godly in Christ Jesus must do the same. But remember that although Joseph suffered long, and much, and was compelled to ask of another prisoner, to remember him before the king. Yet soon and unexpectedly to others, he was on the throne of power, where he gave every satisfaction. Remember Susanna! in her innocence she was taken and accused, but the Lord raised up a Daniel and rescued her. I ask, who that believes in a God at all, but must acknowledge his hand in all this matter, in rescuing his prophet. While we are engaged in procuring a living honestly before God, and all men, Missouri is meditating evil against us; comes into our county with an armed force, kidnaps and takes our brethren into Missouri, to mock and torture them; which they have done, and then failed of proof to punish them further. Some honorable men have been disgusted at such conduct, and caused them to be released. This speaks volumes in favor of many honest men in Missouri. We as a people have suffered many wrongs from that State. We have sought redress for our grievances, from the proper authorities of the State. But alas! our case is decided, and our fate determined, before our cause is heard; nor would they investigate the nature of our claims at all. We have memorialized Congress, but in vain. The spilling of our blood (the blood of innocent women and children, on the far famed soil of the "land of the free and the home of the brave") is not worthy of their consideration.

John C. Calhoun considers our Government of limited powers, nor has it any power to redress us: "Missouri is a sovereign State." When the case was laid before Martin Van Buren, he said, "Gentlemen, your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you!!!" Democrat! Bargainocrat! Mockocrat! O, Columbia! how, to what art thou fallen! A Democratic ruler of this great people can do nothing to redress robberies and murder, of its subjects! O, thou Gallo of old, that cares nothing for all these things! How did the unfinishing Democrat act in emergencies! (Andrew Jackson, whose name will ever be dear to the American people.) Call to mind the various wrongs, America had suffered, which was satisfactorily adjusted under his administration. Calhoun considered this Government of such limited powers that Carolina could nullify with impunity. France considered they might commit robberies and murder on the high seas; but think ye, spirits of 76, Andrew Jackson had power vested in him according to law, and with unflinching firmness, he exercised it. Our nation was honored; but now she is disgraced. Notwithstanding these examples, and his farewell declaration, That a Government is unworthy the name of such, which cannot enforce her laws, within her own sphere of action. The next Democratic President can do nothing to prevent murders and robberies! Is Jackson a Democrat? You answer yes. Then, as a matter of course, Van Buren and Calhoun are not.

Having failed of obtaining redress at every point where we could have reasonably expected it, I know not where to apply with more certainty of obtaining justice, than to appeal to the honor of the noble and patriotic sons of Tennessee. I present this appeal to you, because, having been born and raised in your midst, I know you to be honorable, and willing to extend your hand, at all times, to relieve suffering humanity. My brothers and sisters have been robbed, mobbed, plundered, ravished, driven and banished from a "sovereign State" of this great confederacy, (without crime on our part) regardless of law or justice. Nor are we permitted to return again, and possess our inheritance (that we have paid this Government for) under pain of death, while the Government refuses to investigate our claims, although they have received our money for their lands.

Under those circumstances, I appeal to the patriotism of my native State, to arise in the dignity and power of our praise-worthy ancestors, who with united effort led on to victory, and gained their freedom, while as yet the shackles of despotism was entwined around them! Yes by all honorable means, help to bring Missouri to justice. Arraign her at the bar, before the councils of this nation. Her skirts are stained with innocent blood!

I appeal to the Legislature, that they instruct their Senators, and request their Representatives in Congress, to appoint a delegation, to investigate our claims against Missouri. Also I appeal to the Governor, to use his executive influence, to bring about an honorable adjustment of existing differences, and restore peace for "blessed is the peacemaker." And to my old friends in Congress, Maj. Wm. B. Campbell, Col. Alvan Cullom, and Dr. Peyton, to use their influence in the councils of this great nation, to re-instate us in our possessions that we have bought of this Government, of which we were despoiled in Missouri.

I appeal to the citizens of my native State, because they have ever been willing and ready to give their aid, to relieve suffering humanity, as in the cases of Texas, Florida, &c. &c. If you will not hear, remember your playmates are oppressed, and remember Joseph's visit to Nineveh, and the commotion! Remember the lying spirit, that went out from the presence of the Lord, to seduce Ahab, and avoid his error, that you be not numbered with transgressors. If you will not hear, remember Noah's flood; remember the destruction of the rebellious Israelites, Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, and remember Pharaoh's host. Remember

David slew Uriah the Hittite, with the sword; but could not escape. Remember the individual who concealed the gold wedge in the camp of Israel, and the consequences that followed, before you endeavor to cover up the murderous deeds of Missouri. Transgression has ever been visited with vengeance on the heads of criminals.

The blood of innocent sufferers, we now crying to God from the ground of Missouri, as did the blood of righteous Abel. Jesus declared to those who lived on the earth in the days of his probation, of that generation should be required, all the innocent blood shed on the earth, from that of Righteous Abel, to that of Zechariah. It is not a light matter to shed innocent blood. Remember the curse of Cain. And take heed lest of this generation be required all the innocent blood shed on the earth, from that of righteous Stephen, to the consummation of all things!

I appeal to you, ye Whigs, because you are not correctly informed as to the locality of our claims, and the extent of our sufferings, a brief narrative of which was given by our delegation to Congress, as memorialists, to the venerable Hugh L. White, which touched his noble soul with a sympathy, characteristic of the great Washington. From weeping he could not refrain! And the capacious soul of the renowned Henry Clay was aroused with indignation upon the recital of the facts!

I make this appeal to you, ye Democrats, because a Washington, Jefferson, or Jackson, never would have tolerated such cursed deeds! It is a burlesque upon Democracy, an indelible reproach upon this Government. Strip off the borrowed feathers from the concocted Jackdaw, expose them to public view, and neither party will regard them more than a few does a pig. O pretty head, finely wrought, but void utterly of brains! O counterfeit oh, bogus democracy!

I appeal also to you, ye fair daughters of my native State, ye who prize the gem of female virtue. Do as you would be done by, examine our cause, and see whether or not we make just demands, when we demand our liberty, and our homes under the constitution, that once secured them. Do not believe every lie circulated about us. We are human beings of like passions with yourselves. If you love the Lord, you do not wish to spill any human being's blood, without cause. You love liberty, so do we. You love honor and virtue, so do we. I am well acquainted with hundreds of you. I know you have ever inculcated virtuous principles. Arise ye, virtuous daughters of Columbia. You have influence, then use it. The Constitution places the power in the hands of your fathers, husbands and brothers. Then strengthen their hands and come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty destroyer. You no doubt pity me for being deluded; but shall I, who have a knowledge of so much unjust doings towards my people, (for as Ruth said, "their people is my people, and their God is my God.") I who know for myself, that the signs do follow this people, as Jesus promised, or I who have the prophet's blessing, which from time immemorial has been "irrevocable." Remember Isaac, remember Jacob and Esau, the twelve patriarchs, with Ephraim and Manassah. These blessings were renewed by Moses afterwards. The God of heaven said at a certain time, "he is a prophet, and will pray for you." With all those circumstances before my eyes, shall I turn and fight against the truth? Nay, verily! In preference, let this hand cease to move, and this heart cease to beat! and whenever you think of standing in opposition to those eternal truths, remember Canaan the son of Ham! remember the twenty-three thousand Israelites who fell in one day. Remember Herod, remember the wicked children who cried out against Elisha, remember Ananias and Sapphira, also remember Barjesus.

What shall I say more? Who can stand against the truth? Do not indulge the idea, my relatives, that I can consent to act as did Esau; nor yet to fuddle on the lap of a deceitful fair Delila, and forfeit my claim to eternal life. Though some have come here to enjoy earthly honors, and the things of time and sense, have turned away from the holy commandments, & afterwards denied the Lord who bought them, then have gone away telling all manner of lies. Let not those things deceive you. It is a common thing when dishonest men come here, and get disappointed for them to go away making every false statement about us, they possibly can invent. Let them remember Lot's wife, a Judas and many others who followed his example in the primitive age of Christianity. I must come to a close for the present; but if the Lord will, I shall visit you soon in person. May the God of heaven bless you with light, knowledge, wisdom and understanding, that you may investigate the truth and lay hold on the promises of eternal life, through Jesus Christ. I entreat you attend to the things that make for your peace before they are hid from your eyes.

Respectfully, A. YOUNG.

Then she displays the undaunted spirit which neither courts difficulties nor evades them; that resignation which neither utters murmurs nor regret, and that patience in suffering which seems victorious even over death itself.

Habits of Eminent Authors.—Shelley, usually ate a baked potatoe previously to sitting down to write. He has been heard to assert that some of his finest ideas came whilst putting in the butter.

Whether he purchased his potatoes in the street, or had them dressed at home, does not appear. Fielding wrote the whole of his "Tom Jones," in one night, after a debauch with Hogarth, and sold it the next morning to procure him a meal. Such is the fate of genius!

Kirke White was much admired for his red hair, which he allowed to grow down his back in two plaits. He never would suffer any allusion to be made to it; but when writing used it as a blotting paper.

On this account all his MSS. are transcribed in red ink, as may be seen in the library of the British Museum. Cuvier always wrote with a pail full of water at his side, in which he alternately dipped head and feet to freshen his ideas. He has been known to do this upwards of sixty times in one night, when preparing his "Regne Animal." It was his boast that he had never been up in a balloon.

Dr. Johnson could never see a post without jumping over it. Boswell remarking upon his puerility, Johnson observed, "Sir, what a boy does in sport, a man may do in earnest." Upon which Boswell replied, "then you mean to say that I might play at chuck-farthing!" "Sir," returned Johnson, "any man might if he had a fair-thing to chuck." How brilliant are the sallies, when compared to the insipid answers of modern times—the empty rorts of exhausted receivers! [Punch's Pocket Book.]

The Bowie Knife.—Razin Bowie, the man who invented that deadly weapon, the Bowie knife, which is the tenant of every Texan's bosom, was a reckless drunkard, who had squandered his property and was subsequently obliged to fly from his country (the U. S.) for slaying a man in a duel. The fact is well known in Texas, and is thus related by a friend of Bowie's, who was present when Razin Bowie fought a duel with knives across a table, at the Altam, a few days before Santa Anna took it—his first duel was fought at Natchez, on the Mississippi in the fall of 1834. A dispute arose at a card table, in the middle of the day, between Bowie and a man, named Black.

The lie was given by Bowie to his opponent, and at the same moment drawing his knife (which was a case one, with a blade about four inches long, such as the Americans always carry in their pockets, he challenged the man to fight, which was accepted, and Black having taken his seat opposite Bowie, at a small square table, the conflict began. It lasted about twenty minutes, during which time both parties were severely cut, when Bowie rose from the table, and, with a desperate oath, rushed upon his antagonist, who fell dead at his feet. The inconvenience felt by Bowie on this occasion, from the smallness of the knife, having called forth the exercise of his dauntless and sanguinary mind, he invented a weapon which would enable him, to use his own words, "to rip a man right away," this task he accomplished during his exile in Texas, and which was the only legacy he could leave his young and adopted republic; indeed it is all she can show of her citizen, his body being soon burned by the Mexicans, and his ashes swept from the face of the earth by the passing winds.

The real Bowie knife has a two-edged blade, about nine inches long, slightly curved towards the point, and sufficiently thick in the back to serve as a chopper, in which way it is very formidable but, not so much to as in thrusting. The blade is covered with a sheath and, when neatly got up, as some of them, it forms a pretty ornament enough when coming from under the corner of the waistcoat, or over the waistband of a pair of Texan trousers.

WOMAN.—We have occasionally found fault with the ladies for carrying bundles of straw and bags of bran on their backs, which has probably descended on us in their estimation. We publish the following neat and happy compliment, (the production of some worshipper of the sex) by way of offset for all we have said or may say against them—and we are confident of receiving a full and unconditional pardon.

"Though God to make her took from man a bone, Yet when he formed her HEART he patterned from his own."

The Volunteer Militia force of Massachusetts is 6,350 men, divided into four companies of Cavalry, twenty-seven of Artillery, 15 of Riflemen, sixty of Light Infantry, and two of Grenadiers. The number of enrolled Militia is 81,500.

Distress in Canada.—The Montreal papers speak of the great distress among the laborers of Lachine, more than 250 persons having been found by a committee, without a morsel to eat, and the thermometer at 20 below the freezing point.

MORE TURKISH FANATICISM.
A letter from Constantinople in the Gazette de Triumvir, has the following: "The great subject of conversation here, is an instance of fanaticism which has taken place at Salonica. Ibrahim Pacha, noted for the severity of his administrations, was lately appointed governor of that district, and chose for his secretary a young man of good abilities and high family. The young Secretary was proceeding, to his post in the Austrian steamer, the Circassian, when he perceived on board a Circassian, who was going to sell, to any rich personage, his two daughters, young girls of extraordinary beauty, who accompanied him. The secretary, when he heard of this intended act of barbarism, could not restrain his indignation, and spoke in very indignant terms to the father relative to his unnatural conduct. The latter maintained that he was acting in every respect according to the laws of the Koran, and that no man had a right to interfere in his private affairs. The young man gave up the dispute, and paced the deck, smoking several pipes to allay his indignation. The Circassian, on finding, lodged a formal complaint before the Cadi against the secretary for having smoked his pipe and taken refreshments on a day during the Ramadan, when every true Mussalman is expressly forbidden to touch any thing to recruit nature, before sunset.

The young man was summoned before the magistrates to answer for such an infringement of the sacred law, and not only grew that he had done so, but declared that it was high time to give up such ridiculous practices. The cadi immediately proceeded to pass judgment on a man guilty of such heterodox doctrine, and sentenced him to death. The sentence was transmitted to Ibrahim, who, though willing to save his secretary, did not venture to act from his own authority. He referred the matter to Constantinople, in order to cause delay; but the cadi, on his side, having sent in his report the matter was of necessity brought before the grand council, where the judgment was confirmed, and the execution ordered to take place immediately. Probably, at the present time the young man has ceased to exist."

THE OUTRAGES OF THE SABBATH DAY.—R. B. CONFLAGRATION, &c., Correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune. Part II. Dec. 15—P. M.
In the midst of so much excitement, so many conflicting statements, prevailing throughout the whole of our city yesterday, it was difficult to furnish a correct account of the disgraceful conduct of the Fairmount and Independence Horse Companies, so long notorious for their murderous attacks upon their brother firemen. The torch of the incendiary was applied to Peter Leibert & Co's extensive lumber yard, Kensington, at an early hour, which, together with an adjoining frame building, was in a few hours entirely destroyed. Messrs. L. & Co. are, I am pleased to add, fully insured.

But no sooner had the flames abated than the members of the Independence Horse Company, located in Kensington, made an assault upon the members of Northern Liberty Hose, at Fortner's Tavern, and after tearing off their equipments, dashing tumblers, decanters, and other dangerous missiles at the members of the Liberty, (many of whom were awfully cut, the floor of the bar-room being covered with blood,) the cry of "The Carriage" was raised, but fortunately the villains were not successful in getting hold of it, and the Liberty members with drew hastily from the spot.

As the carriage of the Weccacoe Hose Company, located in Catherine-street, Southwark, had just passed over the High Bridge, on its return home, with not more than seven members attached to the rope, a premeditated and murderous attack was made upon them by about 150 ruffian, members of the Fairmount Engine Company, armed with clubs, stones, and it is said, also, many were seen to have small axes and large butcher-knives! The assailants immediately left their apparatus, and fled for their lives; but they were soon overtaken, and nearly beaten to death. William Thomas was conveyed home upon a stretcher, his life, at the time being despaired of. To day, however, he is much better. William Conner, another member, it was feared, had been actually sacrificed, but at a late hour in the day, while the most violent excitement and bitter revenge goaded the breasts of his brother firemen and friends, having been cut and bruised to such an extent that he was unable to reach home.

The beautiful carriage of the Weccacoe, worth probably fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars, was taken out to Broad street and Poplar Lane, where the infuriated wretches of the Fairmount literally cut it into fragments with axes, &c., scattering the brass bells and lamps, which, together with some other portions of the wreck, boats were made should be sent to their friends, the New Market Company of Baltimore!

To show the desperate character of these men, many had been heard the previous evening to openly boast of their intentions. They were not equipped, well armed, and, as they supposed, disguised; but I rejoice to state that they are known, and it is hoped the vengeance of the law may fall heavy upon them.

Where this outrage will terminate, no one can tell, as the Weccacoe Hose Company are powerful in numbers, and have already expressed their determination to retaliate in a similar manner!

The wreck of the Weccacoe, after lying in the rear of the Mayor's office up to eleven o'clock this morning, was taken out to the City Lumber Yard—its members still refusing to receive it.

About 9 o'clock, an alarm of fire again originated in Kensington, which produced another meeting between the Independence and Liberty Hose Companies, terminating in a fight, almost unparalleled for its brutality. The parties fell each other to the ground—men were beaten and kicked; and one man had his arm fractured—while another had his ear bitten off! Brick-bats, &c., were flying in every direction. The apparatus of the Liberty was seized upon, and would probably have shared the same fate of the Weccacoe, but for the daring exertions of Alderman Cloud, who leaped upon the carriage and remonstrated in the proper spirit.

TRANSLATION INTO ENGLISH VERSE FROM SOPHOCLES.
PILLOIUS, v. 236—319.

Wretch that I am from every comfort driven,
The scorn of mortals and the curse of heaven!
Of whom thus left by treachery's foulest deed,
A mournful life of anguish'd days to lead;
No sound hath reach'd the house that gave me birth,
Nor even one lovely tale of all my native earth.
But they that left me triumph in their fraud,
My grief-rejoice in, and their crime applaud:
While still my frowning wound more careless grows,
And my rack'd frame with fiercer anguish glows.

Oh! honoured branch of Pelous' lofty line,
Son of a hero dauntless as divine!
To thee I turn some breath of echoing fame
Hath borne at least the accents of my name;
And though unknown and unknown my wrongs,
Yet that to me the glorious right belongs
To wield the weapons which my friendship won,
Ev'n the dread arrows of Alcmæon's son:
Yes, I am he from noble Porus sprung,
Whom Givonia's ruthless ingrate chiefs have flung.
Like some lone weed on this lone isle to lie,
Unmolested to suffer, and unmourned to die,
In one short hour the poison's festering away,
And waste in sickening pain my cheerless life away.

With these I came, rack'd with my wound the while,
O'er the broad wave from Chrysa's sea-girl's side;
And sooth to say, that isle-nymph's fatal spell
Had made me but a foul abortion thing:
For when beneath a high rock's sheltering shade,
On this lone beach my feeble form I laid,
And weari'd out, my aching eyes lids close,
In one short hour I saw the vision of my woes,
Then with a fiendish joy they mark'd me sleep,
And straightway launched their venous darts on the deep—
'Tis true they left some food and rags behind,
Life's spark to cherish, and my wound to bind:
Such boon, I own, I deem'd my wretched state;
But oh! may woe like mine their murderous steps await!

At length I woke, but who, my son, can tell
The night of sorrow on my heart that fell!
What evils I bewail'd, what tears I shed,
When flash'd the fatal truth that all had fled—
That not one soul of all that numerous band,
Which late had gladdened this deserted strand,
Was left with me my wants or woes to heed,
Or aid ungrudging in the hour of need!
And when this mood was o'er, and I could mark,
And muse upon my fate—all, all was dark!
Nought save distress and pain were to be found,
But much of these seem'd compassing me around.
And time went on, and lonely was my lot,
And servile, for my humble roof had not
One living source of aid: this bow indeed I had,
And with its arrows wing'd speed
In midway flight I struck the fowls of heaven:
And when I sought the food my shafts had given,
How painful was the act!—to creep among Earth's weeds, and tortured drag my wound a foot along!

And reply too when winter's frost had bound
In adamant chains the torpid ground, Imperious nature might aloud require
The fountain's crystal draught,—the warmth of
Then would I creep in suffering's fever'd strife,
To seek with toil these treasures of life;
And when returned, how oft, with fainting flame,
I've found no fire to nurse the generous flame!

Then would I strive, since every joy had fled,
Save what my heart's reviving influence shed,
To strike the hardy flint with anxious care,
And give to life the spark that slumber'd there:
For this the single solace which remains,
And yields me all I crave refuge from my pains.
The scene of all my anguish, all my toil—
As I and 'tis to which no sail draws near,
To which with joy no seaman seeks to steer;
Nor do I marvel that he shuns its beach,
Some other land of fairer charms to reach:
For sure no bright attractions can it boast,
With not one spot to anchor on its coast,
No hope of gain to lure him to its shore,
No hand to yield the kind domestic store.
'Tis thus that prudent mortals keep to sea,
And leave this isle of loneliness to me,
Perchance indeed, for changes will be found,
In many a year of time's revolving round,
Some hapless bark may hither bend its course,
Urged by the furious storm's controlling force.
But though, careering on the tempest's wing,
These wanderers come,—to me no joy they bring.

They may indeed their sympathy express,
Impart some food, or leave some change of dress.
This far their pity goes—thus far it ends;
But to their words no generous aid succeeds;
No heart relenting gives the glad command
To bear me safely to my native land:
And now creeps on the tenth long-lingering year.
Since last my base companions left me here:
And still in grief and hunger I remain,
And still my sorrow feeds my gnawing pain—
Such are the wrongs I've felt, the pains, the grief.

From Atreus' sons, and Ithaca's crafty chief—
But may the Olympian gods this fate decree,
That those may suffer as they've tortured me!

MARRIED.—In Nauvoo, on Thursday evening, the 22nd inst., by President H. Smith, Mr. David Brinton, formerly of Chester county, to Miss Elizabeth G. daughter of George Hoops, of Chester county Penn.

This notice was accompanied by a cake of exquisite and luxurious flavor. It was made in scientific form, we shall not attempt to describe it;—suffice it to say, that, elevated above the cake, by wires in a circular form, were two hearts, cemented together by the richest confectionaries; probably, as emblematical of that affection which has united their hearts in the bands of Hymen, and elevated them upon the throne of conjugal bliss. Our best wishes to the happy pair, and may the jostlings, with which they may meet, upon the ruff and rugged road of life, never disturb their union or lead to domestic infelicities.

From earliest childhood, he practiced successfully the art of healing; and in defiance of opposition, by friends and relatives, he succeeded in studying the art and science of medicine; and after untiring industry and immense research, and after having reached riper years, and traveled among numerous tribes of Indians, and visited many and various climates, Dr. James M. Martineau is fully persuaded that he has now realized his fondest expectations; that the object of all his toil, labor and hope, has been accomplished; and that he will be regarded by all future generations as the true Philanthropist; as having been the instrument, under the direction of an overruling Providence, of rendering and having rendered the greatest good to the greatest number, will be cheerfully conceded.

POETRY.

AN ACROSTIC ON THE GREAT MORMON PROPHECY.

Jehovah's voice let every nation hear!
On mighty wheels, his chariot wheels do roll!
Sing loud his praise, and let the heathen fear
Earth tremble—heaven inspire the holy soul
Proclaim his will as need to mortal giv'n Heaven's last direction in the way to heaven!

The Spirit cries come to my standard, come,
Haste ye yept grimes—fill our fertile plains
Enlarge our herds, and find with us a home,
Gain peace and joy, where heavenly pleasures reign!

Reject the creeds, that long have kept you bound,
Enter our sacred Nauvoo's holy ground.
Attend ye nations to his great command!
The time is now when men must rise or fall,
Proclaim his will—the judgment's near at hand!

Rejoice in your freedom, and obey this call—
On Zion's shore doth hope and virtue dwell,
Peace to the righteous that no tongue can tell!

Hosanna to the Lord who guards our host—Encamped with gospel armour purely bright,
Tis with the sword of truth we conquer most,
Our foes shall perish, when they dare to fight.

Pierce bigots with their creeds dare not contend,
They fall beneath the truth and find their end.
Hail fast ye saints, and keep your eyes on high—
Ere long you'll hear the mighty trumpet sound!

Woe to the men who are not then forgiven
Each cries for pardon, when it can't be found.
See cloud on cloud in austere grandeur roll!
To judgment come, to judgment every soul!

Earth's mighty mountains then shall disappear—
Rivers and seas to mingled blood shall turn, Night's fearful regions now approaching near,
Each saint rejoices while the wicked mourn!
Midst flaming worlds, thy servants call on thee, Love.

Praise on unharmed, to glorious realms above!
In Christ believe and God who dwells on high;
Repent and pray your sins may be forgiven;
Escape the death that's never doomed to die,
On wings of faith your souls shall soar to heaven!

Farwell to Earth—now joys immortal rise,
Sing loud hosanna as you mount the skies.

Almighty Power! protect our little band,
Increase our faith, our virtue and our love,
Not let our foes o'er get the upper hand,
To deliver our people from their chosen land—
Surround us with a Host from above.

THE VILLAGE BELLS.

'Tis Sabbath! Village bells are ringing Their merry peal, and sweetly bringing Thoughts of home, and youthful hours,
When life's bright path was strewn with flowers.

They ring back days that long are gone,
Ah! never—never to return!
When young hearts beat with sportive glees,
Our spirits as our thoughts were free;
When every thing was bright and gay,
And winter's day seem'd fresh as May—
When the young heart sere thought but gladness.

When, like the bee, we hover'd o'er
The fresh green fields, and sought no more
Of future hours than days gone by,
And thought could bring a tear or sigh!

Those Village Bells! How long the time
Since last I heard their merry chime!
Yes, many a year since then has flown,
And many a friend is dead and gone;
The best beloved is in her tomb,
Departed in her early bloom,
And all that once was dear is gone.
Of days that never can return!

And now again they come to me,
And still their peal I love to hear,
Altho' they speak of days departed,
When all around me joy imparted;
Altho' they make me feel alone
In this bleak world—believed by none—
A saddest tone of peace they bring,
And o'er my soul a halo fling,
A pure and holy peace they shed,
And sanctify the living dead!

DISGUSTING SPECTACLE—A GREAT EXCITEMENT IN ST. LOUIS.

For the last thirty hours our city has been in a great excitement, and a large multitude of persons have been collected about the Medical Department of the St. Louis University. The number of persons have varied from 2000 to 5000. A thousand rumors, doubtless aggravating the truth, (which by the way is bad enough) are afloat, but we purpose to detail only what we have seen ourselves or have been told by credible eye witnesses.

It appears (says the Republican) that the Professor, or whoever else had charge of the dissecting room, have been exceedingly remiss in their duty; and yesterday morning, in a small vault, of a few feet in depth, by some six feet in width, was discovered the remains of several human beings. In some way or other, the planks which covered the vault had been removed, and the fencing round it had been broken down, exposing one of the most revolting and disgusting sights we ever beheld.—The subjects, and the parts of subjects, such as arms, legs, &c., &c., bore all the appearance of recent death. By some means, a portion of one of the bodies had been dragged out of the vault, and thrown upon the open lot adjoining. This first attracted the attention of persons passing, and by ten o'clock a considerable crowd had collected.

The Mayor, and police repaired promptly to the scene, and closed up the vault, which was, however, re-opened by the crowd, and between one and two o'clock the house was assailed and the windows broken. Five persons were arrested and sent to the Calaboose and two or three Military companies were called out by the Mayor. This increased the excitement, and several persons addressed the multitude, among whom were the Mayor and Judge Mullanphy, until at last some sort of order was restored as will be seen by an abstract of the proceedings had, a copy of which was handed to us this morning, but which we do not think it necessary to publish at length.

Proceedings of a large mass meeting, held on Sunday, the 25th of February, first in the rear of the St. Louis University, and then at the Court House, for the purpose of preventing riotous proceedings, and taking proper steps to bring to punishment, by law, those persons, who are alleged to have indecently and inhumanly exposed the bodies of human beings in and about the dissecting rooms connected with the Medical College in this city.

During the course of the day, a large number of citizens were assembled around the dissecting rooms alluded to, and at about 5 o'clock in the evening, the reporter of this was informed that several persons had been confined in the calaboose, for flinging stones into the windows of the dissecting rooms. Great excitement prevailed, produced by the sight of human bodies actually exposed in a sink at the edge of a loose plank wall; more and more persons collected; a guard with bayonets were drawn up to prevent the tearing down of the building; dissections grew up between the men in arms and the citizens assembled, when it was proposed by Alexander Kayser, that, in order to avoid unlawful outbreaks and serious consequences, the assemblage withdraw to the State Tobacco Warehouse, and constitute themselves into a proper meeting, for the purpose of adopting lawful means for the investigation of the alleged nuisance, and the bringing to punishment by law, of the alleged offenders, and then dispersing in quiet and peace.

Before the assembled multitude however would consent to leave the ground, they insisted upon the discharge of the persons confined in the calaboose, and the withdrawal of the military. With these demands the mayor complied, and after appointing a committee of 12 to remain about the building, and watch the proceedings there, the principal part of the multitude retired to the Court House, where they organized themselves into a meeting by calling R. S. Blennerhasset to the chair, and passed several resolutions; thanking the multitude for their forbearance and moderation; appointing a committee to investigate the alleged nuisance and call upon the Judge of the Criminal Court to institute proceedings against the offenders; instructing the committee of 12 appointed to take charge of the building, to obtain lawful permission to enter, examine, and report to an adjourned meeting to be held this morning at 9 o'clock.

After the meeting, the company returned to the ground, and the doors having been opened, the crowd entered the building. Such a spectacle, says our informant, I never wish to behold again. Mangled portions of human bodies were hung about on hooks like meat in a butcher's stall, while several barrels and chests contained bodies preparing for Anatomical illustration. Considerable damage was done to the building—and thus things remained until this morning, when a great crowd were still on the ground but not apparently very evil disposed. A fence had been put round the cistern, but the bodies were still exposed to public view, and presented a horrid spectacle.

P. S. Great excitement still prevails in our city, on account of the reckless exposure of the disinterred bodies procured for dissection by the Medical faculty of St. Louis. At a late hour of last evening the dissecting room was entered by the mob; the windows were broken and considerable injury was done, but if the reports afloat be true, it is matter of astonishment, that a mob so much infuriated should have done so little—our citizens deserve credit for their forbearance. The committee appointed to report, concerning this unpardonable nuisance have not yet done so. That there is much cause to excite the just indignation of our citizens cannot be denied by any one who has beheld the loathsome spectacle which the pit presents, into which they cast the disinterred bodies; but as there is a mode by which these outrages can be visited with condign punishment, we hope no further detriment will be done to the offensive buildings, and any cancer who fails to discharge his duty, through motives of popularity (as we understand some have done), will meet the reward which such astardly conduct deserves.

When our paper went to press at 2 o'clock, the coroner was cleaning out the whole concern, carrying the bodies, and parts of bodies to the burying ground. [St. Louis Transcript.]

Foreign News.

Dublin, Jan. 1, 1844.

I have now some interesting information on the State trials, and Ireland as it is. On the 15th of January the trials come on; what the result will be, no one can conjecture—or whether a disturbance will be the result. From the preparations (warlike) the government are making, people here are inclined to think they have some very good information that something important will be the result—though Dan is preaching peace. The government having gone to a great expense by their preparations and fortifications, laying in of provisions, ammunition, and God knows what all. If they had not some good and unquestionable information, they never would have gone to such expense. It is a well known fact, there was an intended massacre to be of all the country Protestants; this the country people kept no secret; they say they are only waiting for the word of command. Dan is at the head and tail of this plot. The Attorney General's opening speech, I hear, will make the hairs of one's head stand on end, at the frightful discoveries he has made, through one of the repeal clan—they know there is an enemy in their camp, but who that enemy is they know not. It is however very well known that that enemy is a priest.

Such is the state of Ireland. There is nothing doing in the way of trade. Never was Dublin known to be so full as at present—every one who can leave the country parts, are daily pouring in—our streets are so crowded there is no getting along to transact one's business—and accordingly, as the 15th approaches, we may expect the country folks; lodgings and house rent have increased beyond all imagination, and parties who never before let lodgings are now doing so. Yet, for all that, there is no business doing. Shopkeepers are filling the bankrupts' list and the prisons.

An account has reached town of a discovery that has been made at Achill, in the county of Mayo, for the blowing up of all the Protestants in that island. The plot was laid, and ready for the signal. The priest of the island forced one of the conspirators had given information to the Protestants of the intended murders, which he never did tell to mortal; however, the priest denounced him without a hearing from the altar—and he then turned evidence against the lot of conspirators. Such is the news in town this day, brought into me—but until you have it from me as truth, you are not bound to believe the report. I believe there is no doubt that ere long the Catholics will try to do some mischief to the Protestants of the land. About the 15th January, we are told Dublin will be set fire to in a hundred different places at once. Is not this a pretty look out? In the county Tipperary, every day we have a foul murder, in cold blood, of a harmless Protestant. By degrees the country parts will be cleared.

P. S. There is some foundation as to the truth of the Achill discovery. The fires were laid, and ready to be lighted, to burn the town, but was detected just before the match was put to.—[N. Y. Herald.]

Late and Important from Mexico.

By the packet barque Anahuac, Capt. Wilson, which sailed from Vera Cruz on the 31st ult., we have information of a decree issued by the Mexican government, compelling all Americans to leave California. This order was issued some months since, but was concealed from our Minister at Mexico until recently, when he received information of its existence from another source. Gen. Thompson has demanded an explanation from that government, which was withheld, and the mail of the 30th brought to Vera Cruz, intelligence that Gen. Thompson had given the government a stated time, where, if not satisfactorily explained, he will demand his passports and leave the country. He was expected at Vera Cruz at all events in a few days to embark for the United States on a visit to his family.

President Tyler's message had been received at Vera Cruz, and that part relating to Texas and Mexico will no doubt create great excitement in Mexico.

The following men of war were lying off the anchorage at Sacrificios:—U. S. ship Vincennes, Capt. Buchanan; British brig Albatross, Captain York; French corvette Le Brillante, brig Griffin, and brig Mercure, under command of Commodore J. Regnaud.

The Anahuac brings the last payment made on account of the Mexican claims, amounting to $150,000.

The U. S. ship Vincennes, Capt. Buchanan, arrived at Vera Cruz on the 25th December, from a cruise in the Gulf.

ers from Yucatan, with instructions to accept the proposals made by Mexico. On the 13th they were presented to the President, who directed the Minister of War to arrange this affair as promptly as he possibly could. The papers confirm the reports previously brought that troops are organizing in different parts of the country, and concentrating at Vera Cruz.

At last accounts, Santa Anna had a force of about seven thousand men at Vera Cruz, which was daily increasing.

The Mexican fleet was making preparations to sail for the Havana.

Winsor Terrace Clifton.—Most persons who have visited Clifton will, no doubt, remember Winsor Terrace, which juts out at a great height above the Avon, close to the Hotwells. These houses (says a correspondent of the Bristol Mirror) for many years bore the name of "Watt's Folly," from the following circumstances:—A worthy, and speculative man, of the name of Watts, by trade a plumber, was blessed with a wife who had not only the ordinary amusing faculty of dreaming, but also the extraordinary one of turning her dreams to the best advantage.

On a certain night, whilst sleeping, her unconstrained thoughts wandered; and she dreamed that, by permitting melted lead to fall from a considerable height into water, the drops would become globular, and a great improvement might therefore be effected in the manufacture of shot.

Mr. Watts had faith in his wife's dreams, and was not like many persons whose exalted minds and capabilities do not permit them to listen to any suggestion of their wives—he not only listened to it, but acted upon it, and first tried the experiment from the tower of St. Mary, Redcliffe; the result proving successful, he erected a manufactory near the church, and obtained a patent, which he sold for ten thousand pounds.

It was a pity, however, that his investible partner, who had by one dream filled his coffers with gold, could not have dreamed again, or obtained some prescience, from which she might have deemed it advisable to give a caution as to the disposal of the money. Unfortunately for Mr. Watts, and his suddenly acquired wealth, he set his mind upon building, and sacrificed the whole amount in making excavations, and raising the foundations of the houses on this terrace, without adequate means to carry out their completion; and their bare walls—the skeleton of false views and visionary hopes—were left for many years as monuments of his folly. The houses are now, and have been for a considerable time, completed; they passed from the hands of their proprietor and projector, of whose subsequent history nothing further has been told.

Original Purchase of the Island of New York.—We furnish below to the readers of the Northern Light an interesting and curious letter, recording among other important events, the purchase of the Island of Manhattan, two hundred and seventeen years ago by the Dutch, from the Indians, for the sum of sixty guilders, or twenty-four dollars! The tract conveyed for this trifling sum contains 13,020 acres.

The following is a translation of the original document:—"High and mighty Lords—Yesterday arrived the ship 'the Arms of Amsterdam,' she sailed from the river Mauritius [Hudson] in the New Netherlands on 23d. Sept. They report that our folk there are prosperous and live in peace; their women have borne children there already. They have purchased from the Indians for the sum of 60 guilders the Island of Manhattan which is 11,000 morgen in size.

They have already sowed grain by the middle of May and reaped by the middle of August; samples of summer crops have come, such as wheat, rye, barley, oat, buckwheat, canary seed, beans and flax.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT.

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

VICE-PRESIDENT.

GEN. JAMES A. BENNETT,
NEW YORK.

CONFERENCE.

A special conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Nauvoo, near the Temple, commencing on Saturday, the 6th of April next.

All the elders abroad who can by any means make it convenient to attend, are requested to be present on the occasion, as there is business of importance to attend to.

As this conference is going to call a multitude of elders together, from different parts, we would remind them of one or two things, and as we always begin with the least first, we would inform them that it would be a good opportunity to forward or bring along subscriptions for the Neighbor, and Times and Seasons, and they would thereby very much assist the press, and help to spread the principles of intelligence.

Again those who are desirous of forwarding means to the Temple can do so, and help to liberate the hands of the comittees, and the Trustees in funds.

It is in contemplation to devote all our energies to the completion of the Temple this season, and to let the Nauvoo House stand until the Temple is finished. By a unity of efforts, it is expected that the roof can be put on by next fall, and the building be enclosed.

Another thing that we would remind the brethren of, is that of the Presidential election. Don't forget to mention this thing in your peregrinations. Tell the people who would be the best man, and the most able statesman; who could stand uncorrupted by bribes, and unflinching by power, rather than the power of justice, and the cause of right; tell them where they can find a man of morality, prudence and virtue; tell them where they can find a man of sterling integrity, who is governed by the principles of righteousness; a patriot and a philanthropist, who has both the disposition and moral fortitude to administer justice, and whose delight it would be to administer to the wants of the nation; to break of every yoke and to let the oppressed go free. Use all of your own influence, and get the brethren, in every part to do theirs also. Recollect, for President, GENERAL JOSEPH SMITH, for Vice President, GENERAL JAMES A. BENNETT.

PUBLIC MEETING.

A public meeting will be held at the Temple on Thursday morning, commencing at 9 o'clock; a general attendance is requested. The first Presidency and the Twelve will be present on the occasion.

The weather has been fine during the past week; the river is rising fast, and a number of boats have visited our city. Houses begin to go up, and every thing presents the appearance of the near approach of spring.

Calamitous fire in New Orleans.

The New Orleans Tropic of the 12th ult. says: We regret to be compelled to record the particulars of the most destructive conflagration with which our city has been visited during the last five or six years. Yesterday afternoon, at four o'clock, the alarm of fire was given, and it was soon ascertained that the scene of destruction was the Orleans (or Upper) Cotton Press.

The fire broke out among some loose cotton, on the second floor, directly beneath the cupola in the centre of the principal building. The flames were first seen bursting from the front windows. Our firemen were upon the ground as soon as the nature of the circumstance would admit, and manifested their usual skill and intrepidity. By great exertion the progress of the flames was stayed, with much smaller loss than was generally anticipated. About one half the front portion of the building—including one of the presses and machinery—was burnt together with a large building extending towards the centre of the yard. As near as can be ascertained this portion of the establishment contained about seven thousand and five hundred bales of cotton, all of which was destroyed.

The Orleans Cotton Press was leased from the Company by Messrs. Behn & Freeland, whose loss, in consequence of the interruption in their business, is by no means inconsiderable. The press was crowded with cotton; there being not less than 35,000 bales in store. The portion that was burnt belonged principally to Messrs. Burke, Watt & Co., Buckner, Stinton & Co., S. S. Cobb & Co., Clason & Vines and others. The entire loss can scarcely fall short of $300,000, and is principally covered by insurance, distributed among the different Insurance Companies throughout the Union. In our next paper we shall be able to give more extended details of this great public disaster.

ARRIVAL OF THE BRITISH MINISTER.

The Right Hon. Richard Packenham, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States from Her Britannic Majesty Queen Victoria, arrived at New York on the 12th inst. in the British ship of war Vestal of 26 guns, Captain Talbot, in 27 days from Portsmouth.

Mr. Packenham with his suite, after landing, occupied apartments at the Globe Hotel, where they were immediately waited upon and cordially welcomed by Mr. Barclay, British Consul at New York, Mr. Peters, British Consul at Philadelphia and a large number of the prominent citizens. The usual salutes and courtesies were in the mean time exchanged by the Vestal and the Batteries, &c.

It is understood that the minister will repair to Washington without delay, and reside at Mr. Fox, the present resident representative of the British Queen, who has solicited leave to return home, and from whom we Americans shall part with unforgotten reluctance.

We are gratified to find it announced in the English papers, that Mr. Packenham is charged with full powers to negotiate in relation to the Oregon territory, with a view to a final adjustment.

CALHOUN MOVEMENT IN NEW YORK.

The friends of Mr. Calhoun in the city of New York, have published an address, setting forth their objections to the course pursued in relation to the "democratic" national convention, which is to meet in May, in the City of Baltimore, and calling upon all those who agree with them in opinion, to proceed in the choice of delegates from each congressional district, to a national convention, which they propose shall be held in the city of Philadelphia on the 4th of July next, to nominate candidates for the Presidency and vice presidency.

A Cas Meeting was held in the city of Boston, on the 11th inst., and a series of resolutions were adopted setting forth the claims of their favorite to the presidency of the United States. Addresses were made by Mr. Leed and others.

The Boston Courier says—"It is but justice to say, that probably nine tenths of the audience,—democrats or whigs,—were there from curiosity."

A Cas Meeting was also held on the 7th instant, at New York, at which a series of resolutions were adopted approving of the course pursued by the friends of Mr. Calhoun, in calling a national convention to be held at Philadelphia on the 4th of July, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the presidency and vice presidency, delegates to which are to be chosen from each congressional district of the Union.

The convention nominated J. H. McCracken, as the delegate from the 6th congressional district of New York, to attend said convention.

The Hon. Rich Rush, in reply to invitations from gentlemen concerned in getting up the Cas meetings recently held in Boston and New York, wrote letters, which were read and which have been published, expressing himself very strongly in favor of the character and qualifications of Gen. Cas. as well as of his superior availability as a candidate for the presidency.

A LETTER FROM COL. R. M. JOHNSON.

To the Editor of the Globe.

Sir, From a great number of letters received by me, from various sections of our country, I find a difference of opinion exists as to the ground I occupy relative to the canvass for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States.

And I find as great a diversity of opinion among my friends as to the course I should adopt—some advising that, under no circumstances should I permit my name to be used for the Vice Presidency, others advising that I should not submit my name to the decision of a national convention; and the most numerous expressing a wish that I should accept the nomination for the office of vice president, provided a majority of the delegates to the national convention should think proper to select me as a candidate for the Vice Presidency, after preferring another for the office of President.

In January, 1842, I was nominated at Frankfort Kentucky, for the Presidency, by a mass meeting, composed of the democratic members of the legislature and citizens of that state, subject to a decision of a national convention. In January, 1843, I was nominated for the same office by a state democratic convention at Frankfort, Kentucky, composed of five hundred delegates, subject to a decision of a national convention. I was afterwards again nominated by a subsequent state democratic convention, composed of more than five hundred delegates, for the same office, subject to the same condition. Each of these nominations was unanimous. In January, 1843, the democratic state convention of Indiana called upon me, in common with others, to know if I were willing to abide by a decision of a national convention; and further, if I would sustain the nominations of that convention for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States?

My answer to these interrogatories was without equivocation; which was, that I should support the nominees. I have no reason to change that determination; but on the contrary, have good reasons for being confirmed in my opinion as to the necessity of adhering to my resolution, to ensure the triumph of the democratic party. I intend to redeem my pledge faithfully, without respect to persons.

Subject to the foregoing conditions, I have permitted my name to be placed before the public, and the national convention to be held at Baltimore on the fourth Monday of May next, for the office of President. I need not consume time in referring to my nomination for the office of President, by friends in other states than Kentucky. No matter how flattering these demonstrations of public confidence, (all of which is duly appreciated,) my assenting to their wishes was not predicated upon the consideration that I was nominated for the first office; my assent to their permission of the use of my name would have been equally as sincere and cordial for the office of Vice President.

I am now, as I ever have been, identified with the democratic party. I never expect to change that identity. The success of the measures of that party are too dear to me to be jeopardized by any selfish considerations on my part; and therefore, I ask nothing and expect nothing, at the hands of the convention, that will in any manner injure or hazard the success of the common cause. If the convention, in their wisdom, should consider the use of my name for the first or second office, or for neither, as advisable, my acquiescence is heartily given.

To such of my fellow citizens as are nominating me for the office of the Vice Presidency in advance of the meeting of the Baltimore convention, my thanks are due and cheerfully given. It does not become me to condemn an honest difference of opinion among my friends, or to take part in favor of the one side against the other in their friendly efforts to procure my nomination for the office of President or Vice President. And as I could do nothing consistent with my public pledges in this respect, without giving dissatisfaction to some of them, the national convention, where a majority will rule, must dispose of me, and decide the controversy between them.

In the mean time, let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind, and act accordingly; and no cause of complaint can exist with any, or against any. I wish, of course, to give no cause of offence to my friends, whether they prefer me for the first office or the second. I hope they will readily yield up their preferences to a majority in the convention, no matter how adverse to their views or wishes. I shall pursue this course, and exhort every friend I have to do likewise, in order to preserve harmony and secure the united effort of the party. I repeat, between my friends, my position is that of neutrality, until the convention shall act and dispose of me; in the mean time, I am in the hands of the people. Should it be the pleasure of the convention to nominate me for the first office, I should accept the honor with gratitude and reluctance. I should accept of the second with thanks and with pleasure; and am willing to take my position among the rank and file, if such be the pleasure of the convention, without a murmur. Wherever I may be placed, I shall try to animate my associates to do what I consider our duty to our country; and, having thus discharged it according to our consciences, we will hope for victory.

R. M. JOHNSON.

January 22, 1844.

COLONEL JOHNSON, in a late letter, places himself fully in the hands of his friends, or rather, in the hands of the party. Without withdrawing his pretensions to the first honors, if these are not awarded to him, he will willingly receive second.

The friends of Colonel at a large meeting, held on Old Berks, Pennsylvania, on the 1st inst., rejected a resolution, agreeing to abide by the decision of the Baltimore convention.

The Philadelphia American Sentinel of the 1st, contains a full account of the JOHNSON RALLY.

One of the largest, and most enthusiastic Democratic meetings ever convened in Harrisburg, was held on Tuesday evening, January 22d, 1844, in accordance with the following notice:

JOHNSON MEETING!—HONOR TO THE BRAVE!

The friends of Old Tecumseh cannot be sold!!! The friends of Col. R. M. Johnson, the hero of the Thames, are requested to meet at the court house in Harrisburg, on Tuesday evening, January 22d, at the ringing of the bell. Let the friends of the Old Hero come forth! They cannot be transferred like sheep in the market. Let the people be heard, and not the politicians. MANY.

Jan. 22, 1844.

Although scarcely 24 hours notice of the meeting had been given, yet the house presented one dense mass of hard-fisted yeomanry, eager to proclaim to the world their preference for Old Tecumseh, and for him only. Gen. Simon Cameron, of Middletown, known as one of the most consistent and influential democrats in the state and union, was unanimously called upon to preside. A long list of vice presidents and secretaries were also appointed, and a number of spirited resolutions were enthusiastically adopted, of which we have room for the following extracts only:

Whereas, a corrupt and disgraceful attempt to transfer a portion of that democracy to the interests of an individual for the presidency for whom they have not a preference, has recently been made at the seat of government of this state.

And whereas, such an attempted transfer we look upon as alike humiliating and insulting to the integrity, dignity, and good sense of the people, calculated, if silently acquiesced in, not only to bring reproach upon the purity of our cherished principles, but greatly to impair the integrity of the democratic party of the state—establishing a mercenary system of intrigue, bargain and sale, among venal, self-constituted leaders, practically illustrating the favorite doctrine of monarchists and their pimps, that the people are incapable of choosing their own rulers.

Resolved, That the friends of Col. Johnson, are the high minded and patriotic sons of freemen, who disdain any and all connection with disorganizers, traitors or renegades, and who treat with unqualified contempt any and every attempt to transfer them like foreign serfs and vassals, to the highest bidder.

Resolved, That the democracy of Pennsylvania is entitled to the privilege of naming a candidate for the presidency, and as 'her own favorite son' has declined the honor unanimously proffered him by his native state, we now solemnly reiterate our intention, and boldly proclaim our determination to stand by the gallant and distinguished son of Kentucky, Colonel R. M. JOHNSON, sink or swim.

Resolved, That we will not submit to dictation from any quarter, however high, much less to the unauthorized suggestions of self-constituted intermeddlers, who, by mercenary counsels, are insidiously aiming to distract the unanimity that now pervades the democratic party of this state.

Resolved, That the democratic party of Pennsylvania is in favor of a tariff—that one of the cardinal principles of the democratic creed has been the protection of American industry, and that opposition to that principle of national policy receive, as it merits, the unqualified condemnation of Pennsylvania democrats.

At Pittsburgh, Pa., also, the friends of the General held a meeting on the 20th ult. at which George White, esq. presided. General J. K. Moorhead addressed the meeting by request. In the course of his remarks he said 'he had observed with deep regret, an attempt on the part of some indiscreet friends of Mr. Van Buren to denounce all who did not acquiesce in the proposition to elevate that gentleman to the office of president. He entertained fears for the result if Mr. Van Buren was the candidate. Gen. Cas. had the peculiar claim of a new man.'

Presentation of Smut in Wheat.—At a large agricultural meeting in Sussex, England, John Eliman, Esq., related the following account of an experiment in preventing smut in wheat. He took four sacks of smutty wheat, sowed one sack of it with brine only, as strong as he always made it, to bear an egg; he sowed another in lime only; he sowed the third sack with brine strong enough to bear an egg, and then let it lay in lime all night; and the fourth he sowed without anything. The result was as follows:—Where brine only was used, every now and then there was a smutty ear, still not many; where the lime only was used, there was much about the same quantity of smut; where the lime and brine was used, there could not be found a single smutty ear; and where nothing was used, it was a mass of smut.

France before the Revolution.—The taxes, exclusively affecting agricultural labor, amounted to about thirty millions of dollars! So excessive was their burden, that Sir Arthur Young calculated, that, supposing the produce of an acre worth 3, 2s., 7d., the proportion which went to the king, was 1s. 18s. 4d.; to the landlord, 18s., and to the farmer, 5s. In other words, if the produce of the acre was divided into twelve parts, nearly 7 1/2 went to the king, 3 1/2 to the proprietor, and 1 1/2 to the farmer. But this, though deplorable by the laws, which fettered the most important operations of agriculture. Game, of the most destructive kind to the crops, were permitted to go at large.—Large herds of deer, and numbers of wild horses, to be hunted for the amusement of the great, ravaged the unclosed fields. The damage done to four parishes in Montecaux, amounted, from this cause, to about $40,000. Numerous edicts existed which prohibited the cultivator from hoeing and weeding, lest the young partridges should be destroyed; taking away stubble, lest the birds should be deprived of shelter; manuring with night soil, lest the flavor of the game should be injured. The people were bound to grind their corn at the landlord's mill; press their grapes at his press, and bake their bread at his oven. The use of hand-mills was not free, and the proprietors had the power of selling to the laborers the right or privilege of pounding buckwheat or barley between two stones.

THE DISMAL SWAMP CANAL.—Our readers are aware that this public work is now completed on the new plan. The importance of this public improvement to the internal communication of the country is not generally sufficiently appreciated. It connects no less than seven States—North Carolina and Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York, by inland navigation; and through the New York Canal by the lakes, Canada and the United States. In time of war it would be invaluable for transportation of troops, munitions of war, &c., and at this time a large and increasing commerce finds an outlet through its waters. [Norfolk Beacon.

School Money.—Hon. John C. Spencer has informed Gov. Ford that there is due this State, $30,576.60 an account of the three per cent fund, derived from the sales of public lands, which is appropriated for school purposes. This money will be ready for distribution about the 15th of March.

The following will be interesting to some of our Middlewich friends it is taken from the foreign news of the New York Herald:—

Tea Party of Latter Day Saints.—The sect commonly designated the Latter Day Saints held a tea party, on the 25 ult, in Middlewich, Cheshire. Though the town is small, and this body of people is generally spoken slightly of, between one and two hundred attended, and partook of tea, &c. They are, apparently, a good humored and agreeable people. The room was beautifully adorned; and the company seemed much gratified with the fare provided for the occasion. Previous to separating they sang a suitable hymn, expressive of some of their opinions:

Sir said an Irishman, stopping on board a schooner, what'll you charge to take me to Boston? 7 dollars, Pat. Och, faith, I haven't half that sum. Well, well, I'll take you on deck if you'll help the hands for three dollars.

But, captain, dear, what'll you take one hundred and sixty pounds of freight for? I'll charge you fifty cents for that. Good, faith, I just weigh that. I'll go as freight; the captain was tickled at the proposition, and ordered the Irishman to be stowed away below.

"Change of heart."—A man, named Joseph Hutchinson, was committed to prison in Boston, a few days since, charged with obtaining six bibles under false pretences. He went to the venerable Dr. Jencks, and represented to him that he had met with a change of heart, and would like to possess a bible to which he could occasionally turn for comfort and consolation. The good doctor readily gave him an order for one, and afterwards for five others, for his friends and relatives, who had met with a similar change of heart. The fellow carried them off and sold them, and if they fell in good hands he certainly was instrumental in circulating the Bible.

Here you bogtrotter, said a dandy to an Irish laborer, come tell me the biggest lie you ever told in your life, and I'll treat you to some whiskey punch.

An by my soul, yer honor's a gentleman retorted Pat.

Secrets.—Never reveal a secret even to your most intimate friend. It is a sacred deposit, and he that betrays his trust is guilty of the worst kind of desertion. The reply of Charles the Second, when importuned by a nobleman to communicate something of a private nature, deserves to be engraved on the heart of every one. 'Can you keep a secret?' asked that subtle monarch. 'Most faithfully,' returned the nobleman. 'So can I,' was the laconic and severe answer of Charles.

Mammoth Ice House.—In the Boston Atlas, we have an interesting description of the Ice Houses in that vicinity, on Fresh Pond. The main building has triple walls, is 40 feet high, 198 feet wide, and 189 feet long, and capable of containing 39,000 tons of ice. The walls are not connected, and between are air spaces. The blocks of ice stowed away, are all cut of an equal size, and to suit the dimensions of the reversion and thus no space is lost. There are five roofs to the building. There is also a tool house 178 by 16 feet, where all the tools are stowed—also a building 98 by 174 feet, through which the ice passes to the cars.—The Company have cars built for their own purpose, and are erecting a further house for them.

The ice trade is one of the most profitable and extensive, of which Massachusetts boasts, of their own originating.

Polly Bodine.—The examination into the connection of this woman with the murder of Mrs. Housenman, was closed on Staten Island, on the 23d inst. She was fully committed to stand a trial in August next.

The way to be Young.—The Grecian ladies are said to 'count their ages from their marriage, and not from their birth.' It has been remarked that if they are not lucky enough to get married, they never count their age at all.

Very Good.—A sprig from the Emerald Isle once being at a class meeting in the state of New York was interrogated by the class as to thus, 'In what state do you find your soul this evening brother?' 'In the State of New York to be sure,' replied the honest Irishman. 'No says the preacher, I mean to inquire as to your feelings.' 'Ho, thin, by the blessing of God, I feel as sound as a trout on parade.' Thus the good man went on to explain to Michael, but he could not understand, until at last the reverend gentleman told him that he apprehended that if he remained in that state long, he would go to hell. 'Oh thin, says Mick, I'm off for the Jarsies,' and, taking his bit, he left.

A Novel Launch.—A great freshet occurred in Cape Town, at Fayetteville, N.C., on the 23d January, causing a rise of near forty feet. It is said, A new steamboat, about one hundred and thirty feet long, was just ready to be launched, and the proprietor had invited his friends to be present at the ceremony, on Thursday morning, at 10 o'clock. The rapid rise of water, however, anticipated him. At 3 o'clock, that morning the boat floated off in handsome style without injury accident or expense.

Extraordinary Cold and Suffering in Canada.—The Albany Argus of the 7th instant says: We understand that the late cold weather was intensely felt in Montreal and Quebec. It far, exceeded the rigors of their severest winters. The cold lasted from 9 to 10 days, and during that time the range of the thermometer was from 16 to 32 degrees below Zero!!—here 16 degrees has been the point of intense cold, and there it was the warmest weather they had. This will give some idea of the awful severity of the weather.

The Canadians are used to very cold winters, but the steady and long continued severity of the cold weather make them more sensible of the rigors of their climate.—The distress among the poor at Montreal and Quebec was frightful.

It was so intensely cold that the farmers in the vicinity would not venture out to bring wood to market. This, as was to be anticipated, where they had been in the habit of receiving daily supplies, not only raised the price, but also caused an absolute scarcity. In the extremity of their sufferings, the Minor, the French paper at Montreal, and which is particularly conversant with the condition of French Canadians, says the tables, chairs, and even their bedstead were cut up for firewood.

Mrs. Gilmore.—This unfortunate woman, who is to stand her trial before the High Court of Judiciary for the alleged poisoning of her husband, passed through here yesterday, on her way from Paisley to Edinburgh per railway. She was plainly but neatly attired, and accompanied by the matron of the Paisley prison and two officers. The party attracted little or no attention at the railroad station, and indeed would not, have been recognized, but for the presence of one or two gentlemen who guessed the object of their melancholy journey. Mrs. Gilmore paid her own railway ticket, seemed quite calm and collected, and walked through the station house as if unaccompanied by any other person. She had a about her none of that dejection or terror which usually attends great criminals, and is, upon the whole, rather a good looking woman. [Glasgow Chron.

A Speaking Machine.—A late number of the N. Y. American has the following account of a Speaking Machine:

'It is even so—we have seen it—we have heard—a machine talk! We heard it say, "Mr. Speaker," in a tone so distinct and startling, that no speaker could have failed to be attracted by it; and then it went on, now in German, now in English, then in Latin—and to its longues there need be no end—to utter whatever was desired.

We assure our readers that this thing of wood and paint, encothous and keys, did distinctly articulate as though having trachea, larynx, glottis, and epiglottis, tongue, palate, and gums—each acting as in the living human subject. The tone alone was not natural, but the syllables and words entirely so; and there beside it sat its ingenious and patient German inventor, Mr. Faber, playing as on a piano on the sixteen keys—no more—which cause the utterance of all language.

For fourteen years this unwearied mechanic has labored at his invention.—The letter x was that of which he found it most difficult to give the sound. He devoted to the accomplishment of that one sound seven years! and he has accomplished it. By long continued anatomical investigation, he first mastered all the physical minutiae of the organs of speech, and then, mainly out of India rubber—prepared as to resist the temperature—he imitated all these organs, and by springs moves the parts as they are moved in life.

Happier than the Titan, he has provoked the anger of the gods, by ending this material creation of his hands with the ethereal spark; but so far as talking is characteristic of man, he has made a man.

You know not the power of temptation. Associate with a vicious person but one day, and you receive a serious injury; then what must follow if you are on the strictest terms of intimacy with such a character? By little and little you will be assimilated to his bad practices, till at length you become his equal in wickedness.

Truly Said.—A very sensible writer made the following remark:

'Women who are the least bashful are not unfrequently the most modest, and we are never more deceived than when we would infer any laxity of principle from that freedom of demeanor which often arises from a total ignorance of vice. Prudence, on the contrary is often assumed rather to keep off suspicion of community, than criminality itself, and is resorted to, to defend the fair warrior, not from the whispers of our sex; but from her own. It is a cumbersome panoply, and like heavy armor is seldom worn, except by those who attire themselves for the combat, or who have received a wound.'

A Discovery.—Dr. W. Herschell has discovered that the mixing of nitrate of silver with hyposulphate of soda both remarkably bitter substances, produces the sweetest substance known.

Execution Anecdote.—The following story is told of an incorrigible wag who had stationed himself for a special purpose, amidst a group of females, who seemed to witness the execution of Horn at Baltimore. Drawing near to an old man with whom he had a slight acquaintance, he fixed his eye upon the gallows and with a semi-abstracted manner and due solemnity of feature, remarked:—'Well, it seems to me a hard case that a man should be brought up for hanging for killing only two women.' Of course every woman's eye, within earshot of the remark, was directed towards B—, who, without moving a muscle or withdrawing his gaze from the object before him, after a pause, resumed his soliloquy, 'Now if Horn had killed two or three hundred wives, I should think he ought, may be, to go to the penitentiary—but—here two or three women smiled away, some turned partly round towards the speaker, while one, whose blood was rapidly mounting, braced herself at about six feet distance square upon him; 'but,' he continued, this hanging a man for killing only two women ought to be looked into by the legisfuture—don't you think so, stranger?" addressing the old man. But before the old man could reply, the female last referred to, and whose face had paled and flushed and paled again, with the effort to suppress her wrath, enforced B's attention with the exclamation,

"Look here, Mister," lifting her hand and shaking a finger at him with threatening energy, "you'd better get out of this crowd!" Stiffening his hands full in his pocket and looking the woman full in the face, with imperious mock gravity, he coolly remarked, "well, I think I had," and turned away ready to burst.

TEXIAN PRISONERS IN MEXICO.

The following remarks from the New Orleans Picayune are worthy of attention, and cannot fail to call forth the sympathy of the civilized world in behalf of the miserable and unfortunate men now in chains and dungeons in Mexico.

Common humanity demands that the condition of the unfortunate prisoners now confined in Mexico should be brought to public notice. Their situation is represented to us upon authority quite undoubted, as deplorable in the extreme. Heavily ironed and almost without clothing they live in absolute squalor and wretchedness at the Castle of Perote. They are miserably fed, and the money sent for their relief by the benevolence of the capital is intercepted by public officials and applied to other purposes. We are assured that upon being aroused in the morning three of the inmates of their miserable prison-house have been found dead, and that the death of a single one under such circumstances scarcely surprises them. They all look forward to it as the only termination of their sufferings.

There are seventeen in the hospital of Santiago, within a few miles of the city of Mexico. These confessed invalids are treated with scarcely more humanity than those in more rigid confinement at Perote. Some of them have no other covering than a filthy blanket, being utterly destitute of clothing. They are dependent upon the charities of foreigners in the capital, but chance relief of this sort is utterly inadequate to their crying need. The British Minister is said to have used exertions often to procure an amelioration of the condition of the prisoners, if not their absolute release, but all in vain. The veriest felons of the country receive less of indignity in their confinement, and suffer far less from pain and want.

This is a matter which appeals to the humanity of the whole civilized world, but most especially to every Anglo-Saxon and to the Government of the United States. Grant even all that the Mexican traitor can allege against the unfortunate prisoners, they have already expiated their crime sufficiently. It is no unmanly or degrading sin for which they are suffering. However bitter may be the prejudices of any against them or the cause of Texas, no one can charge these poor prisoners with anything vile or infamous. And yet the most vile and most infamous receive better treatment even in Mexico than do these men. We know nothing to justify such deliberate inhumanity. We cannot conceive a motive arising from policy in favor of such a course. It intimidates no one; it can only exasperate a Texan. We are astonished that there should be any apathy on such a subject. If the inmates of the Castle of Perote have no relatives, no friends in their adopted country, or in the land of their birth, they are yet men, and brave men, as they have amply shown; and immediate measures should be adopted to extend to them relief.

Wisdom of the Yankee.—The following are the proverbs of the Yankee, which his mother taught him:

By making knife-blades of lead you will run no risk of cutting your fingers. A marry a run-away wife if possible, for you will be sure of her—as any woman would be ashamed to run away twice.

When anybody charges you with a dishonest action of which you are guilty, start at them with astonishment, and let them perceive that you are not scared. Many a knave gets comfortably through the world in that way.

If your wife knows twice as much as you do, give her to understand that you can eat the most.

"See here, dad—aint Bill Jones a court in our salt?"

"No—what makes you think so, sonny?"

"Why, every time he comes where she is, she sorter leans to him, like a pig to a warm chimney jam!"

"Pa," said a little fellow the other day, "was not Job an editor?" Why Sammy? "Because, the Bible informs us that he had much trouble and was a man of sorrow all the days of his life."

Laborer.—It has been computed by some political arithmetician, that if every man and woman would work for four hours each day on something useful, that labour would produce sufficient to procure all the necessities and comforts of life; want and misery would be banished out of the world, and the rest of the twenty-four hours might be leisure and pleasure. [Franklin.]

SALTING INSTRUMENT.—A very simple instrument has been invented in England, for salting meat, by the use of which, the entire curing process can be effected in less than ten minutes, the brine being previously prepared. It is somewhat similar in appearance to a syringe, and acts upon a similar principle; the brine being forced to penetrate through every fibre of the meat subjected to the action of the instrument. A much smaller quantity of pickle is thus required than by the ordinary process, and the result is much more complete. The nutritious properties of the meat are also said to be preserved more fully by this than by any other process known.

Robbery of the Great Western Mail.—We learn from Pomeroy & Co's Express, that the Great Western Mail from Buffalo to Cleveland, which was put on the stage at Fredonia, Chautauque county, was taken from the boat of the stage either at North East or Westfield, on Saturday week. No trace of it had been found on Wednesday.

It is rumored that an unsuccessful attempt was made to rob the rear boat of the stage on Monday night, between Salamanca and Fredonia. The effort to loosen the baggage was perceived by the passengers, who gave the alarm, and the robbers got off.

The entire contents of the Mail are gone. What it contained is of course not yet known. [Albany Argus.]

Ohio, Insane Asylum.—This benevolent and laudable public institution appears to be well conducted, and to reflect great honor upon the state. The Cincinnati Gazette has an abstract of a report of the superintendent, Dr. Wm. M. Ayl, for the year ending Nov. 1843, from which we learn the following interesting particulars:

The number admitted during the past year was 55, and the number of inmates 207, the number discharged 69. During the five years existence of the institution, 373 insane persons have been committed to its care, and 203 have been restored to their right reason and returned to their friends. How gratifying the fact! Yet 315 persons in this state have had to be denied for want of room.

The liberal appropriation by the legislature last year of $35,000, will provide for more extended accommodations, and enough for many years to come. Additions to the building are erecting and will be finished during the ensuing year, and those additions will improve the general appearance of the institution; there is to be supplied spacious Italian verandahs, constructed with square limestone piers connected with ingeniously finished cast iron and moveable casings. Each verandah will be 37 square feet in the clear, and thus contrived, with answer summer and winter, as places of recreation.

The following shows the supposed cause of the diseases of the inmates:

Intemperance	35	Periodical	28

The unfortunate patients appear to be treated as members of a family, under the mildest government, and the influence of it is the happiest. The cure often is as sudden as thought.

Marriage Extraordinary.—A marriage extraordinary took place in the Northern Liberties, on the 20th January, ult., before Alderman J. Conrad, for there was but one couple to be married and only four persons present, all of one family, yet strange to relate, at the nuptial ceremony, they duly and truly represented thirty-six persons as follows: 1 widow, 1 widower, 1 wife, 1 husband, 1 bride, 1 bridegroom, 1 bridesmaid, 1 son, 1 step-son, 1 daughter-in-law, 1 sister-in-law, 1 father-in-law, 1 mother-in-law, 1 grandchild, 1 grandmother, 1 stepmother, 1 stepfather, 2 sisters, 2 uncles, 2 brothers-in-law, 2 two sisters-in-law, 2 fathers, 2 mothers, two husbands and their two wives, the only four persons present.

Santa Fe.—In relation to a recent meeting of the troops in that place, a letter published in the Boonville Observer, states that:—

On November 6th the dragoons at Santa Fe were ordered to march to Chihuahua, which they refused to do until their wages should be paid. The amount of their wages had been placed in the hands of the officers, to be paid over to the soldiers; but the officers had refused to pay it over.

The soldiers threatened that unless their wages should be paid, they would break open every store in the place; the cannon were then brought out, and an attempt made to force them into measures, whereupon a fight ensued, in which several persons lost their lives. The soldiers became incensed at the traders, and swore vengeance against them. The traders became alarmed and armed themselves for defence in case of an attack.

The matter was settled, however, without any further violence, and the soldiers went off singing and shouting, but for a while were entertained that they would again return and commit some depredations.

The Cherokee.—We learn from the Van Buren, Ark. Intelligencer, that the Legislative Council of the Cherokee, adjourned on the 10th of January, after a session of one hundred days, the longest term known in the annals of the Cherokee or any other Indian tribe.

They passed their appropriation bills and then indicated to the President their willingness to adjourn, when, in accordance with former usage, he delegated Hon. G. Lowry, second chief, to address them. His speech was short—a characteristic of the Indian Orator—and well received. He expressed the warm thanks of the Executive for their unremitting exertions for the welfare of the people.

They had found the nation in trouble from internal discord, but their wise measures had restored tranquility, and peace and quiet again pervaded the land.

The actual expense of the government of the nation for 1843, and '44, up to the adjournment, was ninety-six thousand dollars, and a public debt of forty-five thousand dollars. To liquidate this debt, the principal chief had appropriated the sum of one hundred and twenty-five thousand, derived from the savings of wagon hire and property sold under an arrangement with Gen. Scott.

In these medicines, the afflicted will find a treasure which is infinitely of greater value to the sick and debilitated, than either silver or gold. Truly may it be said that, in their curative virtues may be found the Good Samaritan! the true Philanthropist! the balm of Gilead! the Poor Man's Wealth! the Sick Man's Comfort! and by the proper and timely use of which, every man may become his own Physician!

From earliest childhood, he practiced successfully the art of healing; and in defiance of opposition, by friends and relatives, he succeeded in studying the art and science of medicine; and after untiring industry and immense research, and after having reached riper years, and traveled among numerous tribes of Indians, and visited many and various climates, Dr. James M. Martien is fully persuaded that he has now realized his fondest expectations; that the object of all his toil, labor and hope, has been accomplished; and that he will be regarded by all future generations as the true Philanthropist; as having been the instrument, under the direction of an overruling Providence, of rendering and having rendered the greatest good to the greatest number, will be cheerfully conceded.

POETRY.

We are afraid that the following is too true;
and that many poor women, both in London and Philadelphia, may sing the following dir-ful wail.—Ed.

Would that the tone of the following song could reach the rich.—London Punch

THE SONG OF THE SHIRT.

With fingers weary and worn,
With eyelids heavy and red,
A woman sat, in unwhomly rage,
Plying her needle and thread—
Sew!—stitch!—stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
And still, with a voice of doleful pitch,
She sang the 'Song of the Shirt!'

'Work!—work!—work!
While the cock is crowing a' o'f!
And work—work—work—
Till the stars shine through the roof!
It's O! to be a slave
Along with the barbarous Turk,
Where woman has never a soul to save,
If this be christian work!

'Work!—work!—work!
Till the brain begins to swim;
Work—work—work—
Till the eyes are heavy and dim!
Scam, and gusset, and band,
Band, and gusset, and seam,
Till over the buttons I fall all up,
And sew them on in a dream!

'O! Men, with Sisters dear!
O! Men, with Mothers and Wives!
It is not linen you're wearing out,
But human creatures' lives!
Sew!—stitch!—stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
Sewing at once, with a double thread,
A shroud as well as a Shirt!

'But why do I talk of death—
'That I should of grisly bone,
I hardly fear his terrible shape,
It seems so like my own—
It seems so like my own—
Because of the fasts I keep,
O God! that bread should be so dear,
And dust and blood so cheap!

'Work!—work!—work!
My labor never flags,
And what are its wages? A bed of straw
A crust of bread—and rags,
A shirt of rags—and this naked floor—
A table—a broken chair—
And a wall so black, my shadow I think,
For sometimes falling there!

'Work!—work!—work!
From weary chime to chime;
Work—work—work—
As prisoners work for crime!
Band, and gusset, and seam,
Scam, and gusset, and band,
Till the heart is a-sea, and the brain benumb'd,
As well as the weary hand.

'Work!—work!—work!
In the dull December night,
And work—work—work—
When the weather is warm and bright—
While underneath the eaves,
The brooding swallows cling,
As if to show me their sunny backs,
And twit me with the spring!

'Oh! but to breathe the breath
Of the cowslip and primrose sweet—
With the sky above my head,
And the grass beneath my feet,
For only one short hour
To feel as I used to feel,
Before I knew the woes of want,
And the walk that costs a meal!

'Oh! but one short hour!
A respite however brief!
No blessed leisure for Love or Hope;
But only time for grief!
A little weeping would ease my heart,
But in their briny bed
My tears must stop—for every drop Hinders needle and thread!

With fingers weary and worn,
With eyelids heavy and red,
A woman sat, in unwhomly rage,
Plying her needle and thread—
Sew!—stitch!—stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt,
And still with a voice of doleful pitch—
Would that the tone could reach the rich!
She sang this 'Song of the Shirt!'

THE DEVOTED WIFE.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.
She was a beautiful girl. When I first saw her, she was standing by the side of her lover at the marriage altar. She was slightly pale—yet ever and anon, as the ceremony proceeded, a faint tinge of crimson crossed her cheek, like the resfection of a sunset cloud upon the clear waters of a lake. Her lover, as he clasped her hand within his own, gazed on her for a moment with unmingled admiration, and the warm eloquent blood shadowed at intervals his manly forehead, and melted into beauty on his lips.
And they gave themselves to one another in the presence of heaven, and every heart blessed them as they went on their way rejoicing in their love.
Years passed on, and I saw those lovers. They were seated together where the light of summer's sunset stole through the half closed crimson curtain, lending a richer tint to the carpeting, and the exquisite embellishments of the rich and glorious apartment.
Time had slightly changed them in outward appearance. The girlish buoyancy of the one had indeed given place to the place of perfect womanhood, and her lip was somewhat paler, and a faint line of care was perceptible on her brow.

Her husband's brow, too, was marked somewhat more deeply than his age might warrant; anxiety, ambition and pride had grown over, and left their trace upon it; a silver hue was mingled with the dark of his hair, almost to baldness. He was reclining on a splendid ottoman, with his face half hidden by his hand, as if he feared that the thoughts which oppressed him were visible upon his features.

'Edward, you are ill, to-night,' said his wife, in a low, sweet, half inquiring voice, as she laid her hands upon his own.

Indifference from those we love is terrible to the sensitive bosom. It is as if the sun of heaven refused its wonted cheerfulness, and gazed upon us with a cold, dim and forbidding glance. It is dreadful to feel that the only being of our love refuses to ask our sympathy—that he broods over the feelings which he corns or fears to reveal—dreadful to witness the convulsive features and gloomy brow—the indefinable shadows of hidden motion—the involuntary sigh of sorrows, in which we are forbidden to participate, whose character we cannot know.

The wife essayed once more. 'Edward,'
said she, slowly, mildly and affectionately,
'the time has been when you were willing to confide your secret joys and sorrows to one, who has never, I trust, betrayed your confidence. Why, then, my dear Edward, is this cruel reserve? You are troubled and refuse to tell me the cause.'

Something of returning tenderness softened for an instant the cold severity of the husband's features; but it passed away, and a bitter smile was his only reply.

Time passed on, and the twain were separated from each other. The husband sat gloomy and alone in the damp cell of a dungeon. He had mingled with the men whom his heart loathed; he had sought the fierce and wronged spirits of his land, and had breathed into them the madness of revenge. He had drawn his sword against his country; he had fanned rebellion to a flame, and it had been quenched in human blood. He had fallen, and was doomed to die the death of a traitor.

The door of the dungeon opened, and a light form entered and threw herself into his arms. The softened light of sunset fell upon the pale brow and wasted cheek of his once beautiful wife.

'Edward—my dear Edward,' said she,
'I have come to save you. I have reached you after a thousand difficulties, and I thank God my purpose is nearly executed.'

Misfortune had softened the proud heart of manhood; and as the husband pressed his pale wife to his bosom, a tear trembled on his eyelash. 'I have not merited this kindness,' he murmured in the choked tones of agony.

'Edward,' said his wife, in an earnest, but faint and low voice, which indicated extreme and fearful debility, 'we have not a moment to lose. By an exchange of garments you will be able to pass out unnoticed. Haste, or we may be too late. Fear nothing for me. I am a woman, and they will not injure me for any efforts in behalf of a husband dearer than life itself.'

'But, Margaret,' said the husband, 'you look sadly ill. You cannot breathe the air of this dreadful cell.'

'Oh! speak not of me, dearest Edward,' said the devoted woman; 'I can endure any thing for your sake. Haste, Edward, haste and all will be well; and she added, with trembling hands, to disguise the proud form of her husband, in the female garb.

'Farewell, my love, my preserver,' whispered the husband in the ear of the disguised lady, as the officer reminded the supposed lady the time allotted to her visit had expired. 'Farewell! we shall meet again,' responded his wife—and the husband passed out unsuspected, and escaped the enemies of his life.

They did meet again—the wife and the husband; but only as the dead may meet in the awful communion of another world. Affection had borne up her exhausted spirit until the last purpose of her exertions was accomplished in the safety of her husband; and when the bell told on the morrow, and the prisoner's cell was opened, the guards found, wrapped in the habiliments of their destined victim, the pale but beautiful corpse of a devoted wife.

OREGON.

We perceive that the house of Representatives has finally got at this subject; and we extract the report of the debate upon it on the 23d ult., from the New York Herald:

Mr. Thompson, of Ky. whig, said he should regret to see any premature action on the subject. It is a very important matter, and a minister from Great Britain is shortly expected here; what will be the use of our negotiating or trying to negotiate with him when he arrives, if you tell him that you are going to take possession of it whether Great Britain likes it or not. I coincide with the gentleman in all he says as to our clear right and title to the territory; and give these pioneers that are now settling there but ten years more, and they will have possession of the country; they are bound to have the country; and they will not ask you to legislate for them unless it be to take them into the Union.

Why, sir, there are already over 20, 000 of our citizens there, between California and the north of Oregon. But give Great Britain notice to terminate that treaty, and you stand pledged before the world to take possession of it at the close of a year. Is there any necessity for this? And can you keep it? Why to move an army across the Rocky Mountains to protect your 20,000 citizens would cost more than your whole annual expenditures for five years. From the time you leave the timber on the Mississippi till you strike the sea, you have to travel 18,000 miles; and you must keep a force equal to any that Great Britain can bring against you.

We all remember at the time of the Ashburton Treaty, her splendid line of mail steamers to the West Indies; after that treaty, we heard nothing more of them, why, because they were war steamers in disguise; and she would in six weeks send a very large disposable force from China and the West Indies to the Oregon coast. Why should we provoke unnecessarily the anger of this most powerful nation? I am a peace-loving, law-loving, law-abiding man, and not for heedlessly running ourselves into a difficulty that we may be have to be sorry for after.

Mr. Wentworth, then rose and said, sir, I have been busy at my desk on the business of my constituents; I have heard the gentleman from Indiana, with great pleasure, and when my friend from Kentucky arose, I supposed he, too, would take the side of justice and humanity.

But I was never more surprised in my life than I have been, at the tenor of his remarks, so entirely repugnant are they to the feelings of the whole western people, and to the honor and dignity of our nation! He acknowledged that Oregon was ours by right; that we had a clear and indisputable title, then why not defend our rights! As the patriots of '76 did, unfurnished as our nation then was unprepared as they then were for war, poor as they were, both as States and individuals! Shall it be said that 'ere the last revolution has gone down to the grave this nation will condescend to parley, to hesitate, when a trait of coutry embracing one fourth more than the thirteen original States is at stake. Because we fear Great Britain! because Lord Pakenham is coming! because, as the gentleman says was the case when the treaty was made, Great Britain stood prepared with a terrific fleet of West India mails, with an ostensible fleet of mail steamers in the shape of cannon, canister and grape, to terrify the American Government! I always wondered at the late treaty! and so have my western friends generally wondered at it. 'The gentleman from Kentucky has just let the cat out of the bag.' That Great Britain stood ready to batter down our cities if the disgraceful treaty was not approved.

My blood boils with indignation at the utterance of such sentiments, knowing, as I do, that these remarks of an American Congressman will give a hint to Great Britain, how she can get another treaty signed. The gentleman says Lord Pakenham is coming, and asks for a delay on that account. He cautions us not to be precipitate. He would have us beware how we provoke the anger of that great man who may come, as he says, Ashbur-ton did, with West India mails, loaded with his grape and canister to terrify us into a base surrender of American citizens—into a sale of a valuable part of our country. Sir, I hope, if he does come in this shape, there will be no gentleman as in former times to burn blue lights for his benefit. I say let Lord Pakenham come! And let him come to take Oregon, and the mouth of the Columbia river, if he dare! Sir, we have had one Pakenham on a visit to our shores, with a view to take the mouth of another celebrated river; and does the gentleman remember the warm reception he met with, and the result of his negotiations?

He found more canister and grape before he brought in his mails; and before he could open his despatches, he was despatched to another world, and his followers despatched about their business.
And the sympathies in reference to that war were shown by sundry gentlemen the other day, in their votes on the bill to refund General Jackson's fine.

Now, sir, if this gentleman has come to take possession of the Columbia river,
I predict that another Jackson will rise up to defend that against the ravages of an infamous crew, with 'beauty and booty' for their motto; and also to imprison Halls and Loualliers, and such other traitors as may appear. Sir, I will not stop to count the cost, as the gentleman has, when our rights are invaded—when our citizens are hourly exposed to the brutal massacres of the Indians—and are repeatedly arrested, and punished, most summarily by a mob court, instituted at the will of the Hudson Bay Company, who are interested in driving every American citizen from the country—who make laws to suit every case, and, Jedburgh fashion, hang first and try afterwards. The gentleman says, wait ten years! I wonder that this modern temporizing policy never suggested itself to our sanguinary forefathers. Sir, 'twas a rash act throwing that tea overboard in Charlestown Harbor.

The battle of Bunker Hill, was contrary to the law of the constitution. Our revolutionary sires should have waited about ten years; then they'd have taken the country without fighting for it.—And there was a man in these days who cried that we were weak; but whether he wanted to wait ten years or not, I cannot say;
but in reply, said Patrick Henry, 'We are weak, but when shall we be stronger!' Apply this to Oregon.

Every day's delay only makes that deficult only makes that territory the more difficult to take possession of.—And the very remarks of the gentleman will but kindle a new fire in British breasts, and make that government still more haughty and imperative in its requisitions. I wonder his advice was not thought of in the last war, when England was nabbing our gallant seamen. There were those, then, that not only cried, 'wait.' 'Don't make war with the mighty kingdom of England; but they even went further and denied and refused to vote appropriations for that war. And further yet, and fed, for pay, clandestinely, the British army! I hope, if gentlemen will not aid us in taking Oregon, they at least will not turn traitors to their country and help Great Britain to take us. Wait ten years!

Out upon the proposition! Humanity revolts at it! When we know our rights, as the gentleman acknowledges, it is none too soon for us to defend. Sir, the proposition has been introduced here expressly because Lord Pakenham is coming.

This is the very time to speak, ere the country is negotiated away, and the Senate have confirmed it. What can the people say to advantage on the late treaty, disapproved as it is by nine tenths of them. And what can they say after Oregon is traced off by the advice and consent of U. S. Senate. This is the very time to speak out, and speak we will.

We shall introduce proposition after proposition, as we have continued to do, to keep up debate on this subject to arouse members on this floor, and to impart a common fire into the breasts of the whole American People. Sir, let them know that another Pakenham is coming here to get by negotiation a part of our country, since his name-ake of old failed in getting another portion by force of arms.

The West have come here united, as one man, (except, perhaps, the honorable member for Kentucky,) in favor of the immediate occupation of Oregon by this government, and if England hopes to get any portion of it, these hopes are vain and delusive. I go further, sir, and say that I believe England has got her last inch of the American Continent. Hereafter she is to lose territory on this continent, and not to gain any. Texas she never shall have, nor California. And whenever Canada again strikes for freedom, no vote of mine shall ever send another peace establishment to aid Great Britain in putting down the struggling sons of freedom. In my opinion, God never made this country for a colony of Great Britain or any other foreign power.

He made this for the 'Land of the Free,' and I hope our action on this question may prove the 'Home of the Brave.' With this view, sir, we can rightfully take possession of any portion of America as against Great Britain.

When old Ethan Allen took possession of a British fort, and his authority was demanded, he replied, 'By the authority of Almighty God and the Continental Congress!' I say it sir, with religious zeal, that the Almighty God bids us onward to take Oregon, and all I ask, all we want further is the sanction of the present, though it is not the Continental Congress. Sir in behalf of the west, I close by bidding Lord Pakenham and Great Britain defiance; that nation and that name have been weighed in the balance by us and found wanting.

PAINFUL DISCLOSURES.—A man named Judd has been for some time officiating as a minister of God over the congregation whose place of meeting is at the corner of Tillery and Barbours streets. The basement of the building is composed of several departments used for purposes connected with the church. One of these departments has written over the door the 'Rev. Judd's study.' It was the practice of this man to pass much of his time in his study, and he frequently endowed his meals brought there. The little girls connected with the Sunday school on certain days in the week were in the habit of visiting their pastor in his study for the ostensible purpose of reciting lessons in catechism. We cannot stain our paper by publishing the details of the revolting conduct of this impious villain towards the children he thus entrapped into his infamous den. Suffice it to say many parents are almost heart broken at the horrors inflicted on their children, and many little children, of too tender an-age to fully comprehend the enormities practiced upon them, are trembling with fear at the distress which so bitterly saddons their parents.

Judd has left Brooklyn, and, we are informed, has gone to New Brunswick.
[Brooklyn Advertiser.]

The new constitution of Hayti declares that Africans and Indians, or the descendants of either, by one or the other parent, may become citizens; but no white person can become a citizen or hold real estate.

The most powerful sovereign in the world is said to be only four feet and eight inches high. 'Little Vic,' of course.
Prince Albert is five feet ten.

A NOVELTY.—A gun some what like a musket, but discharging upon an entire new principle—without a lock—is now exhibiting at Brooklyn, L. I.

Important Remedy for Cancers.—Colonel Usany of the parish of De Soto, informs the editor of the Cado Gazette, that he has fully tested a remedy for this troublesome disease, recommended to him by a Spanish woman, a native of the country. The remedy is this:—Take an egg and break it, then pour out the white, retaining the yolk in the shell, put in salt and mix with the yolk as long as it will receive it; stir them together until the salve is formed, put a portion of this on a sticking plaster, and apply it to the cancer about twice a day. He has made the experiment in two instances in his own family with complete success.

Speech and Silence.—Not every one who has eloquence of speech understands the eloquence of silence. He who can express a great meaning by silence, when much might be said pointedly, and when a common man would have been prolix, will speak, in the moment of decision, like an oracle. We can do all by speech and silence. He who understands the double art of speaking opportunely, at the moment, and saying not a syllable more or less than it demanded,—and he who can wrap himself up in silence, when every word would be in vain,—will understand how to connect energy with patience.—[Litteler.]

Agricultural.

FARMING IN WINTER.

What shall a farmer, as a farmer, do in the winter? He has much to do in winter peculiar to his profession—in his house, in his barn, in the woods and in the field. There is no need of his being idle. He has a great deal to do for the promotion of his interests. In the first place, if the rigors of the season drive him in doors, let him think himself a lucky man. For it is to the family that his first and most important duties are.
Has he a wife and children? Let him make the first his companion, friend and equal, and let him devote his thoughts and labor for the instruction and improvement of his children. See that they are well and tightly clad. See that they go to school, and are furnished with suitable books. See that their winter evenings are employed in useful reading and study; with innocent amusements intermixed, rather than in visiting the haunts of dissipation and ruin. Let the winter be devoted to the duties of the fireside and the calls of social intercourse.

Having everything in order in the house both as it respects the physical, moral and intellectual wants of his family, let his next attention be devoted to the domestic animals of the barn and fold. See that they are well fed. Keep the stalls clean. Blanket the horse, and if you do the same to the cows so much the better. Make sure of as warm a place for them all as possible. Give them straw beds to sleep upon. Comfortable animals will thrive best, and give back the best return.

In the day time when your children are at school out and haul home wood enough to keep a year's stock of seasoned fuel before hand. This is economy. In short every farmer has enough to do in winter, and that well done is often the most important and profitable labor of the whole year. Keep stirring and do good.

WATER FOR CATTLE.

Every farmer should provide a good supply of pure water for his stock, where they can have convenient access to it, if possible to do this without great expense;
the water should be in the barnyard, that all animals can partake of it when they please, and save the loss of manure consequent on their travelling some distance for water, besides the liability of the weak to be injured by the strong, or to be deprived of the privilege of drinking after travelling far for that purpose.

With a good well and pump at or near the yard or where the water can be readily carried in a trough to the yard, water can be supplied with less trouble than by going a distance to shovel out water and get cattle to it in stormy and blustering days; besides the cattle will be much better accommodated, and a great saving of manure will be made.—[Boston Cultivator.]

LATE AND IMPORTANT FROM TEXAS.

By the arrival at New Orleans on the 14th inst. of the steamship Neptune,
Capt. Rollins, the Picayune has received
Houston dates up to the 10th inst.

By far the most important news by this arrival, is the following letter from one of our most intelligent correspondents together with the extract in relation to annexation from the Houston Telegraph of the 9th inst. All was rejoicing in Galveston when the Neptune left. Here is the letter of our correspondent:
Houston, Feb. 10, 1844.

To the Editors of the Picayune:
I take great pleasure in communicating to you the important intelligence contained in the enclosed slip. The facts stated I think may be implicitly relied upon. It only confirms what has recently been communicated in private letters from some of the most distinguished statesmen in the United States. It is to be regretted that our Congress did not keep together a few days longer (they adjourned on the 5th inst.) If they had, the thing might have been finally clinched in the course of a few days. The action of that body, alluded to in the enclosed slip, may be sufficient to meet the contingency, although it is questionable whether they have the power under the constitution (which is similar to that of the United States) of ratifying a treaty in advance. It will be an easy matter, however, to call the Senate together, if deemed necessary.

The Tariff bill was vetoed by the President on the last day of the session, and failed to pass by the constitutional majority, so that the old tariff remains as it was. An act was passed and approved by the President, providing for the erection of a court martial, to be composed of high military officers of the country, to try Commodore Moore, which in effect recognizes him as still in office, notwithstanding his dismissal by the President. I have not seen a list of the cases passed. Very little, however, has been done of general interest.

Yours truly,
We give the extract from the Houston Telegraph alluded to by our correspondent. It comes to us in the shape of an extra:

Glorious News.—Annexation.—We have received intelligence from sources of unquestionable authority, that the Senate of the United States has almost unanimously ratified a treaty for the annexation of Texas to the United States. The despatches relating to this subject have been forwarded to our capital with all possible haste, in order that, if necessary, the Senate may be convened to ratify the Treaty on the part of Texas. This, however, will not be necessary, for our Congress, in secret session, has fully authorized the President to ratify a treaty for this object immediately. This news may seem too good to be true, but we have derived it from letters written by intelligent gentlemen in the capital of the United States, and we place full reliance in its authenticity. Gen. Murphy, who is here on his way to Washington, does not deny it; but his joyous smiles indicate too plainly that he believes the day is close at hand, when the youngest daughter of Republican America will be restored to the arms of the mother republic. Ere another harvest is gathered in Texas, the broad banner of Washington may be unfurled in glory on our western border, and the burnished arms of American troops will be reflected from the sparkling waters of the Nueces. 'Westward! the star of empire takes its way!'

The events of the last two days have induced us to turn to the law providing for the punishment of persons concerned in disintering, or in receiving the bodies of persons for the purpose of dissection, or any other use. This punishment is not less severe than just. It imposes a fine of five hundred dollars, or imprisonment for twelve months in the county jail, or both, as the jury may determine. This punishment applies as well to the person receiving, as to those disintering the body.—[St. Louis Gazette.]

Extraordinary Season.—Such has been the mild character of the present winter, says the Charleston Courier of the 19th ultimo, that green-peas, tomatatoes and other vegetables, are for sale in our markets; and yesterday a gentleman living on East Bay, handed us some pairs of the second growth this season, nearly ripe.

MORE OF THE ST. LOUIS CHAR-NELL HOUSE.

The rioters.—The crowd continued round the building of the Medical Department of the St. Louis University until about one o'clock of Sunday night. The military also remained on duty at the State Tobacco Warehouse until about the same hour, but nothing further transpired. Yesterday, throughout the day, a large concourse of persons were assembled about the building, but the prevailing motive appeared to be curiosity. We saw no attempt or movement at violence.

The Sheriff, during the day, caused the remains to be removed from the vault and interred in the city grave yard. An inventory was taken of every thing found in or about the building, and to stop the many false reports in circulation, we may as well here say, that there was no entire body found. There were parts and fragments of some four or five bodies, but none that were in a condition to be recognized. The reports that deceased persons have been recognized among the bodies in the vault, is unfounded. Many other reports in circulation are equally unfounded. In fact, there is very little truth in most of the reports. The remains found in the vault filled three large and one small coffin. We understand that the whole matter has been referred to the judge of the criminal court, and the conduct of the Professors will be brought before the grand jury, which meets next week, when the whole subject will be properly investigated. This being the fact, it would be improper for us to indulge in any remarks as to the propriety of the course of the persons concerned. The punishment which the law inflicts is ample.

Yesterday evening a meeting was held at the State Tobacco Warehouse. The occasion and purport of the meeting were reported to us as follows:—[St. Louis Gazette.]

It was expected from what had been stated in the Republican of the 26th inst., that the committee concerning the disturbances on Sunday, would have reported on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at the State Tobacco Warehouse, to a general meeting. In the course of the afternoon there was quite a concourse of anxious spectators and persons seemingly interested. The hour of three o'clock drew near, but no committee appeared, and the excitement increasing at the place of commotion, Frederick Kretschmar being called upon, proposed to repair to the warehouse, in order to ascertain the report of the meeting, if there be any.

A large crowd assembled at the warehouse, in order to ascertain the report of the meeting, if there be any. A large crowd assembled at the warehouse, in order to ascertain the report of the meeting, if there be any. A large crowd assembled at the warehouse, in order to ascertain the report of the meeting, if there be any.

Whereupon, it was on motion of Mr. J. E. D. Cousins, Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to wait upon the committee of investigation, appointed on Sunday, inviting them to report the result of their labors as soon as practicable.

It was further Resolved, That the said committee of three, report to this meeting to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock.

The chair thereupon appointed J. E. D. Cousins, W. S. Denny, and Edward Leavy, said committee.

On motion, Resolved, That these proceedings be published in the city papers as far as practicable.

And on motion, the meeting adjourned until to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock.

F. KRETCHMAR, Chairman.
W. S. DENNY, Secretary.

THE BUTCHER'S PELLET.

In a certain town in the county of Lancashire, kingdom of England, there was a certain tavern or public house, kept by a man named Seth Rigby; on a certain occasion, on the fifth of November, there was the old men came together to Mr. Rigby's to take their usual glasses. Among the rest, was Henry Blackburn, a farmer; Thomas Threlfall, a store keeper; and Robert Whitener, a butcher; all old companions of Mr. Rigby, the landlord. These four old men (for they were all over sixty) were in the kitchen by themselves, drinking ale. It comes the hired man, "Chaps," said he, "I have seen a pheasant and marked it down." "Where did it gadaw?" inquired Rigby. "In a large brushfield," replied the hired man, telling the action, &c. "Well, chaps," said Threlfall, "men we have ought to do with it, it's such a bouny day." (The day was very foggy.) But before I proceed any further, I must give the reader a small hint at the game law in England; this law prohibited all unqualified persons from killing a great number of the most valuable birds; among which was the pheasant; to be qualified, a man must be worth not less than one hundred pounds a year in landed property, and take a certificate, which these old men had not got. The penalty for killing the pheasant was transitory.

But to proceed. Henry Blackburn, on hearing the news of the pheasant, borrowed Mr. Rigby's gun; Threlfall ran home for his fowling-piece and immediately returned with it loaded. (Threlfall was thought a first rate marksman and had been all his days.) Away they went, Robert Whitener, Patcher and Rigby, the landlord going with them. When they began to approach the aforementioned brushfield, they began to walk very carefully, and not a word was spoken; they got very near the brushfield, before the bird was aware of it. His apprehending his danger, made a struggle to escape, while the brambles were cracking, and the bird's wings fluttering; Mr. Blackburn, full of alarm, fired his gun with the muzzle pointing to the ground, a few steps from his feet, ploughing up the ground. About this time, the bird had got out of the brush, flying to the right hand. Threlfall, in like agitation, up with his gun, pointing to the left hand and fired. They were enveloped in smoke for a moment; but Blackburn, seeing the bird fall to the ground dead, cried out, "dayn e kums, I've done em!" "Now, now," said Threlfall, "ed was me e kild em, Harry." "Bud ed wored," said Blackburn, "e difend drop then, I shot; why, I d'd shoot th' fust, Harry," said Threlfall.

In this manner they continued, until they got into a vociferous quarrel. Rigby stood speechless, being afraid to speak a word, lest he should offend either of his old friends, for he knew not how the pheasant could possibly be killed. Then stepped up the Butcher, saying, "well chaps, ab-tell yo hays to decide ed. Hed yo booth one size of pellets e yor guns?" "Mine was thine, Tommy!" said the Butcher. "Mine was number seconds, for I knew ed w'd take a big pellet to kill em." "Well, lets go look at em, and that man's pellet that's found in em shall own em," said the butcher.

With one voice they agreed to the Butcher's proposition, and ran to the bird (for before they had not moved a step from the brushfield.) Rigby took up the pheasant, and to his astonishment, found under the bird's right wing, the Butcher's knife, which the Butcher, on seeing that they had both missed their shots, while the smoke yet remained, pitched at the bird and fortunately hit it.

So the butcher took the pheasant to which they all agreed, and returned to their ale at the tavern.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13, 1844.

On Thursday last a large concourse of people assembled at the Temple, according to previous appointment. Gens. Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith, Elder Young, and others, addressed the meeting at considerable length, and were listened to with profound attention. Upwards of five thousand persons were present on the occasion.

Since the war has become fine, our meetings have been held in the open air, near the Temple. The congregations have been unusually large. It certainly is delightful to see from five to seven thousand persons assembled, and listening with the greatest attention to the words of eternal truth. It leads us to exclaim with the Psalmist, "How beautiful are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!"

A Gen. Arlington Bennett.—We have learned that Gen. Bennett is originally from Ireland, and consequently is ineligible to the office of Vice-President.

PUBLIC MEETING.

A meeting of the inhabitants of the tenth ward was held yesterday evening at the school room on the hill, in Parley street, to take into consideration the propriety of establishing a store on the principle of co-operation or reciprocity. The subject was fully investigated, and the benefits of such an institution clearly pointed out.

The plan proposed for carrying out the object of the meeting was by shares of five dollars each.

The leading features of the institution was to give employment to our own mechanics, by supplying the raw material, and manufacturing all sorts of domestics, and furnishing the necessities and comforts of life on the lowest possible terms.

A committee was appointed to draft a plan for the government of said institute, to be submitted for adoption or amendment at their next meeting, after which an adjournment took place till next Tuesday evening, at half past six o'clock, at the same place, when the public generally were requested to attend.

A FRIENDLY HINT TO MISSOURI.

One of the most pleasing scenes that can transpire on earth, is when a sin has been committed by one person against another, to forgive that sin; and then, according to the sublime and perfect pattern of the Savior, pray to our Father in heaven, to forgive also. Very, very such a friendly rebuke is like the melody zephyr of summer's eve; it soothes; it cheers and gladdens the heart of the human and the savage. Well might the wise man exclaim: "A soft answer turneth away wrath;" for men of sense, judgment, and observation, in all the various periods of time, have been witnesses, figuratively speaking, that water not wood, checks the rage of fire.

Jesus said, "blessed are the peace makers, for they shall be called the children of God;"—wherefore if the nation, a single state, community, or family ought to be grateful for anything, it is peace. Peace, lovely child of heaven's peace, like light from the same great parent, gratifies and animates and happiness the just and the unjust, and is the very essence of happiness below, and bliss above. He that does not strive with all his powers of body and mind: with all his influence at home and abroad, and to cause others to do so too, to seek peace, and maintain it for his own benefit and convenience, and for the honor of his state, nation and country, has no claim on the clemency of man; nor should he be entitled to the friendship of woman, or the protection of government. He is the canker worm to gnaw his own vitals, and the vulture to prey upon his own body; and he is as to his own prospects and prosperity in life, a felo-de-se of his own pleasure. A community of such beings are not far from hell on earth, and should be let alone as unfit for the smiles of the free, or the praise of the brave. But the peace maker, O give ear to him! for the words of his mouth, and his doctrine drop like the rain, and distil as the dew;

they are like the gentle mist upon the herbs, and as the moderate shower upon the grass. An amiable, virtuous, loving, contentment, philanthropy, benevolence, compassion, humanity, and friendship, such life into bliss, and men a little below the angels, exercising their powers, privileges and knowledge, according to the order, rules and regulations of revelation, by Jesus Christ, dwell together in unity; and the sweet odor that is wafted by the breath of joy and satisfaction from their righteous communion, is like the rich perfume from the consecrated oil that was poured upon the head of Aaron; or like the luscious fragrance that arises from the fields of Arabian spices; yea, more, the voice of the peace maker.

Is like the music of the spheres, It charms our souls, and calms our fears; It turns the world to paradise, And men to planets of greater price.

So much to praise this friendly hint to the State of Missouri, for notwithstanding some of her private citizens and public officers have committed violence, robbery and murder, upon the rights and persons of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; yet, compassion, dignity, and a sense of the principles of religion, among all classes, and honor and benevolence, mingled with charity by high minded patriots, lead me to suppose, that there are many worthy people in that state, who will use their influence and energies to bring about a settlement of all those old difficulties, and use all consistent means, to urge the state, for her honor, prosperity and good name, to restore every person, she or her citizens have expelled from her limits, to their rights, and pay them all damage that the great body of high minded and well disposed southern and western gentlemen and ladies, the real good Samaritan like, and world, will go forth, good Samaritan like, and pour in the oil and the wine, till all that can be healed, are made whole; and after repentance, they shall be forgiven; for verily the scriptures say, "Joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repents, more than over ninety and nine just persons that need no repentance."

Knowing the fallibility of man; considering the awful responsibility of judging the cries of the innocent; confident in the virtue and patriotism of the noble minded western men, tenacious of their character and standing; too high to stoop to disgraceful acts, and too proud to tolerate meanness in others; yea, may I not say without boasting, that the best blood of the west, united with the honor of the illustrious fathers of freedom, will move, as the forest is moved by a mighty wind, to promote peace and friendship in every part of our wide great lovely country. Filled with a love almost unspeakable, and moved by a desire pleasant as the dew of heaven, I supplicate not only our Father above, but also the civil, the enlightened, the intelligent, the social and the best inhabitants of Missouri; they that feel bound by principles of honor, justice, moral greatness, and national pride, to assist in the removal of those who have inadvertently blurt their good names, for want of self preservation. Now is the time to brush up the monster, that incubus like, seems hanging upon the reputation of the whole state. A little exertion, and the infamy of the evil will be blacked out, gully only; for is it not written, "The evil men by its fruit?"

The voice of reason, the voice of humanity, the voice of the nation, and the voice of heaven seem to say to the honest and virtuous through out the State of Missouri: Wash yourselves, make you clean, lest your negligence should be taken by the world, from the mass of facts before it, that you are guilty! Let there be one union of hearts for justice, and when you reflect around your own firesides, remember that fifteen thousand, once among you, now not, but who are just as much entitled to the privileges and blessings you enjoy as yourselves, like the widow before the unjust judge, are fervently praying for their rights. When you meditate upon the massacre at Hawn's mill, forget not that the constitution of your state holds this broad truth to the world: that none shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, but by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land. And when you assemble together in towns, counties or districts, whether to petition your legislature to pay the damns the saints have sustained in your state, by reason of oppression, and misguided zeal; or to restore them to their rights according to republican principles and benevolent designs, reflect, and make honorable, or annihilate, such state law as was in force in your state, in 1838; viz: "If twelve or more persons shall combine to levy war against any part of the people of the state, or to remove forcibly out of the state, or from their habitations, evidenced by taking arms and assembling to accomplish such purpose, every person so offending shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period not exceeding five years, or by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars; and imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months."

Finally, if honor dignifies an honest people; if virtue exalts a community; if wisdom guides great men; if principle governs intelligent beings; if humanity spreads comfort among the needy; and if religion affords consolation by showing that charity is the first, best and sweetest token of perfect love: then, O ye good people of Missouri, like the woman in scripture who had lost one of her few pieces of silver, arise, search diligently till you find the lost piece, and then make a feast and call in your friends for joy.

With due consideration
I am the friend of
all good men,
JOSEPH SMITH.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION.

A Democratic mass meeting will be held at the Court house in Carthage, on Saturday the 23d day of March, inst. to appoint Delegates to a district Convention to be held at Rock Island, for the purpose of nominating a Candidate for Congress, for the sixth Congressional district. A Discovery.—A Frenchman named Azard, claims to have discovered that bread, made with certain proportions of rice and wheat flour, will keep for centuries.

From Vera Cruz.—The barque Anahua, Captain Wilson, which arrived at New York, on Tuesday from Vera Cruz, brings $17,658 in specie, being part of the indemnity due to the U. States from the Government of Mexico.

Secretary of the Navy.—By a private letter from Washington, we learn that it was rumored there, that Hon. Romulus M. Sander, of North Carolina, will be nominated to the Senate to fill the office of Secretary of the Navy. He is of the democratic school of politics.

Large Lumps of Gold.—The scientific researches carried on among the Ural mountains by order of the Russian Government, have been attended with great success lately. Particularly so in regard to the precious metals. Large deposits of gold-bearing sands have been discovered, of the richest quality and immense masses of solid gold and Platina, weighing many pounds. From Siberia's dreary mines the Emperor Nicholas has gathered a truly golden harvest. In 1842, they produced 21,058 pounds weight of gold; and the whole of Russia 22,323 pounds. M. Humboldt states that the largest piece of platina found up to the present time, was discovered at Nijni Tagulsk, and weighs 20 pounds. At Miask they have found a wonderful mass weighing about 100 pounds; and another weighing 27 pounds. A piece of gold was found in Anson county, N. C., which weighed 57 pounds some years since; and at Rio Haynu (in 1542) a mass was found 37 pounds in weight, which was added to the "sunless treasury" spoken of by Shakespeare, being lost in the depths of the ocean, we suppose with the vessel containing it. This we have gathered from Silliman's Journal, the last number. [Macon Democrat, 9th inst.]

Another Shower of Flesh and Blood.

An extraordinary sensation was created in Jersey City, on Tuesday, by the fall of a substance resembling bloody flesh, in pieces varying from the size of a dime to a twenty-five cent piece. The rumor of the mysterious shower soon spread around the city, and people gathered from all quarters to examine the substance. The Millerites were particularly interested in the matter, and contended that it was one of the very last "Signs of the Times," urging all to look for the immediate dissolution of old mother Earth; several venerable ladies took the hint, and made instantaneous preparation for going off. Even the most sceptical in father Miller's doctrines suspected something might happen, and looked upon the flakes of bloody matter with no little consternation. We confess the affair is rather strange, and calculated to puzzle the wisest head. It appears that the shower fell upon a small space, probably not over eight hundred feet square; and the flakes resembled pieces of bloody flesh more closely than any thing to which we can compare them. Wherever the flakes fell on linen, the blood gradually spread over the cloth, leaving a thick, fleshy substance in the center of the stain, which gave out an offensive, fetid smell. The clothes lines within the bounds of the shower were almost all well stocked with newly washed garments, and the flakes fell so thick that even the smallest garments were stained, all having to be re-washed immediately.

A Valuable Relic.—While at Candy, I visited the celebrated Buddhist temple, at that place. It has no pretensions to beauty; indeed, its external appearance is singularly and disappointingly mean.

The holy place, or actual temple, is a miserable barn-like looking edifice, surrounded by an exterior wall and ditch, which contain within their enclosure a few other inconsiderable buildings and rooms for the convenience of the priests. After a little previous ceremony and delay, I was ushered into a small room, at one end of which was a table covered with cloth, and on it a large golden bell-shaped vessel, teared the "Dagoba."

On its outside were suspended many jewels, some seemingly of value, underneath the large bell are five others, gradually diminishing in size; and under the last is the invaluable relic which the whole is intended to guard and to honor, and to which the place is indebted for its sanctity,—namely, the "tooth of Buddha," of whom there is an image in a niche immediately behind the "dagoba."

The "tooth," there is every reason to believe, was first brought to Ceylon about A. D. 311. Its prior history, involving a space of about eight hundred years,—for Buddha is said to have died about 543 years before the Christian era—is detailed in their sacred records with all the accuracy sufficient to satisfy the curiosity, or excite the credulity, of its worshippers.

Since its arrival in Ceylon, it has been looked upon as its most invaluable treasure; and the Buddhist so firmly believe that whoever is in possession of it will be ruler of Ceylon, that the British government, since they acquired it in 1825, have been most careful of its preservation; and only twice have they allowed the five coverings to be removed, and the precious relic to be exposed to the eyes of its adorers. The keys are always in the possession of the principal government functionary in the province, and a military guard is posted at the temple.—[Baynes's Rambles in the East, &c.]

Gypsies.—A society has been formed in England to improve the moral and religious character of the Gypsies. So desirable an object, if we take into consideration the abandoned condition of the whole race, we do not know of, and they are to be found in many parts of the world, principally in Bohemia, in Spain, in Egypt, and the East. The Rev. Mr. Crabbe of Brighton, said that in England the origin of the Gypsies was enveloped in darkness, but that it was known that they appeared in Switzerland in 1418, in Italy in 1422, and in France 1477, from which country, however, they had almost entirely fled during the reign of Napoleon, who ordered them all to be taken into the army. Crabbe denied their Egyptian origin, and traced them from the Suddhas in Hindostan, both in their physical configuration and dialect, and related as an instance of the latter that Lord Teignmouth once said, in Hindostan to a young Gypsy girl, "you are a great thief."

The girl replied without a moment's hesitation: "No sir, I am not a thief, but live by fortune telling." Another circumstance in which there existed a resemblance, was their fondness for dogs, cats, and all kinds of carrion as food, "for," as they said, "it is better to eat that which God kills, than what we kill ourselves."

Carrying the War into Africa.—Commodore Perry was using every effort on the coast of Africa, to secure the murderers of the crew of the schooner Mary Custer. He had been twice on shore, escorted by sixteen boats of the squadron, and four hundred marines and light armed seamen, for the purpose of getting possession of the murderers. It was expected that he would land and burn the town, and that the negroes would make an obstinate defence.

ENGLAND.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin, accompanied by other members of the Corporation, arrived in London on the 1st to present a petition to the queen respecting the pending State trials. The Queen gave a gracious reception to them.

The tenants of John Gabbett, of High Park, assembled recently at noonday, to the number of 200, and with fire arms drove off the steward, and a new set of laborers, who had been employed at lower prices.

Scotland.—On the 21st January two smart shocks of an earthquake were felt in various parts of Scotland.

Ireland.—The British troops in Ireland are kept constantly in exercise.

Murders and other outrages are of frequent occurrences in several counties, connected with the exciting political questions which now agitate Ireland.

MR. YEARSLEY'S AXIOMS FOR THE DEAF.

(Extract from the Medical Gazette, Nov. 28, 1840.)

1. Never syringe your ears, nor allow it to be done by others, unless for the removal of an accumulation of wax.

2. Be sure that such accumulation forms an obstacle to the transmission of sound, otherwise it had better remain where it is, for it should always be borne in mind, that wax is a natural secretion placed in the passage of the ear for a specific purpose.

3. Its presence, in moderate quantity indicates a healthy condition of the outer passage of the ear. Its absence is the effect, and not as generally supposed the cause of this disease which produces the deafness. Like deafness want of wax is only a symptom of ear disease; hence the absurdity of attempting its restoration by stimulating drops and ointments.

4. Never pick the ears.

5. Never wash the hair, nor wash the head with cold water. A most pernicious practice!

6. Never bathe or use a shower bath, without carefully protecting the head and ears. Even then I doubt its propriety.

7. Never attempt to stop a discharge from the ears but under proper advice; for it may be that the drum of your ear is open, and then the employment of a stimulant or astringent will risk even fatal consequences.

8. Never apply, or suffer to be applied, any thing to the outer passage of the ears, which causes heat or pain. Such application may prove of temporary benefit, but when the stimulus has subsided, you will be left worse than before.

9. Be strict in diet, stomachic demagogues, are a most prolific source of deafness.

10. Never expose yourselves to wet or windy weather.

11. Never consult an Aurist who is not an educated and diplomatised surgeon, and who does not admit that deafness is an infirmity often difficult of removal, and very often incurable.

The inquirer says the Dr.'s method is to remove obstructions in the Eustachian tube by means of a Catheter introduced through the nostrils, and that he has succeeded in a vast variety of cases.

THE QUAKER AND THE HIGHWAYMAN.

Toby Simpton, a pattern to Quakers, inhabited a neat little house in London, beautified by the presence of his daughter Mary. She, scarcely seventeen, a beautiful blonde with blue eyes, and possessing as much wisdom as beauty, was sought after by all the young men among her father's acquaintances. Those of the neighborhood tried vainly to win a smile. Mary was not a coquette, and so far from turning to account the effort produced by her charms, she felt so much annoyed by it, that she could hardly treat with civility her many admirers—one only excepted—Edward Waresford, a young artist, who was intimate with the family.

A simple occurrence was the cause of this intimacy. Premature death had taken away the wife of the Quaker still in her youth and beauty, and he, wishing to perpetuate the memory of one so dear to him, had called a painter to her death bed. It was there that Edward first met the afflicted daughter—there between the tears of one, and the sacred employment of the other, grew up a serious attachment. The year passed since that event, had only served to strengthen the bond formed under such circumstances; and the young man had already ventured to declare his hopes and desires.

Toby had no reasons for opposing the inclinations of the young people. With out being rich, Edward earned by means of his brush and palette, enough to honestly maintain a family. His father, Mr. Waresford, an old city merchant, had retired with an immense fortune; a rare example of repeated successes in speculations, so rapid even, that very few persons had been able to follow their progress. Mr. Waresford being of a quick, stern disposition, lived alone in the West End of London, without troubling himself about his son, and leaving him to shift for himself. He was one of those obliging egotists, who troubled no one, in order not to be themselves troubled—one of the most perfectly complaisant, provided nothing is asked of them. Edward then had nothing to hinder his courtship of the fair Quakeress, knowing well that her father would not oppose her marriage. The situation of the lovers was most prosperous, and honest Toby waited for nothing to fix the wedding day, save the back rents due from his farms, intending to set apart that income to defray the expenses of the occasion. With this view, he left for his country seat, a few miles from London, in order to arrange his affairs. He was absent from home but a single day, and returning at night on horseback, he perceived a little in advance, a horseman who blocked up the road. He stopped for a moment, uncertain whether to proceed or turn back. While in this predicament the stranger advanced towards him. It was too late to think of escaping, and putting the best possible face upon the affair, he started his horse again. As he approached the troublesome stranger, he perceived that he was masked, an unpleasant augury of what was soon confirmed. The unknown drew a pistol, and pointing it to the traveller, demanded his purse. The Quaker was not a coward, but calm in character, unflinching in religion, and unable untrained to resist an armed man, he drew from his pocket with the greatest coolness his purse, containing twelve guineas. The highwayman took it, counted out the money, and let the poor devil pass, who believing himself cleared, quickened his pace to a trot. But the highwayman, seeing how little resistance had been offered and hoping for more booty soon rejoined him at Toby, and again blocking up the way and pointing his pistol, cried out—your watch!

Now I pray you let me go home, for my daughter will feel uneasy at my absence.

One moment, replied the Quaker, after growing more hardy by this continued docility, swear that you have no other aim.

I never swear, replied the Quaker. The Quaker, although surprised, did not show it in the least, and taking out his watch, and noticing the time, placed the jewel in the hand of the thief, saying—

Well, affirm then, that you have about you no more money, and upon the word of a highwayman who will not resort to violence towards a man who yields with so much grace, I will not further molest you.

Toby reflected a moment, and shook his head.

Whoever thou art, said he gravely, you have noticed that I am a Quaker, who would not conceal the truth, although at the risk of my life. In my satchel I have the sum of two hundred pounds sterling.

Two hundred pounds sterling, cried the highwayman; whose eyes glaucated through his mask.

If you are good, if you are human, replied the Quaker, you will not take away this money, my daughter is about being married and this sum is necessary for the occasion, it would be a long time before I could get together a similar one; the dear child loves her intended, and it would be exceedingly cruel to delay her union. You have a heart, perhaps you have loved, you would not, cannot do so wicked an action.

What has your daughter, her lover, or their marriage to do with me? I have words and more promptness! Give me the money.

Toby, sighing, raised the saddlebag, took out a heavy sack and handed it slowly to the masked man. Then attempting to gallop off.

Held on my Quaker friend, said the other, seizing the bridle. The moment of your arrival you will denounce me to the magistrates that is usual and I have nothing to say, but I must at least be beyond pursuit to-night. My mare is feeble enough, and what is more, she is fatigued; your horse, on the contrary, appears vigorous, for the weight of the sack did not encumber him. Dismount, give me your horse, you may take mine if you wish.

It was too late to think of resisting, although the increasing demands were of a nature to bear the life of the most patient man, good Toby dismounted, and with a resignation, accepted the sorry jade that was left in exchange. (Had I known this, he contented himself with thinking, I should have run away when I first met the rascal, and certainly he would never have overtaken me with this coarser.

Meanwhile the masked man, thanking him ironically for his compliance, burying his powder, disappeared.

Before arriving in London, the plundered traveler had time to reflect upon his situation, and upon the disappointment of the poor young folks who loved each other so much, and whose happiness would be postponed. The sum taken from him was irretrievably lost, there was neither means to find, or recognize the audacious thief; nevertheless, though struck by a sudden idea, he stopped short.

Yes, cried he, I may succeed by this means. If this man resides in London, perhaps I shall be in London, perhaps I shall be able to find him. Heaven has no doubt determined, that he should be imprudent!

A little consoled by some hope, Toby went home without appearing in the least troubled, and without speaking of his adventure, he did not go to a magistrate, but embraced his daughter, who, doubting nothing, retired and slept soundly. Next morning, he bethought himself to aid Providence to make researches. Bringing out the mare from the stable where she had passed the night, he placed the bridle upon her neck, hoping that the animal, guided by habit, would naturally go to her master's house.

He let the uncheckered beast go free in the streets of London, and followed her.

But he overruled her instinct for a long time she walked about making a thousand turns and curves without object, without direction, sometimes stopping, then starting in a contrary direction.

Toby, despairing, the thief thought he, never resided in London, how silly I was, not to notify the magistrate before it was too late, instead of depending on this animal to find the vagabond.

He was interrupted in his reflections by the cries of children who had been nearly trod upon by the mare; a moment since so quiet, she now started to run.

Stop! stop! stop! cried every one, let her go! cried the Quaker, in the name of heaven do not stop her.

And following with anxiety the course of the animal, he saw her rapidly enter a half open gateway of a splendid residence at the West End.

'Tis here! thought the Quaker, raising his eyes to heaven, in thanks to Providence. Then in passing before the mansion, he saw a servant in the yard patting the best and conducting her to the stable; he then asked of the first person he met, the name of the proprietor of the house. What are you a stranger in this part of the town, that you do not know the residence of the rich merchant Werresford?

The Quaker stood petrified.

Werresford, repeated the man, believing himself misunderstood: you know well the man who has made so great a fortune. Thanks my friend, thanks, replied Toby.

He was unable to recover himself.

Werresford, Edward's father, a respected man—the my thief!

He believed himself the butt of some dream, and wished to return home. He called to mind several instances of respectable men who had been connected with bands of malefactors; then, this immense fortune, the source of which was so uncertain, then this mare, who seemed to be going to his master—Toby resolved to solve the mystery.

He went boldly into the yard and demanded speech with the master, who, although it was nearly noon, was still in bed—another indication of a night of fatigue. The Quaker insisted upon being introduced immediately, and soon found himself in Werresford's bed-chamber.

He had just waked, and rubbing his eyes, asked a little out of humor:—who are you, sir, and what do you want?

The sound of his voice awakened Toby's recollection, and completed his conviction. Calmly taking a chair, he posted himself without removing his hat!

You remain covered? cried out the surprised merchant. I am a Quaker, replied the other with much composure, and you know that such is our usage.

At the first word of the Quaker, Werresford sprang up and closely examined his visitor. Without doubt, he recognized him, for he turned pale. Well, asked he stammering, what is it—if you please—this—the subject—which brings you hither? I ask pardon for having shown so much haste, replied Toby, but among friends it is not usual to stand upon ceremony, and I am come, without firm, to ask you for my watch which you stole yesterday.

The—watch!

I value it much, it was my poor wife's and I cannot do without it. My brother-in-law, the Alderman, never would pardon me for letting a jewel, which recalls to mind his sister, to pass from my hand for a day. The name of the Alderman seemed to make some impression upon Werresford. Without waiting a reply, Toby continued:

You will much oblige, by returning those ten guineas which I lent you at the same time; nevertheless, if you are in want of them, I consent to lending them to you, on condition you give me a receipt.

The coolness of the Quaker so much disconcerted the merchant, that he dared not deny the possession of the stolen articles, but not wishing to acknowledge it, he hesitated to reply, and Toby added:

I have told you of the projected marriage of my daughter Mary. I had received the sum of two hundred pounds, sterling for the bride's portion, but I have met with an accident: last evening on the London-road, I was completely robbed, so completely, that I am come to pray you to give your son a marriage portion, which, had it not been for that, I should never have asked of you.

My son!

Yes! don't you know that it is him that is in love with Mary, and is to marry her?

Edward! cried the merchant, throwing himself at the foot of the bed.

Edward Werresford, calmly replied the Quaker taking a pinch of snuff: Let us see, do something for him. I should dislike to have him know what has passed to-night, and if you do not furnish the sum I have promised, it will be necessary I should tell him how I lost it.

Werresford ran to a secretary, took out a box with a triple lock, opened it, and placed in Toby's hands, his watch, his purse, and his sack of money.

Good, said the Quaker in receiving them; I see that I was right in depending upon you.

Is that all you wish? said the Merchant in a brisk tone.

No! I require something further of your friendship.

Speak.

You must disinherit your son.

How?

You must disinherit him, I do not wish it said that I have speculated upon your fortune.

And finishing these words, the Quaker left the chamber.

No murmured he, when alone, children are not bound by the faults of their parents; Mary shall marry the son of this man, but touch his stolen money, never!

When in the yard again: Ho! my friend cried he to Werresford, who was looking out of the window, order my horse to be brought out.

A few moments after, Toby, well mounted, carrying behind him his bag of money, and provided with his watch and purse, at a moderate pace regained his house. I have just made my marriage visit to your father, said he to Edward whom he found there. I believe that we shall be able to agree. Two hours afterwards, Werresford arrived at Toby's house, and taking him aside, honest Quaker, said he, your proceeding has touched me to the bottom of my soul, you might have dishonored me, have dishonored my son, ruined me in his eyes, and made him unhappy in refusing him your daughter; you have acted like a wise man and a man of heart. I wish no longer to blush in your presence, take these papers, good bye, you will never see me again.

He then left, the Quaker opened the papers. First, there were cheques for large amounts on the first houses in London; then came a long list of names, and by the side of each name, was placed the amount of larger or smaller sums, a note was joined to it upon which the Quaker read as follows:—These are the names of those who have been robbed; the figures the amounts which ought to be returned; draw the money from my bankers as though for the purpose of foreign exchange, and then make yourself the restitution secretly. All which remains will be my legitimate fortune and your daughter will some day be able to accept of my inheritance. The next morning Werresford had left London, and all believed that he was gone to live on his income in France. On the marriage-day of Edward and Mary, the Quaker assembled a large company of joyous friends, among whom might be noticed a number of persons rejecting themselves with the proceeds of the London thieves, who by the interference of Toby, had been induced to return them their lost property with interest.

For the Neighbor.

The question is often asked, who shall be our Executive the ensuing term? General Joseph Smith, say I, and so all the free born denizens of America would say, were they as well acquainted with the General as I am. I assert what I know when I say there has not a man been brought before the public for this office, so well qualified for the important trust as Gen. Smith, since the spirit of the immortal Washington took its exit for the associations of a more hallowed throng.

Let his valor as a General, his wisdom as a legislator, and his judgment as a jurist be known, and all the bright names that adorn the official galaxy, will stand eclipsed, while the world will be put to its trumps for an equal. Clay and Van Buren are the most prominent candidates now in the field, an extraordinary struggle is anticipated in the approaching campaign.

test, what will be the result in case either of them should be elected? Oh! a mountain laboured and brought forth a mouse!

We have had a trial of Vanburenism; what did it amount to? Patriotism! No! The guilty went unpunished; the prayers of the afflicted and oppressed, were ridiculed; justice mocked; humanity trampled under foot, and an impoverished nation sunk deeper in bankruptcy. Was there a meritorious act of his, through out his administration? Not one. His only and sovereign remedy, his balm and gleed for a distressed nation, was a Sub-Treasury. His own grubs destroyed the roots; the sap leaked out before the reeds ripened, and a blast of Tylerism blew it from the East.

Clay, vacillating Clay, stands dodging between the clashing of northern and southern interests. Happy will it be for him if he does not soon find himself in a situation similar to an Egyptian General, buffeting the waves of a red sea. Let the meritorious principles of Gen. Smith go forth, (and no man can prove he has any other principles!) let the intelligent of this nation know them; let the people know that while he will be their servant, he will instruct them by proclamation in measures and policy, for the protection, peace, and prosperity of this Government; such as the wisdom of man never before comprehended, and Clay will say "farewell to all my greatness," and Van Buren for ever remain Erifunctio.—while the people will shout Viva Republica! Gen. Smith for ever. Are there any so faint hearted as to say, he cannot be elected? Let not the voices be heard; who would have imagined, five years ago, (when the General lay starving in chains, in a Missouri dungeon!) that at this time, he would be Mayor of a City, containing 18,000 inhabitants; Lieutenant General of the Nauvoo Legion; second to the Governor in command;—who would have thought if not a man then say, he can be elected, he shall be President, use your influence and go ahead.

SKETCHES FROM NATURE.—No. 9.

THE CHURCH WARDEN.

In foreign lands such WARDENS abound,
But in our Isle—no such one is found.

So pious grown, you'd think he'd turn'd a Saint.

Through some folks' knee—'tis nothing but a feint.

A sort of Sunday school to catch flies
By turning up his countenance eyes.

With ever and anon, a semi groan
As if the nation's sins were all his own.

With fervor clinches fast the guided book,
First shakes his head—then gives an upstair look.

If any one is watching, who is nigh,
He'll treat his neighbor with a far-fetched sigh.

Donating good example to the rest,
Thinks others pious—but himself is best.

neighbor nearer than the vicarage, quite a half a mile distant, was the envious of selected for the earthly paradise of Mr. and Mrs. Wington.

It was the first of September, a day enthusiastically anticipated by sportsmen, when a loud, gruff voice, from under the window of Harry's dormitory thus saluted him—

Now, sir, it's time to be stirring. Down Ponto, you're a troublesome brute! Now then, sir, come to heel, lass! come to heel, I say!

Waking from his slumbers, Harry threw open the casement. Upon the green lawn, in a picturesque group, stood the gamekeeper, John Flip, and a brace of—as he would maintain—the best pointers in the whole country round. They'd find back and drop, against any that ever were or ever would be.

"It's just four, sir," said John, respectfully touching his hat to his master's eager hand. "To bag ten brace before breakfast you must be long in turning out."

In a very limited period the shooting gear was arranged, and the impatient biped and quadruped were joined by their no less eager master—all equally desirous for the sport.

Not five minutes elapsed after Harry's departure when Mrs. Wington's pleasant dream was rudely broken by the sharp crack of one of Manton's best. Quickly surmising the cause, she proceeded to the window, and saw her husband covered to his knees with the lustrous green tops of turnips caressing one of his favorite dogs.

With a fine hearty laugh which indicates no thought of duns, promissory notes, actions, or chancery suits, Harry kissed his hand to his smiling wife, and after holding up a patridge in triumph of his skill, he vanished behind a haystack followed by the gamekeeper and pointers.

Nature was waking from repose—the sun's rays were bursting upon the dewy verdure, like Hope's bright hue upon the cloudy heart. The flowers unclasped their leaves to the cheerful light with caps charged to the brim with crystal drops. The air rang with the song of birds, and as Ida Wington continued to look upon the beautiful scene with smiles—

"Which went and came, and disappeared,
Like glancing sunbeams on the dimpled water
Shaded by trees?"

It was a handsome, goodtempered, and excellent husband as she was possessed of. Hours passed with unconscious swiftness to Ida, so engaged was she with her no uncommon reverie, when a rap at her chamber door occasioned her to start and hastily ask who was there?

Who is there, indeed! repeated a voice from the outside. It passed eight. Breakfast, breakfast I say!

I'm coming forth—'I'm waiting for you!' rejoined the voice.

Before knowing the value of a parent's smile, Ida was an orphan, and left to the sole care of an only aunt. With a mother's tenderness she had reared her, petted, but not spoiled her niece, and deemed herself fully rewarded by seeing her favorite a beautiful accomplished woman, and the wife of one whose study it was to render her happy. Upon Ida's marriage, Harry requested that the kind-hearted old lady would reside with them and form a member of his family circle. This was the acme of her wishes; and thus matters stood a short time after that eventful epoch in the lives of parties concerned, the wedding day.

The morning toilet completed, Ida listened to the breakfast parlor, where she found her aunt impatiently waiting for the dejeuner.

My love, you look—a little too sweet, some more of the milk, think you, child—pale this morning, I think, said the antiquated dame, in her usual broken sentences.

I am quite well, aunt, replied Mrs. Wington.

I am glad to hear that you are, my child, but you certainly are—a piece of dry toast—somewhat languid. Where is the scapegrace Harry?

How forgetful you are, aunt! Why this is the first of September, said Ida.

Ah! shooting then, of course. Married men should not indulge often in such amusements. Frequently do we hear of guns bursting and—a little of that tongue—exploding accidentally, rejoined the aunt.

A follower of the illustrious Arab, Mamelon, exclaims, when the shades of sorrow are cast upon its path. "Tis my destiny!" Whether this creed be founded upon a remembrance of truth, or the gravity of a bubble lighter than air, it shall form no argument for this page. All to be here stated is the simple fact, whether fate willed the shaft or not is immaterial, that while Ida was dropping a piece of sugar into a cup of coffee, her wedding ring slipped from her taper finger into the saucer.

Heaven preserve us—Heaven preserve us! ejaculated the aunt. It's a fearful circumstance. Direful—direful!

What is the matter? said Ida springing from her chair.

The ring, the ring! murmured the aunt, burying her face in her handkerchief.

Here it is, replied her niece, replacing the magic hoop upon her finger.

Child, child! it's an awful sight!

Of what aunt?

Accident or misfortune of some kind; for 'tis said—Ere the sun be set, sorrow will arise, when from a bride the ring falls, replied the aunt, with a melancholy anticipation of evil.

A merry laugh burst from Ida's lips and she turned the object of discussion derisively round upon the end of her finger, when aunt's anger was somewhat excited at this expressed contempt for the prophecy, and she sharply continued, you may ridicule anything, child; but recollect, many loud laughs have changed into bitter tears.

Why do you love to frighten me? asked Ida in a tone of remonstrance.

I've no wish to alarm you; but I much disapprove of levity upon occasions requiring seriousness, replied the aunt.

I cannot believe in such absolute sayings—they are so very silly, said Ida, with an ill-suppressed smile.

So it appears, my dear; but I do believe in them, added the aunt.

Then tell me your reason for so doing, said her niece.

My reasons are countless. Circumstances admitting of no doubt have been related to me by dozens, rejoined the old lady.

Not convinced that heresy evidence was to be deemed conclusive, Ida inquired if her aunt had ever witnessed an illustration of this to be dreaded fatality.

Bless me! you talk like a lawyer I once heard at the assizes, who would not permit an honest man to say what he had heard!

Indeed! exclaimed Ida, with pretended gravity.

To convince you, I will relate an incident which I know to be true, although I did not see the occurrence, rejoined the aunt with another shake of the wig.

It was a rough day in March, and two years after the union of a very dear friend of mine, that her husband was dressed for hunting. Oh! that dangerous reckless amusement! Being late, he was hastening to depart, and in his hurry to bid her adieu, he snatched her hand, and drew off her wedding ring, which, not being noticed at the time, and he proceeded to the door, where his patient horse stood pawing the ground, held by a groom. Just as he was going to mount, the cries of the hounds in full chase were heard. No sooner were the well known sounds caught by the high-spirited animal, than he reared upon his branches straight in the air, bounded from one side of the road to the other, and became completely ungovernable from excitement and eagerness to join in the sport. After many useless attempts to gain the saddle, his master, angry at not being able to start, threw himself passionately across the horse, and gained one foot in the stirrup; when accidentally a spur stuck deep in the side of the restless animal. Furious with pain, he snapped his bridle, jumped from the earth with a sudden bound, and hurled the groom far from him. Away he rushed down the avenue with his rider half on, clinging to his mane. A high gate was closed at the end of the avenue, towards which the horse galloped with fearful speed. The creature heaved the barrier, and leaped to it without hesitation, but dashing against the top rail, he fell with desperate force, carrying his ill-fated master with him.

My poor friend saw the accident with feelings that may be conceived, but not described. For many hours she was unconscious of the extent of her lamentable misfortune. Upon recovering from her swoon, she found her husband stretched upon a bed a ghastly figure. A surgeon was watching him with fingers pressed upon the fluttering pulse; bandages stained with blood were wrapped round his head; his cheeks were ashy pale; his lips livid and clenched together. A slight moan escaped them occasionally, which were the only remaining signs of life. In one short hour more, from being as happy a wife as ever the sun shone upon, my poor friend was a heart broken widow.

Tears rolled from the old lady's eyes as she concluded her brief, but melancholy narrative.

No wonder that you believe in the omen of the ring, sobbed Ida. My poor, dear Harry! oh! what will happen to him!

Nothing I hope and pray, my love. Do not weep, entreated her aunt. It was very foolish of me to tell you this story—very wrong indeed; but it was want of reflection; I'm a silly old woman. There don't cry child.

A loud crash of thunder at this moment occasioned both to start. Flash after flash of lightning succeeded, and a few large drops of rain splashed at intervals against the windows. Suddenly, one deafening roar pealed overhead, reverberating over the hills miles distant, and a deluge of water fell, making the earth appear involved in smoke. Roll after roll of the warring elements followed, and the heavy clouds floated slowly on, spouting forth their overcharged contents. The heavens grew momentarily blacker, and the storm increased in its violence.

Peering through the west streaked panes, Ida watched, with fear depicted in her trembling limbs, the raging storm. Generally without the common nervousness of her sex, Ida now paced the room with hurried step, clasping her hands, and lost to all control of feeling. Her aunt endeavored to calm her excitement, but without success. The narration of the event of the ring, and the violence of the storm, had produced an effect not easily erased.

As she was walking with hasty step and down the apartment, anticipating evil of every kind that her heated imagination could form, she stood before the window speechless with emotion, at seeing the gamekeeper running towards the house. On he came, but his master neither preceded nor followed him. Ida beckoned to her aunt, and pointing to the hurrying man, rushed out of the house to meet him, regardless of the pouring torrents.

Tell me, she gasped, clutching John by the arm, and stopping him in his course.

My lady, my master is—John could say no more.

Quick, quick, she rejoined, in a voice hollow with dread.

My master is in bed quite—again John's breath was quite expended.

Looking as one about to bear the judgment of death, Ida murmured, What!

What! repeated the gamekeeper, in amazement at the expressed agony of his mistress, and her extraordinary determination to become in a like situation. He's in bed, wet through, continued John, in my cottage, and he wants a change of clothes.

Years have swept away since Ida's wedding ring fell. Sorrow has not traced a single furrow upon her brow, it time has left the print of days gone by upon it. May my fair reader's be a similar destiny—a happy and contented wife.

THE POET'S DOG.

The manner in which Pope the great English Poet was preserved by the sagacity of his dog is a very curious story.

This animal who was called Marquis, could never agree with a favorite servant of his master's; he constantly growled when near him, and would even show his teeth when this servant approached. Although the poet was singularly attached to this dog, who was a spaniel, of the largest species—yet, on account of his extreme meanness, which he pushed almost to excess, he would never allow him to remain in his chamber. Nevertheless, in spite of positive orders, the spaniel would frequently sneak, towards evening, into the apartment of his master, and could not be driven from it without the greatest difficulty.

One evening, having slipped very softly in without being perceived, the animal placed himself under the bed of his master, and remained there. Towards morning, the servant rushed hastily into the chamber of Pope. At this moment, the dog suddenly left his post and leaped on the villain, who was armed with a pistol.

The poet started from his sleep; he threw open his window to call for assistance, and beheld three highwaymen, who had been introduced by his servant into the garden of his villa, for the purpose of robbing him. Disconcerted by this unforeseen accident, the robbers hesitated a moment and then took flight.

The servant, thus betrayed by the watchful dog, was sentenced to forfeit his life.

The same dog, shortly after this singular event, exhibited another proof of his remarkable instinct. Pope, repose one afternoon in a little wood about twelve miles distant from his house, lost a watch of great value. On returning home, the poet wished to know the hour, and found the watch was not in his box; two or three hours had elapsed, and a violent storm was just commencing.

The poet called his dog, and making a sign, which Marquis very well understood, he said: "I have lost my watch; go look for it." At these words, Marquis departed, and repaired, no doubt, to every spot which his master had been at. It happened that the poor animal was so long occupied in the search as to excite great anxiety; for midnight had arrived and he had not returned. What was the astonishment of Pope when, on rising in the morning, he opened his chamber door, and there beheld his faithful messenger lying quietly, and huddled in his mouth the splendid jewel, which he had returned, perfectly unimpaired, and which was the more highly valued by the poet, as it had been presented to him by the Queen of England. MAKING MAPLE SUGAR.

Mr. Woodworth, the writer of the following statement, received the Premium at the last Agricultural fair at Rochester, New York, for the best sample of Maple Sugar.

To the Committee on Maple Sugar of the New York State Agricultural Society:

Gentlemen: I herewith submit to your inspection 40 lbs. of my maple sugar. The following is a statement of the manner of making and clarifying the same.

In the first place I make my buckets (tubs, and kettles all perfectly clean—) boil the sap in a potash kettle, set in an arch in such a manner that the edge of the kettle is defended all round from the fire; I boil through the day, taking care not to have any thing in the kettle that will give color to the sap, and to keep it well skimmed. At night I leave fire enough under the kettle to boil the sap nearly or quite to a syrup by the next morning. I then take it out of the kettle and strain it through a flannel cloth into a tub, if it is sweet enough, if not I put it in a caldron kettle (which I have hung on a pole in such a manner that I can swing it on and off the fire at pleasure) and boil it till it is sweet enough, and then strain it into the tub and let it stand till the next morning; I then take it and the syrup in the kettle and put it together into the caldron and sugar it off. I use, to clarify, say 100 lbs. of sugar, the whites of five or six eggs well beaten, about one quart of new milk and a spoonful of saleratus. All well mixed with the syrup before it is scalding hot. I then make a moderate fire directly under the caldron, until the scum is all raised, then skim it off clean taking care not to let it boil so as to rise in the kettle before I have done skimming; I then sugar it off leaving it so damp that it will drain a little until it is well granulated; I then put it into boxes, made smallest at the bottom, that will hold from 50 to 75 pounds, having a thin piece of board fitted in two or three inches above the bottom, which is bored full of small holes to let the molasses drain through, which I keep drained off by a tap through the bottom. I put on the top of the sugar in the box a clean damp cloth, and over that a board well fitted in so as to exclude the air from the sugar. After it has done, or nearly done draining, I dissolve it and sugar it off again, going through with the same process in clarifying and draining as before.

I do certify that the above is a correct statement of my mode of making maple sugar.

JOEL WOODWORTH.

On the 21st of March, 1844, the Philadelphia Forum, gives the following receipt, which he says he has used for forty years, and always found it satisfactory, for hams and beef. For 100 lbs. of ham or beef, take 7 lbs. of coarse salt, 12 lbs. of brown sugar, 2 oz. of salt petre, 1-2 an oz. of pearl ash, and 4 gallons of water. Boil the above ingredients in the water and skim the pickle well; when cold put it on the meat. Hams to remain in the pickle 8 weeks, beef three weeks. No salt is required in the vessel in which the meat is put—the pickle will cure it perfectly and effectually.

SANTA FE.

The Western. Exhibitor of the 30th ult. says—"In our last we stated that a small party was expected here in a few days from Santa Fe;—since that time the company has arrived safe and sound, but not without having undergone much fatigue and hardships on their route."

Our informant, Mr. Stewart, states that a company of seven, himself amongst the number, left Santa Fe for this place about the 10th of November. They came up the way of Bent's fort.

He states that the weather during a portion of their journey was very cold, and the snow in the mountains about a foot deep. About one hundred miles this side of Bent's Fort, on the Big Arkansas, they came in contact with a war party of Sioux Indians, numbering about 150.

They came near getting into a general fight with them; but having a Frenchman in the company a fight was avoided.

They did not get out of their clutches, without losing every article they had, except their guns and the clothing they had on. Our informant further states that they suffered greatly on their trip for provisions, being compelled to subsist six days together at one time, upon half a pint of gruel a day. He states that there is a general disposition at Santa Fe with all classes, to force the government to open the ports immediately to the American traders. So strong indeed is this feeling, that Armojo, the present Governor of Santa Fe, actually proposed to the Americans residing there, to assist him to raise an army for the purpose of forcing the government to open the trade again, and expressed a willingness to carry this measure through with the force of arms.

He dissuaded from this course, however, lest when he made his proposition. It is stated that the people of Santa Fe would receive an army from Texas with open arms, walked away with the camp. The Osages ran to their horses, mounted, and rode after us like very devils, furious to get their poor prisoners; but we could not, for the credit of civilization, shame our Christian birth so far as to deny protection to the weaker party, and we persisted in warning the war party from our way. Still they followed us, riding around our party in all directions, and with a spend-reckless wild and threatening. One daring rascal rode near to the Pawnees, and extended his hand as if in amity. One of the Pawnees took it and was instantly jerked from the ground almost on the horse of his enemy. Had the Osage achieved his aim of getting the Pawnee across his horse's neck, he would have cashed off and no doubt secured the scalp he wanted before he could have prevented it. Seeing how pertinaciously their enemies pursued them we ordered the Pawnees into the large wagon, and towards evening the Osages abandoned further molestation and left us.

Foreign News

From the New Orleans Tropic of the 22d ult.
LATER FROM TEXAS.

By the arrival last night of the fine steamship, New York, Captain Wright, in 30 hours from Galveston, we have received Houston and Galveston papers to the 17th inst. The news is of little importance. The story about the annexation of Texas to the United States turns out to be a humbug, as we thought it would. The Houston Democrat of the 17th has the following in relation to "that Extra."

"That Extra."—The "glorious news" promulgated through an extra of the Telegraph appears to have produced quite a sensation throughout the country. Unfortunately, however, the whole story proves to be a hoax. The "joyous smiles" of Gen. Murphy, and the "burnished arms" of American troops sparkling in the waters of the Nueces, were too much for us; and we freely confess that we ourselves came very high being caught as well as others. Gen. Murphy appears to enjoy the joke exceedingly, as we learn from our Washington correspondent that his "joyous smiles" have expanded into a regular horse laugh.

It would appear from this that all those further "particulars" with which our esteemed contemporary of the Republican favored his readers a few days ago, and which were received from a source entitled to the utmost confidence, were after all without foundation, and also that John Tyler's administration is still deprived of its "crowning glory" and that Sam. Houston stands no chance of being nominated Governor of the Territory of Texas, as it was presumed that he would be.

Furthermore it would seem by the annexed extract, also from the Democrat, that some persons in Texas, as well as in this country, think that "annexation is far from being desirable." The Democrat says:

From information, also which we have received from a source which leaves no room to doubt its correctness, relative to the pending negotiations with Mexico, and the very favorable despatches recently received by our Government, we are strengthened in the conviction that under present circumstances, at least, annexation is far from being desirable.

The same paper also contains the correspondence between the Texian Charges d'Affaires in London, and Lord Aberdeen, the Foreign Secretary, on the subject of Slavery. The Texian Minister speaks of certain persons being engaged in "endeavoring to procure the abolition of Slavery in Texas," and who have endeavored to obtain the co-operation of Her Majesty's Government, and informs His Lordship that such parties "are in no manner recognized by the Texian Government," and that her proceedings "are wholly unauthorized, disclaimed, and disapproved of," by that Government—to which Lord Aberdeen replies that:

"In disclaiming all intention of insinuating that there exists on the part of Her Majesty's Government any disposition to interfere improperly in the affairs of Texas, Mr. Ashbel Smith is only rendering justice to Her Majesty's Government. Nothing can be further from their intention than to interfere in the internal affairs of Texas. But at the same time that the undersigned makes this declaration, he believes that Mr. Smith is fully aware of the continued desire of Her Majesty's Government to see slavery abolished, not only in Texas, but in all parts of the world, and it is matter of no surprise to the undersigned that private individuals, who are impressed with the same feelings, should exert every effort in their power to attain an object so desirable."

The Texians are busy President making—Gen. Burleson for the Presidency and the Hon. J. M. Ward, Jr. for the Vice Presidency, were nominated, by a meeting at Washington. Mr. Ward declines the nomination. A letter from Washington dated the 11th inst., says:

Important despatches have just got in from the United States and Great Britain, and I learn from good authority that all things go on favorably. There is a good deal of curiosity and of course some speculation on the subject; and a rumor has obtained some credence that an extra session will be called immediately. I mention these things because you will doubtless hear them perhaps considerably magnified. So far as the speculations are concerned, I can only say that I put no confidence in them. So far as regards the despatches being favorable, I speak confidently, because advisedly.

Congress adjourned on the 5th. The President had vetoed the tariff bill, leaving it of course as before. It was passed over the veto by a constitutional majority in the House, but was lost in the Senate.

A bill has been passed imposing additional tonnage duty upon certain vessels arriving at Galveston, by which the amount paid by the steamship Neptune will be $750, or about $500 more than she has hitherto paid.

It was reported that a bill had been passed providing for the trial of Commodore Moore, by Court Martial.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT.
GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

President Joseph Smith will preach a funeral discourse, on the death of Elder King Follet, on Friday, the 5th of April, at the stand, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m.

A NEW CANDIDATE FOR THE PRESIDENCY.

"The Mormon Prophet in the field."—and other announcements of the kind, we find are very plentifully circulated in our exchange papers; but very few of them however, have any opinion on the subject, or if they have, they have not ventured to give them. The Missouri Republican believes that it will be death to Van Buren, and all agree that it must be injurious to the Democratic ranks, inasmuch as it will throw the Mormon vote out of the field.

The "lowly" Lee Co. Democrat has the following:—

"A NEW CANDIDATE IN THE FIELD."—We see from the Nauvoo Neighbor, that Gen. Joseph Smith, the great Mormon Prophet, has become a Candidate for the next Presidency. We do not know whether he intends to submit his claims to the National Convention or not; but, judging from the language of his own Organ, we conclude that he considers himself a full team for all of them."

All that we have to say on this point is, that if superior talent, genius, and intelligence, combined with virtue, integrity and enlarged views, are any guarantee to General Smith's being elected, we think that he will be a "full team of himself."

We copy the following from the Springfield Register:—
GENERAL JOSEPH SMITH A CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT.

"It appears by the Nauvoo Papers that the Mormon Prophet is actually a Candidate for the President. He has sent us his pamphlet, containing an extract of his principles from which it appears that he is up to the hub for an United States Bank and a Protective tariff. On these points, he is much more explicit than Mr. Clay, who will not say that he is for a bank, but talks all the time of restoring a national currency; nor will Mr. Clay say what kind of tariff he is for. He says to the South, that he has not sufficiently examined the present tariff, but that he very likely it could be amended."

Gen. Smith professes no such fastidious delicacy. He comes right out in favor of a bank and a tariff; taking the true Whig ground; and ought to be regarded as the real Whig candidate for President, until Mr. Clay can so far recover from his shuffling and dodging, as to declare his sentiments like a man. At present we can form no opinion of Clay's principles, except as they are professed by his friends in these parts. Clay himself has adopted the notion which was once entertained by an eminent grammarian; who denied that language was intended as a means to express one's ideas; but insisted that it was invented on purpose to hid us in concealing them."

VIRTUE WILL TRIUMPH.

At four overflowing meetings of the Ladies of Nauvoo, Members of the Female Relief Society, (each meeting being composed of different members that all might have the opportunity of expressing their feelings,) held at Gen Smith's large assembly room on Saturdays the 9th and 10th of March 1844. The following preamble and resolutions were read and unanimously adopted at each meeting.

THE VOICE OF INNOCENCE FROM NAUVOO.

The corruption of wickedness which manifested itself in such horrible deformity on the trial of Orasmus F. Bostwick last week, for slandering President Hyrum Smith and the widows of the city of Nauvoo, has awakened all the kindly feelings of female benevolence, compassion and pity, for the sufferer to spread forth the mantle of charity to shield the characters of the virtuous mothers, wives and daughters of Nauvoo, from the blasting breath and poisonous touch of debauches, vagabonds, and rakes, who have jammed themselves into our city to offer strange fire at the shrine of infamy, disgrace and degradation; as they and their kindred spirits have done in all the great cities throughout the world, corrupting their ways on the earth, and bringing woe, poor defenceless women, to wretchedness and ruin.

As such ignoble bond now begins to stain the peccable habitations of the saints, and taint the free air of the only city in the world that pretends to work righteousness in union, as the sine qua non for happiness, joy, and salvation; and as such ungodly wretches, burning or smarting with the sting of their own shame, have doubtless, transported with them, some of the miserable dupes of their licentiousness, for the purpose of defiling the fame of this goodly city; marring the honesty of our mothers; blasting the chastity of widows and wives; and corrupting the virtue of our unsuspecting daughters, it becomes us, in defence of our rights, for the glory of our fathers; for the honor of our mothers; for the happiness of our husbands; and for the welfare of our dear children, to rebuke such an outrage upon the chastity of society; to thwart such a d. n. h. blow at the hallowed marriage covenant; and to ward off such poisoned daggers from the hearts of our innocent daughters, for the honor of Nauvoo; and with indelible ink, upon every such villain: Vitæ perditior! Beware of the wretch! and, so put in every virtuous woman's hand a red, to scourge such tormentors of domestic felicity, with vengeance through the world; curse the man that preys upon female virtue; curse the man that slanders a woman! Let the righteous indignation of insulted innocence and virtue, spur him from society; Let the dignity of the mothers of Israel kick the blood thirsty pimp from the pale of social communion. Let the widows and wives who tread in the footsteps of their quondam mother Eve, drive such fag ends of creation, as was Cain, to the land of Nod, and let the timid daughters of Nauvoo, dread such cankers worse than the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and shun them as the serpent on the land and the shark in the sea. My God! my God! is there not female virtue and valor enough in this city to let such mean men die of the rot;—that the sexton may carry their putrid bodies beyond the limits of the city for fuel, for vultures, eagles and wolves. Refuse them female courtesy; deny them the pleasure of family correspondence and family intercourse; curse the woman that speaks to such rotten flesh, if she knows who they are; curse the man that will harbor them; and curse the lawyer that will stoop from the dignity of his profession, to plead for them! The apologist is as mean as the murderer!

Female virtue is a pearl of great price, and should glitter in the abodes of men, as in the mansions of bliss, for the glory and honor of him, whose image she bears, and whose help meet she is, and every attempt of man to seduce that virtue, is next to murder, a robbery that cannot be restored.

If woman swerves from the rules of righteousness—
"Ruin ensues, reproach and shame;
And one false step bedims her fame.
In vain the loss she may deplore,
In vain review her life before,
With tears she must in anguish see Till God says, 'set that captive free.'"

Many of the distinguished females of Nauvoo, have waded to their present habitations through persecution, sorrow, and death, robbed and insulted and bereaved of husbands and children by the combined powers of priests and spiritual wickedness in high places, out rages of these piercing calamities of man touched the heart of woman with such acerbity of poignancy, as the covenanted slander of O. F. Bostwick, that he could take a half bushel of meal, obtain his wife's purse, and get what accommodation he wanted with almost any woman in the city."

Wo to the wretch that can thus follow the blood stained mobbers of Missouri, in their hellish career, and deal his slander about the streets of Nauvoo, as he may imagine with impunity! Wo to the man or lawyer, that filthifies himself by advocating such rotten hearted raven's rights, or recommends him to the sympathies of any being but Satan.

Has any man a mother in this city? honor says, clear such rubbish from thy door. His any man a wife? benevolence whispers, trap such beasts of the field that they may not worry the flock, nor kill the lambs. Has any man a widowed mother? humanity seems to caution him—thy mother is in danger, protect her, from the stench of such corruption! Has any man, daughters? the voice of reason compels him to exclaim: There is a wolf in the path, beware! Has any man, sisters! the blood of his kindred says, evil be to him that evil thinks; and let the whole virtuous female population of the city, with one voice, declare that the seducer of female chastity, the slanderer of female character, or the defamer of the character of the heads of the church, or the canker worms of our husband's peace; the prostitute, or their pimps, whether in the character of elite, lawyer, doctor, or cicisero, shall have no place in our houses, in our affections, or in our society.

Resolved unanimously, That Joseph Smith, the Mayor of the city, be tendered our thanks for the able and manly manner in which he defended injured innocence in the late trial of O. F. Bostwick for slandering President Hyrum Smith, and "almost all the women of the city."

Resolved unanimously, That we view with unqualified disapprobation and scorn the conduct of any man or woman, whether in word or deed, that reflects dishonor upon the poor persecuted mothers, widows, wives and daughters of the saints of Nauvoo; they have borne aspersions, slander and hardships enough; forbearance has ceased to be a virtue, and retaliation, like the dagger or the bowl, ought to close the lips of such cowardly assassins.

Resolved unanimously, That while we render credence to the doctrines of Paul, that neither the man is without the woman; neither is the woman without the man in the Lord, yet we raise our voices and hands against John C. Bennett's "spiritual wife system," as a scheme of profligates to seduce women; and that they harp upon it, wish to make it popular for the convenience of their own cupidity; wherefore, while the marriage bed, undefiled is honorable, let polygamy, bigamy, fornication, adultery, and prostitution, be frowned out of the hearts of honest men to drop in the gulf of fallen nature, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched! and let all the saints say, Amen!

EMMA SMITH, Pres.
H. M. ELLS, Sec. pro tem.

DIED.—In this city, on the 9th of March inst., Elder King Follet, whose death was occasioned by the breaking of a rope and the falling of a log of rock up on the diseased while man above were in the act of lowering it.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Elder Follet was one of those who bore the burden in common with others of his brethren, in the days when men's faith was put to the test. He was a native of Vermont, and moved many years since into the State of Ohio, county of Cuyahoga. Thence, for the first time he heard the gospel preached, and, like the Bereans of old, searched the scriptures to see if these things were so, regarding neither the scoffs nor threats of an opposing and misinformed world, he united with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the spring of 1831, and has been a sharer in the afflictions through which the saints have passed from that time until the time of his death. He shared in the violence of the Missouri persecutions; was cast into prison, and endured many months imprisonment; and after long delay, obtained a trial on the charges preferred against him, and honorably discharged, being acquitted of all the crimes that a band of wicked persecutors could charge him with.

All the persecutions he endured only tended to strengthen his faith and confirm his hope; and he died as he had lived, rejoicing in the hope of future felicity. Having united with the church in the forty-first year of his age, he filled up the prime of his life in the service of his God, and went to rest in his fifty-sixth year; being fifty five years seven months and fourteen days old when he slept the sleep of death.

So the righteous pass and so they sleep, until the mandate of Him, for whom they suffer, and in whom they trust, shall call them forth to glory, honor, immortality and eternal life.

[COMMUNICATED.]

In compliance with his secret promptings of my own bosom, and for the consolation of the bereaved family,—with whom I have often communed within the consecrated penetralia of domestic society,—I offer a few reflections upon the death of the deceased—Brother King Follet.

Brother Follet was a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints—firm and uncompromising in the doctrines and principles of eternal truth—and he died triumphing in the liberties of the gospel. He shared in the persecutions of Missouri—was ever at his post in defence of injured innocence and our ragged law—ever ready to lay down his life, if necessary, for the cause and the "witness of Jesus." On his death bed, he might very appropriately have exclaimed, in the language of the Apostle Paul: "I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith: Henceforth is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Awake!—you mourning bereaved ones!—awake to rejoicing! Let your minds engage a higher theme of contemplation; break forth into gladness, and anticipate the glories of the resurrection; until, swallowed up in excellence and hopes of sublime exaltations, your souls struggle to be released from the thraldom of encumbering clay, and leap into a world of happiness, contentment and joy. Behold him, who has fallen asleep, awake to glory and eternal youth, when the barriers of the tomb shall be burst asunder and the sleep of death be broken by the trumpet of God. He comes forth to immortality—his body quickened by the spirit of the Lord Jesus—no more to drink from the bitter cup of sickness and pain; but filled with the beatitude and power of Omnipotence, he

Why mourn for friends when they fall asleep in Christ? With that illustrious train of worthies who have been "beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God," they will come forth from the solitude of the grave, to live and reign, kings and priests with God, a thousand years, in the Millennium, when the curse will be removed from the earth—when all creation will be renovated, restored to its primitive state, and clothed in the habiliments of primeval bloom and pristine grandeur—as in the morning of creation, when the "morning stars sang together, when the great diurnal illuminant forced" from the Creator the strong declaration that the light He had made was good, and all created things smiled under the full and benign jurisprudence of the Deity. To die is but complying with the edicts of heaven. Dissolution must ensue; the corporeal system of man must sink into torpidity and decay, in order that the mortal tenement can be regenerated, and all the corruptible particles of the human system be extracted in the grave, that both body and soul may be united in the resurrection in a state of immortality, free from sorrow, pain and distress, and endowed with minds refined and capacious, that they can enjoy the society of angels, comprehend the principles of Jehovah, and mingle in the beatitudes of heaven.

Brother Follet's funeral was attended with the highest honors and most marked respect. A procession, a mile in length, followed his remains to the "narrow house." The emblems and paraphernalia of the "fraternity," that glittered along the lengthened line, showed that his "fraternity" had entitled him to the benefits of Masonry, under the honors of which, in his Masonic form he was consigned to the solitude of the grave.

Honored brother, rest in peace!

MOST AWFUL AND LAMENTABLE CATASTROPHE!

Instantaneous Death by the Bursting of one of the large Guns belonging to the U. States Ship, Princeton, of Secretary Upshur, Secretary Gilmer, Commodore Kennon, and Virgil Maxey, Etc.

The National Intelligencer, of Tuesday, the 25th ult., contains the following interesting intelligence, which will cast a gloom over the whole Union:

"In the whole course of our lives it has never fallen to our lot to annouce to our readers a more shocking calamity—chooking in all its circumstances and circumstances—than that which occurred on board the United States Ship Princeton, yesterday afternoon, whilst under way in the river Potomac, fourteen or fifteen miles below this city.

Yesterday was the day appointed by the courtesy and hospitality of Captain Stockton, Commander of the Princeton, for receiving as visitors to this fine ship, (lying off Alexandria,) a great number of guests, with their families, liberally and numerous invited to spend the day on board. The day was most favorable, and the company was large and brilliant, of both sexes; not less, probably, in number, than four hundred, among whom were the President of the United States, the heads of the several departments and their families. At a proper hour after the arrival of the expected guests, the vessel got under way and proceeded down the river, to some distance below Fort Washington. During the passage down, one of the large guns on board (carrying a ball of 225 pounds) was fired more than once, exhibiting the great power and capacity of that formidable weapon of war.

The ladies had partaken of a sumptuous repast; the gentlemen had succeeded them at the table, and some of them had left the vessel was on her return up the river, opposite to the fort, where Captain Stockton consented to fire another shot from the same gun, around and near which, to observe its effects, many persons had gathered, by no means so many as on similar discharges, in the morning, the ladies who then thronged the deck being, on this fatal occasion, almost all between decks, and out of the reach of harm.

The gun was fired. The explosion was followed, before the smoke cleared away, so as to observe its effect by shrieks of woe which announced a dire calamity. The gun had burst, at a point three or four feet from the breech, and scattered death and desolation around.

Mr. Upshur, Secretary of State, Mr. Gilmer, Secretary of the Navy, Commodore Kennon, one of its gallant officers, Virgil Maxey, lately returned from a diplomatic residence at the Hague. Mr. Gardner, of N. York, (formerly a member of the Senate from that State) were among the slain. Besides these, seventeen seamen were very much wounded, several of them badly and probably mortally. Among those stunned by the explosion, we learn not seriously injured, were Capt. Stockton himself, Col. Benton, of the Senate; Lieut. Hunt, of the Princeton; W. D. Robinson, of Georgetown. Other persons also were perhaps more or less injured, of whom, in the horror and confusion of the moment, no certain account could be obtained. The above are believed, however, to comprise the whole of the persons known to the public who were killed or dangerously or seriously hurt.

The scene upon the deck may more easily be imagined than described. Nor can the imagination picture to itself the half of its horrors. Wives, widowed in an instant by the murderous blast!

Daughters smitten with the heart-rending sight of their father's lifeless corpse!

The wailings of the agonized females! The piteous grief of the unhurt but heart stricken spectators! The wounded seamen borne down below! The agonizing and quivering lips of their brave and honest comrades, who tried in vain to subdue or conceal their feelings! No language can depict a scene like this.

The bodies of the killed remained on board the ship last night, they will be brought to the city this morning.

Later to us from a member of the press, dated on the evening of the 25th ult., after giving a statement of the killed says:—

"The boat is now at Alexandria, the Captain is badly wounded. Col. Benton is reported hurt.

Mrs. Gilmer and the Misses Gardner, are on board and not conscious of their loss, when our informant left, as they were prevented from coming up. You can form little idea of the deep distress that pervades the city."

From the Baltimore Sun, we gather the following additional items:

The Hon. J. W. Tyson, second assistant Postmaster General, had his hat cut, and a piece of the gun, about six inches in length, quietly rested on the top of his head.

The Hon. Mr. Wickliffe had started to go on deck with Judge Upshur, when some one below called—detained him for a moment, and thereby saved his life.

The Secretary of War, to avoid the crack of the gun, advised the President to go below where they were sitting when the calamity happened.

The legs of Messrs. Upshur and Gilmer are shockingly mutilated.

Capt. Stockton, as soon as the shock overwhelmed him, caught his chin, then clasped his hands up each side of his face and was in the act of leaping overboard, when he was caught by the Hon. J. W. Tyson.

The Madisonian says:—"The breech of the gun was severed, and carried away the bulkhead of the ship opposite to it. It was the iron fragments it is supposed, which struck down so many on board, and who could not have been behind the gun. The accident took place about sunset. A steamboat from Alexandria, which was passing, was sent back to town, and returned with several surgeons."

The same number of our paper which contains the unfortunate Gilmer's address to his constituents, bears upon it also an account of his death."

The Manufacture of Sugar.—In this country, where art is probably most perfect, requires much labor and skill. The processes are too long for details in this place, we therefore give only the outlines. The reeds, when ripe, are cut off at a joint near the roots, and lie a few days to ferment; the leaves are cleared and the stems tied in bundles and conveyed by mules to the mill. This consists of three iron fluted cylinders placed horizontally or perpendicularly, closely fitted through which the reeds are passed twice, in order to express all their juice. This runs into a cistern and is drained from thence into the boiler, and immediately submitted to heat, with the addition of lime which imbues the juice; it otherwise becomes acid in a few minutes. The lime assists the separation of the feculent matter in the juice, and the heat is just sufficient to cause the impurities to collect on the surface to be skimmed off. It is then conveyed into other boilers and a rapid boiling is produced, to evaporate the water and reduce the juice to a consistency for granulation on cooling. It is then transferred to a wooden cooler or shallow trays where a part concretes into a crystallized mass, and the molasses is conducted off. It is then put into hogheads with the lower head perforated with holes, and placed over a cistern, so that the molasses may run through. The casks are then filled up with sugar and reported under the name of muscavado or raw sugar.

This is the state in which it is exported, but it is often ground over by grocers and better fitted for sale. On some plantations the sugar is submitted to another process called claying, which is to place it in tunnel shaped moulds, as done in our sugar refineries, with the small end downwards, and the upper one covered with wet clay, the water of which soaks through the sugar and removes any remaining molasses. This then is called clayed sugar, and is commonly divided, when taken from the mould, into three parts, the upper part being relatively the whitest and best.

The quantity of juice obtained in some mills is 10,000 gals. per day; but this, of course, quality of the cane, &c. Commonly every five gallons of juice yield five or six pounds of sugar, and is afforded by 100 full grown reeds. The fuel used in boiling is supplied by the clayed cane itself after the juice is expressed. The molasses thus drained off, and the uncrystallizable portion of the juice, is exported for domestic use, or with the skimmings, &c. is fermented and distilled into rum. In favorable seasons the treacle forms, proportionally a small part. The amount of spirit produced from this is five or six gallons for every 100 weight of sugar.

The Route to Oregon.—The Emigrants to Oregon, says a Western paper have a long route to travel, much of the way over mountains and barren deserts, and but few resting places—the distance is set down as follows:—From Independence, on the frontier of Missouri to Fort Laramie, 750 miles; from Laramie to Fort Hall, 550 miles; from Fort Hall to Fort Wallah Wallah, 450 miles; from Fort Wallah Wallah to Fort Vancouver, 350 miles.

Bicknell's Reporter.

The Panama Canal.—The New York Journal of Commerce has the following, taken from the Bermuda Royal Gazette of the 30th January:—"A gentleman connected with the South Pacific Steam Navigation Company, proceeded to England by the Trent, which sailed from Hamilton on the 28th ult., with some further information on the subject of connecting that company's operations with those of the West India Royal Mail Lines, and the opening of a Canal across the Isthmus of Panama. At present, the furthest northern point touched at by the Pacific company is to bring the letters and passengers from the western coast of South America to Panama, and then across to the Atlantic, either by carriage or land communication."

The Wire Bridge Tested.—The new wire Bridge over the Miami canal, was very thoroughly tested as a frame building about 30 by 20 feet, was moved over it, without perceptibly disturbing its easy swinging position. We observe that nearly all the stone wagons from the adjoining hills, and the heaviest teams prefer this bridge, on account of its great strength. We have no doubt that in a very few years, that wire bridges, as their advantages become more known, will be generally adapted for crossing the rivers of the West.

The Treasury warrant in favor of Gen. Andrew Jackson, for 2700 dollars, was made out and completed yesterday, (Feb. 17th) and forwarded by special messenger to the Hermitage.

From the Quincy (Ill.) Herald.

Mr. Editor—

As I was perusing the Whig of the 28th of February last, my eye caught some remarks made by the editor of that paper, justifying himself for publishing an article from the New York Tribune, reflecting severely upon the Mormon leaders. I read the article alluded to, after which I made the following observations:

I have heard it observed by medical gentlemen, that if a person wish to commit suicide by taking poison, he will fail to accomplish his object if he take a very extravagant dose, for it being too strong for the stomach to retain, it meets with an immediate resistance, and is thrown off before time will allow it to be conveyed to the blood. So with the article in the Whig. It is so strongly tinged with the taint of falsehood, slander and reproach, that it can do the Mormons no harm; for every person who has been to Nauvoo and witnessed there the fruits of industry and unobscured peace which exhibit themselves both in the city and on the wide spread prairie, must confess that the statements in the above named article are false; and how the editor should be ignorant of the facts, I am at a loss to determine, for they have not grown in a corner!

He says of the Mormons, "we are sorry we cannot please them," but he need not be. We are not sorry, and why? Because Christ has said, "If ye were of the world, the world would love you; but as ye are not of the world, I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hates you."

I was very glad he had modesty enough to qualify the terms, "Mormon friends," with "or rather acquaintances;" for numerous as he must have been that he had forfeited all claim to our friendship by giving publicity to an article which we very believe he knew to be false, this conscience smote him with guilt when he called us friends, and therefore modestly altered it to "acquaintances." We would inform the editor of the Whig, that considering the way in which not only the Mormons, but several other worthy citizens have to feel the lash of his abusive tongue, we shall not be very zealous if he leaves out all those endearing words, expressions of friendship and good will when he talks about us, neither shall we feel ourselves very highly complimented if he put them in. If we are wrong, his course will only reclaim us; but if we are right, the flood of abuse and scandal against us, which he endorses for truth, must sooner or later recoil upon his own head, and associate him and give him a place with these "who love and make a lie."

He is very jealous of religious and political power being united. But I would ask, does not every wise legislative body invoke the aid of a religious power to order their deliberations in wisdom, and direct their political course with prudence? If not, why all these Chaplains in our legislative halls, in the army and in the navy? But probably the editor of the Whig would say: "It is true, in all Christian governments, there are men selected of acknowledged worth and piety to ask wisdom upon the State and National councils, and also blessings upon the army and navy; yet say he, it is all a sham and mock ceremony; for God were to give a revelation of wisdom and knowledge by the Holy Ghost, as by an Angel to any of these Chaplains, and they should declare it in the National Councils, it would not be regarded at all only as the height of extravagance, presumption and folly. So you see it is all a sham." Yes, Mr. Editor, your view is, no doubt, correct. They are so self evident for me to contradict. But Joseph Smith, more sincere and consistent than they all, pray to God for wisdom, receive it by revelation, and then as a test of his implicit confidence therein, acts upon it.

Would the editor have us to understand that there is one department in heaven to guide the destinies of the political world, and another directing the affairs of religion? If so, he is much mistaken. There is one God who presides over the destinies of all nations and individuals, both religiously and politically, and numbers the hairs of all our heads. I would ask if the editor of the Whig ever prays after the following manner: "Thy kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;" if he does, he virtually asks God to destroy the distinction of Church and State on earth; for that distinction is not recognized in heaven. With God, politics and religion are both one, but not with us. He also prays that God may establish a government on the earth like that in heaven, and that the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our God and of his Christ. Church must not triumph over State, but actually swallow it up like Moses' rod swallowed up the rods of the Egyptians. If this be not so, the kingdom of God can never come. Satan can never be bound, the millennial glory can never appear upon this world, Christ never reign king of nations, as he now does king of Saints, neither can death be swallowed up in victory. But Christ will reign, and put down all rule, and authority and power.

Whoever, therefore, will always labor to keep up a distinction of Church and State, must oppose his own prayers, fight against the decree of heaven, and perpetrate strife and confusion in the earth. Whoever are to be the honored instruments in carrying forward the ark of this covenant; and affecting this union, time must determine: whether the Monks, the Methodists or Mormons, or any of them; yet it will certainly be that people whom the Lord shall choose.

But to close. It may sometime happen to him who freely indulges in abusing a virtuous, industrious, and sincere people; a people who have been made poor by cruelty and oppression a people who are trying to live by all laudable industry, who have faced opposition in almost every form, and waded through "much tribulation;" a people against whom the popular cry is raised, mingled with vengeance and extermination, and whose voice can seldom be heard in reply, that he fall into the same difficulties in which he tries to involve them, that he die in poverty and disgrace when no relatives can lament, nor friends bury.

A FRIEND TO THE MORMONS.

At the Koppel meeting in Dublin on 20th Jan. a gentleman stood up and introduced to the meeting a friend of his from New York, Mr. William Wallace, the distinguished American orator. (A voice from the crowd: "Three cheers for America.") This demand having been complied with, and silence restored, Mr. Wallace spoke at some length.

It is confidently asserted that the Irish Repealers cannot be sentenced. There is a flaw in the indictment. Although convicted and brought up for judgment, the traversers will be discharged on the legal defect being made known.

One Drum has been committed to Omagh Gaol, County Tyrone, Ireland, for sedition. He said that "The Queen ought to be shot, and O'Connell put in her place."

The Government in the Repeal trial, have rested their case mainly on the evidence of certain parties belonging to the "fourth estate"—the press.

Official Announcement.—The Madisonian of Friday announces that the convention for the adjustment of claims of citizens of the United States upon the Government of Peru, was concluded on the 17th of last March. The sum which that Government has agreed to pay is $300,000 dollars. It is to be paid at Lima, in ten equal instalments.—Interest is to be paid at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, to be computed from the first of Jan, 1842.

EARTHQUAKES.

At Condrick, in Perthshire, a smart shock was felt on the 14th ult. The day was calm and frosty, with sunshine. The accompanying sound was very loud. At Aberfeldy, on the same day, two shocks were felt which lasted several moments. A letter from Rome states that several slight shocks of earthquake had been felt there, but no injury had arisen. The German papers state that two more earthquakes had taken place at Ragusa on the 22d ult.—Scottish Paper.

THE LATE EARTHQUAKE IN THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.

It is remarkable that the men working when the phenomenon happened in the mines in the island of Sark, more than 400 feet beneath the surface, neither heard any noise, nor felt the least motion of the earth around them, although the effects above ground were of a very alarming character. The person engaged in the steam whim, house, observed the machinery shaking most violently, and he thought the boiler had burst, the shock being so tremendously awful. At Cherbourg the houses were much shaken and the furniture displaced, and many articles were thrown down. No personal injury, however, attended the concussion.

The Comet.—Sir James South has received a letter from Professor Schumacher, stating that the comet recently discovered by M. Faye in the constellation of Orion, actually belongs to our system. In a postscript to his letter, the professor says that its period is six years and 219 days. It is much to be regretted, says Sir James South, in a letter to a contemporary, owing to extraordinary unfavorable weather, which, since its discovery, seems to have prevailed not only Great Britain but even Europe, the observations of it are few. Since the 30th November, he has seen it but once; and in Ireland neither the Earl of Rosse nor Dr. Robinson obtained even a glimpse of it.

Dreadful Coal-Mine Explosion.—A terrible coal-pit explosion, accompanied by fearful loss of human life, occurred in the vicinity of Whitehaven, between the hours of five and six on Thursday evening week. The dreadful event took place at a colliery called Duke's Pitt; at the time it was in full operation, and, as it was supposed, from the fire-damp becoming ignited and exploding in the lowermost gallery in the pit, where no fewer than sixteen miners were at work, and eleven horses, all of whom were instantly hurled into eternity. Most of the unfortunate sufferers, we regret to say, are married men, and have left large families, totally unprovided for, to lament their dreadful fate. Up to ten o'clock on Friday morning only eight out of the sixteen bodies had been recovered.—Liverpool (Eng.) Advertiser.

OATH.

The Philadelphia Sun states that a man named Zimmerman, residing in Huntington, in proving an arbitration with his neighbor, when affirming in relation to his account, said: "If what I have stated be not true, I hope the Almighty will send me to hell!" The words were scarcely uttered, when he fell over and expired.

RUINS OF INDIAN GREATNESS.

The surplus wealth of India, that used to be the admiration of the world, is now a mere ghost, magnificent stone or brick terraces, some of them capable of containing from six to eight thousand people, enormous massive bridges, splendid mosques and temples, is all gone; it has disappeared entirely. All the towns in India, with a very few exceptions, are in ruins. Delhi is surrounded by ruins; Agra, Bodanpur, Anandgarh, have immense suburbs in ruins. The Deccan is a heap of ruins. Many towns in Central India that had their hundreds of thousands of inhabitants, are now literally without one, and are swarming with leopards, tigers, elks, and buffaloes. In deep forests you stumble upon Hindoo temples, Mohammedan gateways, stone talks eight hundred yards square, built walls of large dimensions, scores of acres of burying grounds, and all the other concomitants and proofs of wealth, and power and population. Malabar would never have written his too little valued answers, had they been in India. India is a large forest, with a great many cultivated spots. India—ray it after due consideration—could contain and support five times its present population with ease; yet it is unquestionably the poorest country in the known world. To the state of the wealth and resources of the original Hindoo monarchs imagination can assign no limits. The more I think on the subject, the more I am confirmed.

MILLERISM.

It appears from the Boston Post that the second advent cause is flourishing in that city with as much zeal as it did during the early part of the past year. Mr. Miller is preaching at the great Tabernacle, to crowded audiences, night and day. The Post says: "From the great number of people who daily throng the Tabernacle and listen to what is there said, there appears to be no abatement of zeal or earnestness in this cause, and no want of confidence in the principles held out, although the expiration of the time (the ensuing spring) is so near at hand. Mr. Miller appears to have fully recovered his health, and to have renewed his youth and vigor."

The proselytes of Miller are also holding forth in this city, as well as in the principal cities of the west. The Cleveland (Ohio) Herald, of the 23d ult., has the following: "As the end of time, according to Mr. Miller, draws near at hand, his disciples profess to discern the future more clearly. The Rev. Mr. Fitch, of this city is now preaching the doctrine of annihilation of the wicked; and we learn that a portion of the second advent hearers have embraced the same views."

HOW DID IT GET THERE?

A gentleman exhibited to us a piece of cedar, the history of which is as follows: "In digging a well on the property of Smith, Brothers, & Co., at Bunker Hill, Illinois, at the distance of fifty-three feet beneath the surface, they came to a cedar log, embedded in the earth, and extending across the well. It was cut off; was found to be five or six inches through, and was in a state of perfect preservation. The town of Bunker Hill, as many persons know, is situated in the middle of a large and level prairie, and the gentleman who has it in his possession, who is a bit of a Yankee, wants to know how that log of cedar got out there?"—Ex. Paper.

SHOCK OF AN EARTHQUAKE IN NEW JERSEY.

We see by the Trenton papers that on Saturday night there were several distinct jars of the earth felt at that place. On Sunday morning, between 2 and 7 o'clock, at Morristown, two of the shakes jarred some of the dwelling houses so much as to wake up the families. The doors and windows rattled distinctly. Soon after daybreak, a crack of some hundred yards in length was discovered in the earth, in the vicinity of Gibbon's new Hotel, the opening being about a fourth of an inch in width.

THE GIPSEY—WHO ARE THEY?

The following extracts are taken from a long article in the London Christian Examiner, written by a gentleman of great literary research. Whoever has read Borrow's Bible in Spain will at once recognize the character of the Gipsies, Gitano, or Rhomas—all of which are synonymous terms: "And whom have we seen, with the mark of fugitive imprinted on his brow's yes, with that more infamous brand-mark of vagabond also; but one who strongly resembles, while yet he widely differs from the descendant of the patriarch Judah? He who has travelled on the continent of Europe, has met with him in every European land. He who has visited Asia has met with him there. He who has visited Africa and America has met with him there. And what British, or Spanish, or Welsh, or Irish child, knows not the swarthy hue, remembers not the dark and piercing eye, of the ever restless, wandering tribes of the Gitanas, as they are called in this country the Gipsy race—a race whose origin none can tell you, and of which none are more ignorant than themselves. Ask them whence they came? They know not. From whence they sprang? They know not. What is their religion? They have none. Whom do they worship? They are without God in the world. What is their language? That of the nations among whom they sojourn. Are they Jews? They tell you they are not. Are they Gentiles? No. Like the Jews they are wanderers without a home. Like the Jews, they are mingled among all people, and yet distinct from all, despised, suspected, persecuted, and hated, without a country, without a king; with nationality unbroken either by time, persecution, or admixture of blood; with a spirit of clanishness or brotherhood that nothing can quench; with a distrust of the Gentiles that nothing can overcome. But the Jew is a worshiper of Jehovah—the Gitanas, or Rhomas, know him not. The Jew professes, and venerates, and studies, the ancient oracles of revealed truth—the Rhomas scarcely knows that such oracles exist. The Jew would rather die than defile himself with what to him is ceremonially unclean—the Rhoma will feed on the most loathsome food, even that which is torn, or which hath died of itself, eating his fill of bread among the Gentiles, and to fill his belly with the husks that swine do eat. Now then, can these wanderers be of common origin? The Jew, though cursed, has been still intrusted with the oracles of God, and has therefore retained his name and a zeal for his worship; a knowledge of the language of his forefathers, of the history of the country from whence he has been driven; and a hope, an undying, an unquenchable hope, of one day returning to that land, around which hover all his thoughts, and whose very dust is dear to him as the gold of Ophir. But the Gitanas were sent forth to wander without the written word, and consequently he has, and must have, lost all trace of the name and character of the God of his fathers; all knowledge of the country from whence he came; of the parental source from whence he sprang; of the language in which his father spoke; of the meaning of his judicial wanderings; and of the glorious hopes that the word, the promise, and the oath of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, hold out to the scattered tribes, whither of the house of Judah or of Israel.

Of these mysterious wanderers, be they who they may, (and who they are, I presume not to say, although I firmly believe that they represent the house of Israel,) there are not fewer than three millions scattered over the face of the earth, and of the well known tribes of Judah and Benjamin about ten millions more—each testifying, though in different ways, to the truth of a faithful but offended God."

Terra Haute, Ind., Feb. 24.

Destructive Fire.—About 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon last, one of the smoke houses belonging to the extensive Pork Establishment of Mr. Joseph Miller, of this place, was discovered to be on fire, and so tremendous was the volume of flame bursting from the smoke house, containing upwards of 100,000 lbs. of meat, that any attempt to save the building was deemed useless. Empty three or four adjoining warehouses; every exertion of the multitude was made. But meat in the principal building, to a very heavy amount, greatly damaged, and perhaps a very large portion an entire loss.

All the meat in the smoke house from whence the fire first issued, destroyed, and we believe also a second smoke house, on the north end of the main building. One frame dwelling, the main packing house building, with three warehouses, were entirely destroyed. The destruction of property was very great, although the hogheads, barrels and kegs saved, seemed to cover near an acre. Every effort was made to save the property that could be expected. We believe there was no insurance on any of the property either buildings or pork, except the meat in one smoke house, belonging to Mr. Matlack, of Putnam, which was not injured by the fire.

The loss of property is very great, and has been estimated to amount to some $27,000.

Of this amount Mr. Jacob E. Early, (with some eastern partners, in the pork business) may be considered the heaviest losers. Their loss is estimated at twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. Alexander Mc. Gregor will probably be the loser about $1000.

Mr. Joseph Miller, the proprietor of the establishment losses heavily altogether it is supposed $8,000.

There was also about the establishment a large quantity of pork, belonging to Mr. Dudley, of Ohio, Mr. Sandford, of Illinois and Mr. Matlack, of Putnam, and perhaps others—all saved—or at most, losses very trifling.—Wabash Courier.

OREGON.

In the Senate, on the 19th ult. Mr. Archer, from the committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill for the purchase of certain copies of the History of California, and the other territories on the northwest coast of America. [1500 copies, at a price not exceeding $200 per copy] which was read. An animated debate ensued, which was continued during the morning hour, without being brought to a close, and had not been resumed at our latest dates.

On the 22d, the Senate took up the Resolutions heretofore introduced by Mr. Semple, requesting the President to notify the British Government of the desire of the United States to annul so much of the subsisting agreement between the two countries as allows a joint occupation of the Oregon Territory. A very animated discussion ensued, which was continued on the following day—our latest date—without being brought to a close.

DROWNED.—On Sunday last, William Burch, aged about 23 years. Mr. Burch was crossing the Mississippi in a canoe in company with two others, from the loway side, when their boat capsized.

From earliest childhood, he practiced successfully the art of healing; and in defiance of opposition, by friends and relatives, he succeeded in studying the art and science of medicine; and after untiring industry and immense research, and after having reached riper years, and traveled among numerous tribes of Indians, and visited many and various countries, Dr. James M. Martineau is fully persuaded that he has now realized his fondest expectations; that the object of all his toil, labor and hope, has been accomplished; and that he will be regarded by all future generations as the true Philanthropist; as having been the instrument, under the direction of an overruling Providence, of rendering and having rendered the greatest good to the greatest number, will be cheerfully conceded.

POETRY.

From the New York Mirror.
Here is something written on the top of the "ten-hill" of a whole tide of thought and mournful experience—excellent to our finding
The world for sale.—Hang out the sign,
Call every traveler here to me;
Who'll buy this brave estate of mine,
And let my weary spirit flee?
'Tis going—yes, I mean to fling
The trouble from my soul away;
I'll sell it, who'll care to bring?
The world at auction here to-day!
It is a glorious thing to see—
Ah, it has cheered me so sore!
It is not what it seems to be,
For 'tis a power, a soul more.
Come, turn it over and view it well;
I would not have you purchase dear;
'Tis going—going!—must it be?
Who bids?—Who'll buy the splendid tear?
Here's Wealth in glittering heaps of gold;
Who bids?—But let me tell you fair,
A hairet let me have in store,
Who'll buy the heavy burden of care?
And here, spread out in bread domain,
A golden landscape all may trace;
Hill, cottage, tree, field, hill and plain;
Who'll buy himself a rural pace?
Here's Love, the most potent spell
That beauty flings around the heart;
I know it is power, a soul more well,
'Tis going—Love and I must part!
Must part?—What can I more with Love?
All over the enchantment reign;
Who'll buy the pleasures, dying love,
A breath of life, a storm of pain?
And Friendship—rarest gem of earth—
Who'll care to find the jewel hid?
Faint, flicker, faint, and little worth—
Who bids for Friendship—as it is?
'Tis going—going!—Beware the call!
Once, twice, and thrice—'Tis very low
'Twas once my hope, my stay, my life—
But now the broken staff must go!
Fame, hold the brilliant meteor light;
How dazzling every gliding beam!
Ye millions, now the land to buy,
How much for Fame?—How much for Fame?
Hear how it thunders—Would you stand
On high Olympus, far renowned,
Now purchase, and a world command,
And be with a world's curse crowned!
Sweet star of Hope with ray to shine
In every sad foreboding breast,
Save this depending one of mine—
Who bids for Hope—as it is?
Ah, were not mine a bankrupt life,
This treasure should my soul sustain;
But hope and I are now at strife,
Nor ever may unite again.
Ambition, fashion, show and pride,
A part from all, I ever now;
Grief, in an overwhelming tide,
Has taught my heart to bow,
By death's stern altar; all bereft,
I weep, yet humbly kiss the rod;
The best of all I still have left—
My Faith, my Bible, and my God.

[From the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.]
MR. CALHOUN YET IN THE FIELD.—After reading the letter of Mr. Calhoun, we thought there was evidently a wish on the part of the author to leave the impression on the minds of his friends that he was entirely willing to run for the Presidency notwithstanding the withdrawal of his name from the Baltimore Convention, provided those friends thought proper to make a demonstration in his favor.
In this opinion we are quite confirmed by the following extract from an editorial article of the Anderson Gazette, a paper published in his district, and devoted to his support: "The Gazette, in a notice of a Whig meeting which was recently held at Anderson, C. H., alludes to the remarks of the two speakers thus:
"We think that Captain Reed and Dr.
Butler are both mistaken in supposing that Mr. Calhoun is withdrawn from the Presidency. He will not permit his name to go before the Democratic Convention at Baltimore, but we hope that the Baltimore Convention will not be regarded by a Van Buren Convention.
A demonstration is making at the north in favor of Mr. Calhoun, Gen. Cass, Mr.
Tyler, Commodore Stewart, and Colonel Johnson, by the respective friends, independent of the decrees of the Baltimore Convention. This proposes a convention at Philadelphia on the 14th of July, next, delegates to be elected by districts, and a nomination made from the above list.
We think it not improbable that Van Buren may yet be rained off the track, and if the Philadelphia convention does not nominate a candidate, we go for South Carolina casting her vote for John Cal-well Calhoun."

GEN. JACKSON'S FINE.
The following is a copy of the bill which recently passed both Houses of Congress, refunding the $1,000 fine to Gen. Jackson. The bill passed in the shape it was originally introduced into the House of Representatives by the Hon. Charles J. Ingersoll.

AN ACT to refund the fine imposed on General Andrew Jackson.
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the sum of one thousand dollars, paid by General Andrew Jackson, as a fine imposed on him at New Orleans, the thirty-first day of March, Anno Domini one thousand eight hundred and fifteen, be repaid to him, together with the interest, at the rate of six per centum a year since then, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.
J. W. JONES,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
WILLIAM MANGUM,
President of the Senate.
Approved, Feb. 16, 1844.

REMEDY FOR FILMS ON THE EYE.
A correspondent of the New England Farmer gives the following recipe for removing films from the eyes of animals, of the efficacy of which we have no doubt.
Several years since a son of ours had films on his eyes, which we removed by dropping a small portion of molasses on his eye-lids when asleep, for three or four nights in succession. He was so restless, and resisted the application so resolutely when awake that we had to avail ourself of the opportunity offered by his slumbers to apply the remedy.—Am. Farmer.
"Films."—Perhaps all your readers do not know the easiest, as well as most effectual remedy for removing a film from the eye of an animal. It is simply to put a tea-spoonful of molasses on the eye ball.
I have relieved oxen, horses, cows and sheep in this manner, and know of no other equal to it.

the annexation of Texas to the U. States, and the courts of the state of Texas, in all their adjudications upon the aforesaid litigations, shall be governed by the present existing Constitution and laws of the Republic of Texas so far as they apply to the same; and in all cases whatsoever, either civil or criminal, for or against any citizens of Texas, for causes heretofore existing, the judicial tribunals of the state of Texas shall in like manner have the entire, final, and only jurisdiction.

Sec. 7. Be it further resolved, that the President of the United States appoint, of the citizens of the state of Texas, one brigade of officers in the standing army of the United States, (to wit) one Brevet Brigade General, and all additional officers necessary for the command of one brigade of regular troops.
Sec. 9. Be it further resolved, that the state of Texas shall be entitled to two the Federal Government shall have and exercise all the rights in the state of Tex-mence in the state of Texas as declared annexed to and become a part of that Union.

Sec. 11. Be it further resolved, that the Commissioners be appointed by joint ballot of both houses of Congress, at the present session, with a salary of dollars each authorized and required to lay before the President and both houses of Congress of the United States of America this resolution; and it shall be the duty of the said Commissioners, as soon as practicable, to report to the Executive of this Republic the action which may be had by the President and the Congress of the United States of America upon said

Sec. 12. Be it further resolved, that it is hereby made the duty of the Executive of this Republic, so soon as he receives the report of the Commissioners, as contemplated in the eleventh section of this resolution, to lay the same before the Congress of this Republic; and if not in session at the time of the reception of said report by the Executive of this Republic immediately by proclamation to convene the Congress, and lay said report before them as made to him by said commissioners, as provided for in this resolution for their consideration.

LATER FROM THE PACIFIC.
By a passenger on board the brig
American, which arrived at this port Monday from Carthage, we learn that there was an attempt at revolution in Limbo, on the 13th of November, the result of which was doubtful when he left, but which looked serious. The President had left the city, to put down the insurgents, who were headed by Gen. Castella, and were marching towards Lima, with a determination to possess themselves of it, and put their General in the Presidential chair, which adds our informant, it seemed very likely that they would do.
The naval news had previously reached us via Boston.
From Rio Janeiro.—We learn from a gentleman who came passenger in the bark Catherine, which arrived last evening from Rio Janeiro that it was expected that the city of Montevideo would be compelled to capitulate in a few days, owing, in a great measure, to the scarcity of provisions. Considerable fighting had taken place between the belligerents.
There had been no settlement of difficulties at Rio Grande. All was quiet in the neighboring provinces. Business was extremely dull at Rio Janeiro. American produce very plenty, and no demand.

IRELAND.
A FLAW IN THE INDICTMENT.
The Liverpool Journal of Feb. 24.—a paper of great authority upon Irish affairs—gives the following:
"We have to state a fact, which must take away the little interest that may yet attach to the State Trials; and we state this fact on authority which we regard as all but official. Of this truth we have no doubt. There is a flaw in the indictment. Although convicted and brought up for judgment, the traversers will be discharged on this legal defect being made known. The flaw was first discovered by the English law officers of the crown, and the discovery has been communicated to the Irish Attorney General. He perseveres, however, because his purpose will be attained by a verdict. Some people may think that a willful error was admitted, the escape of O'Connell being less embarrassing to ministers than his imprisonment. Fearing O'Connell's case is in point."
The State Trials.—The absorbing topic of the day is the State trials, which are now taking place in Dublin. The preliminary steps have been marked by all the excitement and bad feeling between the opposing parties, for which unhappy Ireland is distinguished. The striking of the special jury which is to try the issue, has ranged against the Government all the Roman Catholic party who were not previously Repellers.—

From some hundreds of names on the panel, forty-eight were drawn by ballot, the traversers possessing the same right as the Crown of pre-emptorily challenging twelve—twelve on each side.
It happened that out of the forty-eight drawn, eleven were Roman Catholics; these the Government challenged, and the whole were struck off, the representative of the traversers exclaiming during the process, "there goes a Catholic! another Papist struck off!" &c. This affair has set the country in a blaze, so to speak, and unpopular as were the proceedings, before, it has made them worse.
That proceeding, as may be imagined, gave great umbrage to the Repeal party, and the Government has been attacked with great bitterness for adopting a line of conduct which looks very like a foregoing conclusion to pack a jury to ensure conviction. So great was the indignation experienced in Ireland at the striking of all the Roman Catholics from the jury list, that a requisition for calling an aggregate meeting of the Catholics of Ireland was signed in three hours by sixty-five barristers, only three of whom are Repellers. The three first names appended to the requisition were Richard Lalor Shiel, M. P.; Thos. Wyse, M. P.; and N. Ball, son of the Right Honorable Judge Ball. The bills of the Crown Counsel (13 in number), are printed and partly lithographed, and each contains between 340 and 350 pages. The letter press printing alone in each brief occupies 170 pages. All persons concerned were called upon by the Crown to be present in Dublin by Sunday; the 14th at the latest; and on Monday the battle of the lawyers began in good earnest.
The charge of a sweeping omission in the Sheriff's Jury list, is explained by the Dublin Monitor of the 17th ult. in a paper headed "Most Important."
The revision of the Special Jury List rests entirely with the Recorder. He examines the qualifications of any man, and judges whether he is qualified according to law to be placed on the panel.
This done, the juror's book is made out under the Recorder's direction, and authenticated by him; and then handed over to the High Sheriff, who is bound by law faithfully, and truly to make out a list of jurors that appear on the juror's book; and it is from this list so made out, that the Clerk of the Crown strikes special juries. Now, that a most astounding discrepancy appears between the number of gentlemen admitted as special jurors by the Recorder, and the number set forth in the High Sheriff's list, is undeniably true. The High Sheriff's list contains 717 names; whereas the number admitted as qualified jurors by the Recorder, amounted to 780.—(How this omission happened, says the Monitor, has not yet been clearly explained; but this much is known.)—After the Recorder had concluded the revision of the panel, but before that panel had been arranged in alphabetical order, &c. it was transmitted, made out on slips, to the Recorder, at Drayton Manor, to be authenticated by him; and it appears that two slips containing the 63 omitted names, either were not forwarded to the Recorder, or on being forwarded, did not come into his hands;
for we understand the Recorder has no recollection of the omitted names having reached him.
Monday, the first day of the trials, was marked by more than usual excitement in Dublin. The Lord Mayor's state carriage bore Mr. O'Connell to the Court, and was accompanied by a procession which formed at the learned gentleman's house, in Merion square. Arrived at the Court, the words of which were besieged at an early hour; they were taken leave of by their admirers by hearty plaudits. The trial had already occupied seventeen days up to Feb. 24, and it was expected that it would not be brought to a close for a week longer. The Attorney General, in his opening, merely laid before the jury a chronological history of Ireland during the last nine months
—the monster meetings, the burning speeches of O'Connell the proceedings of the Repeal Association, the organization of the Repeal movement, the rent, and,
in short, the whole machinery for working that great national movement. He disclosed nothing which was not previously known—nothing which was not openly performed by the chief actors in the face of day, and in the eye of the sun.—
The Government rested their case mainly on the evidence of certain parties belonging to the "fourth estate"—the press.
Two of the reporters who appeared for the Crown—Mr. Hughes and his assistant, were ostensibly employed by the Government to report the proceedings connected with the monster meetings; the other two, it is understood, voluntarily rendered their services to make out the case against the traversers.
Mr. Shiel on the 12th day opened the case for the defence in a masterly and splendid speech.

A Liverpool paper says:—That elegant speaker, in this brilliant effort, seems to have concentrated all his powers. The speech will charm by the beauty of its periods not less than by the force of its reasoning, while, as an appeal to the passions of the jury, it is one of the most masterly on record.
There had been a fracas between the Attorney General and Mr. Fitzgibbon, one of the counsel for the traversers, which has excited intense interest, and has been commented on in a very unsparing manner in all the papers.
O'Connell was to address the jury on Monday, the 5th inst. Various causes are assigned for the delay.
The European Times says that "attention is now almost exclusively occupied in speculating on the verdict of the jury. In all probability, the trials will not extend beyond the end of next week, as the number of witnesses which the traversers propose to call are not, it is understood, numerous. The composition of the jury is certainly in favor of the crown. On the other hand, the "case" which the latter has made out is weak, even in the estimation of its friends." A Dublin jury, even of the most ultra complexion, will pause before it consigns to punishment men whose professed object is to revive the trade of the Irish metropolis, and restore it to its faded glory.—
The question at issue is, after all, rather a national than a party one, and jurymen naturally wish like others, to stand well in the estimation of their fellow citizens.
A conviction may follow the evidence which has been produced, in which case an end will be put to the discussion of all popular grievances, but as matters stand at present, an acquittal is just as likely to result as a conviction. But whatever turn these trials take, matters cannot be suffered to remain in Ireland as they are.
That country is in a position too critical for any minister to disregard. Measures of amelioration must follow. The popular feeling must be courted, not coerced.
The darkest hour is always preceded by the dawn.
Mr. Wyse, m. p., is to be leader of the Whig section of the Irish members of the present session.
Mr. Nicholas Maher has been at last prevailed on to offer himself the Repeal candidate for Tipperary.
Mr. Morgan O'Connell is about to marry a step-daughter of Mr. Shiel with £20, 000.
Roman Catholic meetings to petition the Queen on the subject of the special jury have been held at Drogheda—where Dr. Crolly, the Catholic Primate of all Ireland presided; in Kilkenny, Tralco, Clare, and Cork.
Some reporters for Irish and London papers having been summoned as witnesses by the Crown, there has been a general meeting of the reporters in Dublin, to protest against being compelled to give evidence in judicial proceedings, as calculated to compromise their neutrality, embarrass them in their vocation, and impair the public confidence in them.
A political meeting has been held at Lord Charlemont's, relative to the grievances of Ireland. It was attended by fifty of the neighboring nobility and gentry, among whom were—His Grace the Duke of Leinster, Marquis of Clanricarde, Marquis of Kildare, Earl of Claremont, Leitrim, Earl of Meath, Earl of Milford, Viscount Acheson, Lord Stuart de Decies.
A petition to Parliament was adjusted.
We have to record another agrarian outrage in Tipperary. Some time ago, Mr. Walker, a Scotch man and agent to Mr. Stafford O'Brien, wishing to square a farm tenanted by one Gleeson, took a piece of land from a tenant named Nolan, on which Gleeson received a Rockite notice to give up Nolan's land. A short time after two men came to Gleeson, while ploughing, and telling him that they would not take his life, but would murder him, they broke his arm with a pistol shot. (The limb was subsequently amputated.) For that felony two men, Stapleton and Gleeson, were recently tried and sentenced to transportation for life.
However, the persecuted Gleeson did not escape; when returning from mass on Saturday, he was met near the bridge of Tyroue by two men, who fired two pistols at his back, leaped upon him, kicked him, and left him in a dying state for the balls had entered his chest.
Mr. O'Connell presided at the St. Bridget's Orphan Society Dinner on the 9th inst. In the course of a speech which he made on the occasion, he remarked that the children in France were "miscreant infidel professors, sustained by legal power and regal authority, deprived the parent of the free choice of the education of his child." He was glad of the symptoms of weakness that surrounded the French throne. The Duke of Bordeaux was a young man who was entirely unknown until a kind of contest arose between the French journalists and the people of Ireland; and since that, thank Heaven his cause has prospered. The strength of his party was beginning to exhibit itself, and he hoped the period was not far distant when true liberty, founded upon legitimacy of descent, would predominate in France—when all other pretensions would vanish into thin air, and religion and virtue be presented in the person who filled that throne—when the false philosophy of the infidel University plan of France would perish before a more genial day of light and liberty.

The repeal lyrics grow fiercer: a poem appears in the Freeman of Thursday headed "Millions to the rescue!" and containing these lines—
Up, up, to the rescue—the war-whoop resounds,
And your bravest are game for the Sassenach hounds;
Up, up, to the rescue, and rally to save,
Or ye shall not one drop of the blood of the brave.
Old tyranny oft played the game with our aires,
And they perished, alas! in rebellion's dead
fires;
But your tactics are now to await the attack,
And you scatter, for ever, the Sassenach peels.
Let the onset be theirs, and each forest and glade
Shall rock at the rush of our warrior men.
One of the notices served on the traversers is remarkable as indicating the voluntariness of the documents and the vast scope of the proceedings; it requires the traversers to produce in court the books, letters and documents of the Repeal Association, on the 15th inst., the day fixed for the commencement of the trials. This would be something like a notice on the House of Commons for the production of its journals, petitions, &c.
The object of the notice is that if the documents should not be produced, the Crown would be at liberty to give secondary evidence respecting them.
Petition of the Dublin Corporation.—
The Lord Mayor of Dublin, accompanied by other members of the corporation, arrived in London on the 1st to present a petition to the Queen respecting the pending State trials. Her Majesty appointed Friday, the 2d, for its reception. The following is the answer:—
I receive with satisfaction the assurance that sentiments of loyalty and attachment to my person and crown continue to be cherished by you:
The legal proceedings to which you refer are now in progress before a competent tribunal, and I am unwilling to interrupt the administration of justice
according to law.
It is at all times my anxious desire that any grievance, of which my people can justly complain, should be speedily redressed, and I confide in the wisdom of the Parliament of the United Kingdom for the adoption of such legislative measures as may be necessary for that purpose.
PACIFICATION OF IRELAND.—Among the articles of the new number of the "Edinburgh Review," that on Ireland, will command the especial attention of the statesman, and scarcely less interesting to the general reader. It is easily to de-claim on the grievances of Ireland, or to inveigh against a costly religious establishment maintained for the minority of the people. All this is too apparent to admit of any dispute. But the question now is, what is to be done to stem a threatened convulsion on the one hand, and to improve the social position of Ireland on the other.
The evils affecting Ireland are divided by the reviewer into two classes, the physical and moral. Of the first class are the want of capital and of small properties; of the second, insecurity, ignorance, and indolence. The insecurity of person and property necessarily excludes capital, and the want of capital impedes the improvement of the soil.
While the soil has continued unproductive, the cultivators, never aspiring beyond the lowest standard of human wants, have increased to a degree that knows no check beyond absolute starvation. They offer extravagant rents as the only alternative against want—they care nothing for the amount of rent, provided they get temporary possession of the land; and hence, to quote the illustration of the reviewer, the bargain between landlord and tenant, "is a struggle like the struggle to buy bread in a besieged town, or to buy water in an African caravan." This is the state of the greater part of the south of Ireland, where the land is computed to return on an average not above a sixth of what might be obtained if it were submitted to the agriculture of Scotland. The point is, how the want of capital and of small proprietors, are to be removed; and the reviewer answers, by counteracting the moral evils, insecurity of person and property, ignorance and indolence, the prevalence of which will ever exclude capital.
The reviewer proposes—and we must be brief in enumerating his various remedial propositions—that the Catholic priesthood shall be endowed, not out of the revenues of the Protestant Church, but out of the national resources. This endowment is to be confined to the most pressing wants of the Catholic clergy; a church would be provided for the flock, a residence and stipend for the priest, and an adequate provision for the dignities of the Catholic Church.

By the scheme of Lord Francis Egerton, urged in 1825, he proposed £1500 a year to each of the four Catholic Archbishops; £1000 to each of the Bishops; £300 to the Deans; and from £60 to £200 to the parochial clergy, according to their classification. The scale recommended by Mr. O'Connell, about the same time was nearly similar; and if the proposition were to be entertained, it could not be less to be effectual.

The amount of this endowment, including an enlarged provision to Maynooth, is calculated at £320,000 a year, and its aim is obviously to obtain a higher grade of men for the priesthood—to convert their situation from one of mischievous dependence on their flocks to a safe dependence on the State; and, in short, to render the Catholic clergy instrumental in raising an industrious and a loyal people. Then the Protestant Church is proposed to be remodelled on the principles already recommended by the Government of Lord Melbourne, so that there shall no longer be, in the language of Lord Morpeth, "livings without duties, clergy without flocks, and pay without work,"—instead of a territorial system, a congregational is enjoined.

The remainder of the ameliorations may be summed up in a steady perseverance with the poor law and extension of education—a modification of the freedom of artisans to combine—an increase of professional or stipendiary Magistrates; and, lastly, the abolition of the office of Lord Lieutenant as no longer necessary; now that Dublin has been brought within twenty-four hours communication with London, the officials' duties being supplied by the institution of a fourth Secretary of State, and Dublin reconciled to the change by an annual residence of the Sovereign for a few weeks in her Irish capital, and by an occasional session of Parliament in College Green.

COFFEE DRINKERS

Will perhaps like to read the following description of the process of raising coffee and preparing it for market, in Havana which we extract from one of the entertaining "Hieroglyphics" in the New Orleans Picayune:

"The seed is first planted in a nursery as it were; while it is sprouting up into a young tree or plant, the field for its transplantation—sometimes covering hundreds of acres—is being weeded and prepared. When the saplings attain the proper age and growth, they are taken up and planted for permanent purpose in the coffee field. They are put down in rows at distances from each other of from four to six feet longitudinally. Here they remain until they are worn out by bearing coffee; some in soils for a period as long as twenty years.—The field being thus planted, the whole of the planter's attention, year after year, is now directed, first to keeping the plantation clean, and entirely free from weeds, for this is indispensably necessary to the good and wholesome growth of the trees; next in trimming the trees, so as to prevent them from reaching a higher altitude than the coffee can be plucked from by the hand, or extending their branches too wide, thereby preventing the pickers from passing too easily around them. Secondly, in plucking or picking off the coffee berries from the tree in the proper season, and thirdly in preparing it for market. The weeding is done with great care, not so much as a single blade of grass is to be discovered among the coffee trees, covering entire acres, and thus the whole powers of the soil, which is a soil of a heavy reddish color, are preserved for their nourishment. Round the bounds of the coffee field, and at convenient distances, through them there are walks or avenues, the margins of which are laid out with great taste, and planted with palm, orange and other trees giving it great beauty: indeed a coffee plantation seems to be nothing more or less than an overgrown but well tended garden. It affords a surpassingly sweet perfume, and when the trees are in flower, or when the berries are red—some still being green—it is picturesque beyond anything.

As the tree does not send forth all its blossoms simultaneously, a portion of berries become ripe before the rest, and hence the process of picking is repeated at different periods. The blossom first shoots forth in the latter part of April or May, or the early part of June.—The berry first assumes a green hue, and as it becomes more ripe it changes to a deep red. The picking is performed in August and September. The general process of preparing the coffee for market is this:—It is first placed on a glazier of circular shape and smoothly plastered surface, built expressly for the purpose, in a quantity ranging about twelve inches in depth. This is done for the purpose of drying the shell or husk of the berries, of every one which contains two or three grains of coffee. It is next on the same glazier, but in less quantities, dried by exposure to the sun; when dried, it is put in a circular mill or trough, where a wheel passing over it breaks off the shell and clears the grain from all incumbrances. It is next winnowed, by which the broken husks are blown off from the grain, and lastly it is picked or assorted, the pickers using their hands alone and having no aid from machinery, dividing the crop, grain by grain, into their different classes—superior, middling and inferior. It is then put up for market.

An eminent modern writer beautifully says: "The foundation of domestic happiness is faith in the virtue of woman. The foundation of political happiness, is confidence in the integrity of man. The foundation of all happiness temporal and eternal—is reliance on the goodness of God."

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT. GEN. JOSEPH SMITH, NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

OUR PRICE CURRENT.—In consequence of some irregularity in our exchange papers from St. Louis, we have been unable, for a few weeks past, to correct the price of all the articles in the list. The difficulty is now obviated, and hereafter, the farmers, merchants, and all others, may depend upon a correct weekly statement of the price of all articles.

THE OREGON QUESTION.

A very animated debate has taken place in Congress in regard to Oregon. Mr. Haden, Mr. Wise, Mr. Wentworth, and other honorable gentlemen, principally from the West, have contended for the propriety of the United States retaining it as their indefeasible right; their right by discovery; their right by possession; their right by agreement; and by every thing that will give strength and solidity to title, while the British have not the color of a claim or the least shadow of a title. On the other hand, some of our compromising statesmen feel a disposition to treat with the British in order to secure a fortune at "one fell swoop," mortgage Texas, possess Oregon, and claim all the unsettled regions of the world for hunting and trapping; and should a humble honest man, red, black or white, exhibit a better title, these gentlemen have only to clothe the judge with richer ermine, and spangle the lawyer's fingers with finer rings, to have the judgment of his peers, and the honor of his land, as a patron of honesty, virtue and humanity, while the motto hangs on this nation's escutcheon: "E tryp man has his price?"

Why should we, as a proud, independent nation, give way to British intrigue—truckle to British power, or submit to British encroachments. Besides every principle of philanthropy, nationality, and patriotism would forbid it. Thousands of our hardy pioneers have settled there. They have endured all the hardships incident to a new country. They went there because it was American soil, and they believed when they went there that they would be protected by American power, by American influence, and by American spirit. They considered that the keen-eyed Eagle would be swift to fly to their protection and that under the shadow of her wings all her off-springs might rest secure;—and shall they now have to leave a foreign power and become the serfs of British Lords, and the subjects of British tyranny? Our western statesmen say no! Gen. Smith says no! and if we understand anything about the tone of public feeling, no! is reiterated by all the hardy sons of the west. We say let them have their rights; let them be protected, and let them know that Columbia never forsook any of her noble sons.

To FARMERS.—We would give a friendly hint, as the time draws near when it is necessary to prepare the ground for seed, perhaps it would not be amiss to remind them that it would be well to pay a little more attention to the raising of small grain, such as oats, rye, buckwheat, springwheat, and such grains as are more generally used, rather than devoting the whole of their attention to the raising of corn. If we have plenty of the above named grains, we shall not have to eat so much John-nike. Don't pinch us for potatoes, either; let's have plenty of murrhey's growing. We ought to prepare also to make our own sugar and molasses from corn. We have given ample instructions in regard to the manufacture of corn-stalk sugar, and shall give other extracts; certainly it is better and much more profitable to make our own sugar, than to be dependent upon a foreign market.

A MISTAKE.

We copy the following from the Greenville Patriot:

"Six K's, all standing in a row," are understood to indicate that Kinderhook, Kass, Kalhoun Kan't Kwite Kom't—two more make out that Klay Kan! The writer evidently labors under a mistake; it only requires the letter T added, to number Klay among the rest of the incapables. It would then read Klay Kant Kum it. Indeed, all the seven K's put together would make nothing but Kuerolous—Kliqueing—Klumsy—Kumbrous—Klod-hoppers—Kant Kum it. Kinderhook, Kass, Kalhoun, nor Klay; Kan never surely win the day. But if you want to know who Kan, You'll find in General Smith the man.

WHERE CAN I GET A DEED EX-

ECUTED!

To this frequent question, we say,—AT THE MAYOR'S OFFICE; in Gen. Smith's Brick Store; where you will find the Recorder of the city; the clerk of the municipal court, and the clerk of the Mayor's Court; either of whom will take an acknowledgement of your deeds under seal, so that they will pass in the city or out, in the State or out, in the Union or out, as well as if taken before the Circuit or Supreme Court; and as cheap or cheaper, we presume, than if taken by a Magistrate. If you will take our advice, try it and see; and if you will not, don't trouble us any more with the question: Where can we get a deed acknowledged?

N. B. A Magistrate cannot take the acknowledgement of a deed, which is going out of the country.

HOME MANUFACTURE.

We have just received a Hat from the firm of Spencer, Johnson, and Herriman, of this City, we pronounce the article, good fashionable and useful; we think as good as good as can be obtained in St. Louis, or elsewhere, for the same money. And we recommend our friends when they can obtain as good articles in Nauvoo, as in other places to encourage their own, and build up Nauvoo.

FOR THE NEIGHBOR.

THE PIE PLANT.

Mr. Neighbour,—As I have always a desire to impart to others what seems to be to myself of real utility, and knowing that apples are very scarce, and levers of the fruit are very abundant in this good city. I take leave to inform your readers, that I have found an excellent substitute in the Pie plant for summer use in this place. The Rheum Rhabarbarum, or "pie plant," so called, is a native of Asia and perfectly hardy here; it is of the same family of the medicinal Rhubarb and the roots of it may be applied with the same success in sickness and to a biter purpose, as it acts more moderate.

The leaf stalk of plant is a well known substitute for the green apple or gooseberry, in the early part of spring and has always been extensively used where ever its good qualities have been known; although it is commonly rejected by those unacquainted with it under the name of "Rhubarb bone," the name of "pie plant" has been adopted, which has given a different flavor to the thing altogether, and even without this new nomenclature, there is no fear of any medicinal qualities in the stalk which contains nothing more than a very pleasant acid juice which when made into pies as green apples with a little sugar or molasses is not only very good but also extremely wholesome. It may be cultivated in some manner as corn or potatoes by sowing the seed in hills or placing the plants about the same distance in the spring, when once planted it may remain for several years and more, the good rotten manure is put to it every year the better will be the produce.

PLANTING ORNAMENTAL TREES IN CITY LOTS AND COUNTRY RESIDENCES.

Mr. Editor—It is greatly to be regretted that with every enterprise and general improvement of the city of Nauvoo, and its environs, that little attention is paid to that useful part of rural economy, ornamental plantations, no one seems to step forward and say "oh, spare that oak!" but the axe seems to be laid to the root of every old inheritance of the forest with unsparing hand, and if continued so for a few years not one relic will be left to point out to the traveller a monument where once stood the wild wood or the wild deer retired to repose from the unshaded prairie. It has been an ever failing custom in all new wooded contries to cut down every tree; and it has also been as certain when once done, an error has been discovered—hence after demolishing the old patriarchs of the forest new plantations have been made when the owners of land have been deprived of utility and comforts of trees.

Ornamental trees are not only useful as ornaments, serving to give a lively variety and change of too much sameness; but they are also useful by emitting a wholesome air in cities and thickly inhabited places and imbuing the impure effluvia that causes sickness & ill health. To this I am aware that no one of taste will dispute that a country well diversified with trees and ornamental plantations is far more inviting than the unsheltered prairie with one continued sameness, and I am certain when we consider how much cattle are comforted by the shade of trees in summer and shelter in winter, that no pains should be spared to have such useful appendages to every dwelling the inmates of which are also benefited in the same manner.

It will far exceed my prescribed limits in this place to point out the different methods of planting trees, my object here being to call the attention of the public to the subject in hopes that some mercy may be shown to the old inheritance of the forest.

QUERCUS AMERICANA.

THE LAST HOUR OF THE FALSE PROPHET.

The signs of the speedy fulfillment of the predictions against Mohammedanism, are multiplying every day. At the present time, anarchy and confusion prevail throughout the Turkish Empire, and the attempts of the European powers to support her, has ten her ruin. An intelligent traveller thus writes of his country: "Turkey is in the agonies of dissolution, and will soon be a mere corpse. One of the princes under her protection, Servia, has been lately revolutionized, and its reigning prince dethroned. The government at Constantinople acquiesces, because it is too feeble to oppose the revolution. In Syria is the same anarchy. The Druses and Christians of Mount Lebanon are prey to perpetual wars, and obey no superior authority. No law, no safety, no security for property in this unhappy country. What does the Sultan do? He promises to act against the rebels, but does not. Is it not a sign that the last hour has come for the followers of Mahomed?"

Atmospheric Railroads.—We have before named to our readers, discoveries which had excited much interest in Europe, in regard to atmospheric railways. The speed by this mode of transit is said as far exceeds that of the locomotive plan, as the locomotive speed exceeds that of the stage coaches. It is also said to be not more than half as expensive as the locomotive system. An atmospheric railway is in successful operation in Ireland, upon the extension of the Dublin and Kingston Railway.

Along the entire line, and between the rails, runs a pipe, which on the Kingston and Dalkey line, is fifteen inches in diameter. Along the entire length of this is a slit or opening, through which a bar passes, connecting a piston (which moves freely in the pipe) with the carriage outside. The opening at the top of the pipe is covered with a leathern strap, extending the whole length of the pipe, and two inches broader than the opening. Under and over this leathern strap are riveted iron plates, the top ones twelve inches and half an inch broader than the opening, the bottom ones narrower than the opening in the pipe, but the same length as those at the top. One edge of the leathern is screwed firmly down, like a common bucket valve, and forms a hinge on which it moves. The other edge of the valve falls into a groove in the groove or trough is filled with a composition, made of beeswax and tallow, well worked by hand, so as to make it pliable and tough before spreading it in the groove; this composition being pressed against the edge of the leathern valve which rests in the groove, makes the valve air tight, or at least sufficiently so for all practical purposes. As the piston is moved along the pipe by the pressure of the atmosphere, that side of the valve resting on the groove is lifted up by an iron roller, fixed on the same bar to which the piston is attached; thus clearing an opening for the bar to pass as it moves along. The opening thus made allows the air to pass freely behind the piston; the disturbance which takes place in the composition by the lifting of the valve is again smoothed down and rendered airtight as at first, by a hot iron running on the top of the composition after the valve is shut down.—This has actually been done when the piston was travelling at the rate of seventy miles per hour, and was smoothed down airtight after it by the iron above mentioned. It is contemplated to place stationary engines along the line, about three miles apart; at each engine or station there is an equilibrium valve fixed in the pipe so that each three miles or section of pipe can be either exhausted or filled with air independently of the sections. The equilibrium valve is made to move freely out of the way of the piston by the carriage while passing it, so that the train passes from one section of pipe to another without any stoppage. It is evident that as the tractive force is derived from the pressure of the atmosphere on the piston, the amount of the pressure will depend upon two causes: 1. the extent of exhaustion on one side of the piston and the area of the piston itself. On the Kingston and Dalkey line, the diameter of the piston is fifteen inches; the usual working exhaustion is from eighteen to twenty inches, which propels six carriages filled with passengers (amounting to about thirty-five tons) up an incline averaging 1 in 120, at the rate of forty miles per hour.—Saturday Courier.

Melancholy Steamboat Disaster.—The steamboat De Soto, which arrived on Saturday morning, brought intelligence of a lamentable disaster, the particulars of which, as far as they have transpired, are as follows:

On Friday morning, 1st inst., between 3 and 4 o'clock, the steamers Buckeye and De Soto came together in the middle of Old River, a little below the Aichafalaya, the former bound up Ouchita, and the latter down Red River, by which collision the Buckeye was so much damaged that she sunk to the hurricane reef in less than 5 minutes. There was supposed to have been about 300 souls on board the Buckeye, of whom from 60 to 80 perished. The larboard side of the De Soto struck the starboard side of the Buckeye, just about the forehatch. Amongst those lost, were a daughter, about ten years of age, and sister-in-law (Miss Smith a young lady) of Mr. Hyams, of Alexandria, who also lost fifteen negroes; Mr. John Blunt lost his wife and child and seven negroes; Mr. A. McKenzie lost his wife and seven children and four negroes, Col. King lost two children; Mr. Beard attempted to swim ashore with his nephew on his back and both were drowned. There was a great many deck passengers, both whites and negroes, but few were saved. The bodies of Mr. Hyams' sister-in-law and child, were afterwards recovered and brought down on the De Soto. The bodies of four children, names unknown, were also recovered. The De Soto remained alongside until all the survivors were rescued, and all the baggage and goods which could be got out saved. The upper works of the Buckeye separated from the hull and floated ashore before the De Soto left her. The night was clear and the moon shining bright. A young man and his two sisters had got on board at White's landing the night before; both sisters perished.

The register book of the Buckeye, in which the names of the passengers were entered, was not saved. It is impossible therefore, to ascertain the names or exactly the number who perished. It is thought that most of the cabin passengers escaped, and that nearly all on deck were drowned.—[N. O. Bulletin, 4th inst.]

Disaster of King William's College, Isle of Man, by Fire.—The whole of this beautiful, modern, and extensive educational establishment was destroyed on the morning of Sunday week. The fire broke out in the western wing, either in the class rooms of the English department, or in the boy's dining room immediately below. Shortly after two o'clock, the first alarm was given; but for many hours after this, there was no fire engine, ladder, or supply of water, that could be used with any effect; and the flames, having thus unchecked progress, rapidly spread through the corridors and the entire of the vast building, including the class rooms, the dwelling-house of the Rev. Mr. Dixon, the principal, the beautiful chapel; and the great tower, which, with the exception of the apartments of the Rev. Mr. Cumming, the vice-principal, situated in the eastern wing, were totally destroyed. His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, the Clerk of the Rolls, the High Bailiff, and nearly all the respectable inhabitants of Castletown and the neighborhood, were shortly on the spot; also the company of the 6th foot, presently stationed at Castletown, headed by their captain, and every thing that could be done was adopted; but the absence of an engine for several hours—the essential requisite being wanting—the devouring element spread with uncontrolled fury, and every thing that could be done was to secure as much of the furniture, books, and other property, as possible; but even here the want of ladders, whereby an entrance might have been saved. The greater part of the private library of the principal, a portion of the wines, and some articles of furniture in the front rooms, were saved by great exertions; but the very valuable library of the College, containing many works of great value, and a curious collection of bibles, from the time of Coverdale, upwards of fifty different languages, many unique MSS. relating to Manx ecclesiastical affairs; and the very valuable military models and plans, maps, mathematical and other instruments, many of which cannot be replaced, without much labour and expense, belonging to Mr. Brown, the professor of English and modern literature, were completely destroyed. The building was insured in the Sun office for £2,000, and Mr. Dixon's property for £2,200; but the loss to the building alone cannot be under £4,000. Mr. Cumming was uninsured. A meeting of his excellency the lieutenant-governor, the lord bishop, and others of the trustees, together with the Rev. R. Dixon, principal of the trustees to gether with the Rev. R. Dixon, principal of the college, was held on Monday, when it was resolved that rooms should be procured to carry on the usual studies; that an investigation should be entered into to endeavour to discover the cause of the fire; and that instant measures should be pursued towards the restoration of the college, on a more secure plan.—[Mon's Herald.]

GOLD PENS.—Among the numerous little rills that swell the tide of industrial activity in Cincinnati, may be mentioned the manufacture of gold pens. Messrs. Sheppard & Davies, from the east, have recently established this business here, and we are glad to notice, are well encouraged.

These pens are of pure gold coin, so nicely prepared as to give them great elasticity. They are warranted to last twelve months, and with proper care will last three or four years. The nib is composed of some indurated material, which is as smooth as glass, and runs easily over the roughest paper, and even over damp newspapers. This no other metal pen will do, as they corrode, and grow sharper and rougher by use. Mr. Grundy, the writing master, tells us that several months' experience satisfies him they are the best pens used. They cost four dollars each; but as they are always in order, and thus save much time in mending, and will last two or three years, we mean no indiscriminate puffing, in pronouncing them the very best and cheapest pens that can be used; not even excepting the old standard article for a long time furnished by the ancient firm of Goose, Gander & Co.—[Cin. Atlas.]

RELIGIOUS WOMEN.—They are the women who bless, dignify, and in truth adorn society. The painter, indeed, does not make his fortune by setting to him; the jeweller is neither brought into vogue, by furnishing their diamonds, nor undone by not being paid for them; the prosperity of the milliner does not depend on affixing their name to a cap or collar; the poet does not celebrate them; the novelist does not dedicate them;—but they possess the affection of their husbands; the attachment of their children; the esteem of the wise and good; and above all, they possess His favor "whom to know is eternal life."

STAINING WOOD.

This is a process but little understood, and yet it is one that may be readily accomplished by an ordinary workman. For a bright red stain for wood, make a strong infusion of Brazil chips in water impregnated with pearl ashes, in the proportion of an ounce to a gallon. With this infusion, after it has stood with frequent stirring two or three days, strained and made boiling hot, brush the wood over until it appears strongly colored; and while it is wet, brush it over with alum water, made in the proportion of two ounces of alum to a quart of water. For a less bright red, brush over the wood with a tincture made by dissolving an ounce of dragon's blood in a pint of water.

For a pink or rose red, add to a gallon of the above infusion of Brazil wood, two ounces of pearl ashes, and use it as before observing to brush the wood over often with the alum water. These reds may be varnished in the ordinary way. It may be proper to add that vegetable colors are not so durable as those from metals.

Wood may be stained green by dissolving verdigris in vinegar, or the crystal of verdigris in water, and with the hot solution brushing over the wood till it is duly stained.

Early Turnips. Select a good sandy or loamy piece of ground in your garden, put on as much cow-dung as your spadesman can well turn up. Let him rake it as fine as possible. Then sow over it a mixture of lime and ashes, in equal proportions; after which, sow a sufficient quantity of the early Dutch turnip seed. Rake it in, and beat the ground with the back of the spade, or of the shovel. Their subsequent culture consists in thinning out with the hand and hoe, and keeping down the weeds.

Early Beans. The Windsor, Mazarin, Lisbon, white-blossom, or Quaker beans may each and all be planted after the tenth of this month. To continue a supply, it will be necessary to plant every two weeks for a month or two.

From the Chicago Democrat. CONGRESSIONAL. HARBOR AND RIVER APPROPRIATION BILL.

Washington, Feb. 22, 1844. I send you the harbor and river appropriation bill, that you may see that the Committee on Commerce, notwithstanding the fears of some of our western friends, have dealt fairly by us. The Illinois River, you will be happy to see, is included. As to harbors, no new work is included save that at Sandusky where, unless a harbor is so in mind, all chances for a safe landing will be entirely destroyed. This is what is called the first class of harbors and rivers. Should this pass, a second class bill embracing sundry important new works, will be introduced.

Mr. McClelland, who reported it, is from Monroe, Michigan, and is entitled with Gen. Reed, of Erie, to great credit. He is a brother of Capt. McClelland, who superintends the Chicago harbor. Both these gentlemen have labored under many disadvantages in perfecting the bill and I think they have got it as satisfactory as could be expected under the circumstances. But its fate, from local prejudices and constitutional scruples, is not so certain. At any rate, there is to be a great battle upon it.

The Mechanic.—The following noble and striking description of a "Mechanic," is from the play called the "Carpenter of Ronen."

"They, sir, are God's true noblemen! What have mechanics not done? Have they not opened the chambers of the mighty deep and extracted its treasures, and made the raging billows their highway, on which they ride as on a tame steed? Are not the elements of fire and water chained to the crank, and at the mechanic's bidding compelled to turn it? The forked lightning is their plaything, and they ride triumphantly on the wings of the mighty winds. To the wise they are flood gates of knowledge, and the kings and queens are decorated with their handy works. He who made the Universe was the first mechanic."

Miners.—There are about 4,000 Miners, in Jo Davies's county, and the adjoining territories who make Galena their place of trade. During the past winter, the majority of these have been making but little more than wages; and quite a number of them, we hear, have struck good leads. The winter, which has been very open, has been very unfavorable, in many situations, on account of the surface water settling in the mineral holes. But, notwithstanding, a very large amount of lead has been made, and as soon as navigation opens, which from the present state of the weather, must be in a few days, will be converted into cash. Then for busy times.

The sea at Odessa has withdrawn two thirds of a mile from the land, leaving the ships high and dry.

Another Member of Congress Dead.—The Washington papers of the 2d, announce the death of the Hon. Henry Frick, one of the members from Penn. He died on the day previous, about 12 o'clock, in the 50th year of his age.

Melting of a Watch in the pocket of a Man.—During a violent thunder-storm, a fishing boat, belonging to Mayell, in the Shelland Islands, was struck by lightning. The electric fluid came down the mast, which it tore into shivers, and melted a watch in the pocket of a man who was sitting close by the side of the mast, without injuring him. Not only was the man altogether unharmed, but his clothes also were unharmed; and he was not aware of what had taken place, until, on taking out his watch, he found it all fused into one mass.

Benefit of Advertising.—A short time ago we advertised that a certain gentleman would hear of something to his advantage if he would make us acquainted with his whereabouts. A relative called forthwith, and told us that our enquiry was a member of the Legislature in Michigan, and that he would convey our information to him. So we told him that the Hon. gentleman owed us $5 for newspapers, and that if he didn't pay us pretty soon, we would run him through our poetry mill. The fellow's chin fell, his eyes glared at us, and then, how he sloped! He had come all the way from Attica, 22 miles, to hear the news!—Perry Dem.

Mr. Gilmour who was sent to Scotland from this country under the treaty for trial, has been acquitted of having killed her husband. It was shown that arsenic was commonly used on the farm to kill rats—that she made no objection when her husband was ill to end for a physician,—that she expressed a willingness to disinter the body for examination—said she had been sent away to America, but was desirous of remaining until the affair was settled. It was understood that she would soon be married to Mr. Anderson the young man whom she loved so ardently before her parents compelled her to marry Mr. Gilmour.

Brief.—"Halloo, mister!" said a Yankee teamster, who appeared in something of a hurry, "what time is it? and where are you going? How deep is the creek? and what is the price of butter?"

"Fast one—almost two—home—waist deep—and nine pence," was the reply.

Poor Cass.—General Cass resides in Wayne county, Michigan. The Loco focos of that county have instructed their delegates to the State convention to vote for Mr. Van Buren. A prophet is not without honor save in his own country, was certainly the thought of the General on hearing these instructions in favor of his rival from his immediate neighbors.

Do Something.—Do something, young man; don't be a living corpse all your days from which the active multitude shriek as from putrefaction. But stir your muscles, circulate your blood, and stretch your bones. God did not make you for an automaton; or he would never have stamped his image on your brow, he made you for a man—living, active, energetic, immortal. Then do something; do it now not next week, or next month, but now. Look up—stir yourself—shake off your lethargy—open your eyes—and spring to work; for your life goes at something, or you will corrode and perish with rust, to be worth nothing to mankind, more than your flesh and blood will produce for enriching the ground.

"What shall I do?" you ask, as if your Maker had made a fool of you and never intended you should labor. Do? Why there is every thing to do—whichever way you look, there is work enough to employ your heart and hands a thousand lifetimes. Fields to cultivate and men to elevate; sciences to be progressed and trades to be facilitated; minds to be untrammelled; and civilization to be extended. Just possess the disposition and be determined to do something and you will never be at a loss what to engage in.

Cameo cutting, which it was thought could not be done out of Rome, is now done in New York by a Yankee! He does it so well, too, it cannot be distinguished from the finest executed at the Eternal City.

A Floating Alarm Whistle has been invented for the preservation of life and property at sea. It is of such power as to be heard a distance of many miles. It is somewhat similar to a large barrel organ, with a downward projection and with accordion-like tongues. The motion of the waves makes it whistle, and the fiercer the storm, the louder is its warning voice.

A New Free State. The proposal for the division of the State of Tennessee is again before the legislature of that State—a bill for the purpose having been introduced. The mountain region that is embraced in the contemplated State, must be inhabited by non-slaveholders; and the movement is an anti-slavery one. The counties proposed to be added, in order to form the new State, to be named "Frankland," are twenty-six in number. It is proposed also in the bill that to the new State may be added such portions of the States of North Carolina, Virginia, and Georgia, as may be added for the purpose.

A Flaming Mountain.—The Boston Journal says that Captain Ross, during his late exploring expedition to the Arctic Ocean, discovered a mountain 12,400 feet above the level of the sea, in latitude 77.32 south, and longitude 167 east, which emitted flame and smoke in grand profusion. He named this splendid volcano Mount Erebus.

I remember hearing of a dear lover of books, who had his library burned down to the ground. When his friends expressed their surprise that he should bear his loss with so much calmness, his reply was: "I must have learned but little from my books, if they have not taught me to endure the loss of them."—Selected.

A Remarkable Child.—The Rockville (Md.) Journal gives the following description of an infant with whiskers, and vouchers for the correctness of the statement:

"Although we have not seen this wonderful prodigy, we can vouch for the truth of our statement from the facts we have gathered from respectable gentlemen who have seen it, as well as from the attending physician. Instead of exaggeration in description given us, we fell far short of the truth. The child, which is now four weeks old, healthy, and likely to live, has not only whiskers on both sides of its face, nearly meeting under the chin, and as thick as any dandy would be proud of having, but its forehead, back, shoulders, and breast are completely coated with hair as thick as lamb's wool. As remarkable as this may seem, the facts are as we have stated them. The child is to be christened Esau Bushrod.

Let no man be ashamed to work. Let no man be ashamed of a hard fist, or a sunburnt countenance. Let him be ashamed only of ignorance and sloth. Let no man be ashamed of poverty. Let him only be ashamed of idleness and dishonesty.

A Mother's Love.—There is so divine a holiness in the love of a mother, that no matter how the tie that binds her to the child was formed, it becomes, as it were, consecrated and sacred, and the past is forgotten; and the world and its harsh verdicts swept away, when the love alone is visible, and the God who watches over the little one sheds his smile over the human deputy, in whose tenderness there breathes his own!—Bulwer.

Poisoning.—A Warning.—The Hagerstown News states that the family of Mr. Peter Knolly, near that place, being seized with an unaccountable and severe illness upon sending for a physician, it was found that they had been poisoned by eating apple-butter which had been put in earthen crocks. Upon examination it was found that the glazing, which was highly poisonous, had peeled from the crock and fallen into the butter, changing it to a dark purple color. Persons cannot be too careful in this matter, as every fall we are called upon to record the effects of carelessness therein.—Ex Paper.

The St. Augustine News contains the following interesting statement:

Change of Habit.—We have shown a day or two since, a centipede, about an inch and a half in length, ejected under the influence of an emetic from the stomach of a lad in this city; at the time of its being thrown off it was dead. A short time after a centipede, three inches in length, a red and kicking, was thrown up. It is a question of some niceness to determine the mode of entry, age, and the duration of these poisonous insects in the human stomach; and how far the solvent power of the gastric juice, in this instance failed in its action on the living animal, as well as influence on the dead one.

WRECK OF THE PHENIX IN A SNOW STORM, DREADFUL LOSS OF LIFE.

The following particulars of this melancholy catastrophe are extracted from a letter of the Captain (R. Turner) to the owner of the vessel, (Mr. T. Suckney, Scarborough):—

After stating that the vessel sailed from Miramichi on the 22d November, from which time up to the 28th very boisterous weather was experienced, the letter proceeds to say:—About two o'clock on the morning of the 26th, the wind had increased to a hurricane, the ship running under double reefed maintop and close reefed foretop and foresail.

Shortly afterwards the land was reported a head, and the ship was immediately hauled close upon a wind, but she was so close in that it was impossible to clear it, and about three o'clock she struck on the west side of Langley Island (Newfound): It was impossible for us to do any thing more for the safety of the ship; still I entertained an idea that she could be got off, and directed the crew to cut away the mainmast. Our efforts proved fruitless, and at half past four the sea made such a sweep over the decks that we sought refuge in the cabin.

There we remained till the violence of the storm and surf stove in the starboard side and stern windows; and, owing to the constant working of the rudder, the deck and skylight were broken in.

We now took shelter in the fore-cabin, and it here appeared as if all our lives were to be sacrificed, for the sea appeared above the lower deck; and as a last remedy, we were obliged to go upon the main deck to prolong our existence. Here we were exposed to the full fury of the storm; and to prevent ourselves being washed overboard, we lashed each other to the most secure spars on deck. About nine o'clock, a female passenger expired from exposure to the cold, which was very intense. The sea by this time had torn away the bulwark rails, and the vessel lay almost motionless. Shortly after the surf swept away the jolly-boat; almost instantly afterwards the skill was washed out of the long-boat, and turned bottom up in the sea.

All means of escape were now apparently at an end; for the long-boat stood in a fair way of also being washed overboard, and all had their eyes turned upon her to save life. A poor seaman jumped into her in order to make a rope fast, so that if she should be swept away she would still be secure to the ship.

While he was performing this gallant action, away went the long-boat overboard with him in her, right clear of the vessel. We now considered that our hours were numbered, and made the best of our way into the long-boat, but on getting forward and perceiving that the boat was stove in, I thought it most prudent to return to the wreck. Notwithstanding, six men, with the mate, Mr. Thomas Smith, and a boy, got into the boat, although by this time she was filling with water. I entreated them to return, but they kept calling to the rest of the crew to follow their example and let go the painter. The men being nearly perished with cold, felt no disposition to move, either to get into the boat or loosen the rope, and the mate immediately cut it, and away she went to the lee of the ship, without a single oar to conduct her through the boiling surf. The first wave that struck the boat, completely turned her bottom upwards, and the whole of the unfortunate fellows (eight in number) in her immediately perished within fifteen yards of the wreck. The six that now remained on board took refuge in the after-companion, but from this spot we were soon roused by the deck parting from the larboard side, after carrying a long way to the starboard side. Instantly we rushed forward, little expecting that we should meet with another place of refuge, which we did near the fore-cabin again. But we were once more forced to fly, owing to the deck breaking up, and the foremast falling over the starboard bow. At this period we saved ourselves in a truly miraculous manner, about twenty-five feet of the deck, abate the windlass parted from the wreck, and upon that we placed ourselves, and were floated through a tremendous sea safe ashore. We were in a most pitiable condition, and reduced to state of great exhaustion. We were kindly received by the wreckers, who procured us a shelter in a house, of which there were two or three on the island.

The French Government have taken charge of that part of the cargo that has been recovered; and which they intend to sell for the benefit of the underwriters.—(Daily Weekly Messenger.)

HORTICULTURAL FACTS.

Fruit trees which have had their roots frozen in removal, may be preserved by burying them in the ground, before they have in the least degree thawed. The common opinion that when the roots are once frozen, the trees are destroyed, is disproven by the fact that trees are often successfully transplanted with the root completely frozen in a ball of earth. The roots of small trees do not often extend further downwards than the frost penetrates. When the roots are thawed by the air or sun their destruction is certain.

Scions for grafting may be cut any time during the winter, if they are subsequently kept moist, which is most easily and safely done by burying them in the ground.

To prevent young currant bushes from having suckers, the cuttings, when put into the ground, should have all their buds removed, except those on the upper extremity.

The best time in the year to transplant fruit trees, is when it can be most easily done; except when the tender trees, such as apricot, nectarine, and peach, are to be removed to a colder region of country; it is best to do it in the spring. When, however, it becomes necessary to remove such in autumn, they should be protected from the effects of a colder climate in winter, by burying the roots and half the stems in a trench.

Seeds which are to be sent to a distance, are best preserved when put up in pulverized charcoal.—American Farmer.

Who will not Plant a Tree!—Capt. John Ferguson, a veteran of the Revolution, now living in Bedford, N. H., when in the prime of life, cut a willow walking stick from a tree in Haverhill, Mass., and upon his arrival at Polham, New Hampshire, where he then resided, he placed his cane in the ground about six rods north of the old meeting-house in that town. The cane may be seen in the shape of a tree, measuring fifteen, and a half feet in circumference.

WORK FOR MARCH.
ON THE FARM.

Grass Seeds.—If you have any ground in small grain that you intend sowing with clover or grass seeds of any kind, the sooner you perform this duty the better. But if you are desirous of preserving your seed from peaching on the ground, or of seeing a well-set field, let us advise you, after having sown your seed, to harrow it in and roll it.

If clover seed alone should be sown, from twelve to sixteen pounds to the acre will be required. If it be intended to mix orchard-grass seed with it, ten pounds of clover seed and one bushel of the former will be necessary.

Orchard Grass.—When this grass is sown alone, two bushels should be used. Oats.—Dash ahead and get your oats in, as you may rest assured that the early sowed always fares best. As soon as your ground is ready, sow your oats; plough them in three inches in depth; then harrow finely. This done if you propose sowing clover seed, or any other grass seeds, do so; harrow that in and finish your labor by rolling. Do not think of sowing less than two bushels. In England, often, four bushels are sowed upon an acre.

Barley.—This grain like oats, is most likely to succeed best when early sown. From six to eight pecks to the acre, according to the character of the soil, is the proper quantity.

Early Potatoes.—If you design putting in any early potatoes for market or home consumption, we would advise you to get them in as early as possible. All that will be necessary for you, after ploughing and laying off your ground, to provide the furrows with an ample supply of long stable manure, so as to afford the potatoes a bed and covering. At this season of the year, manure should be placed both above and beneath them. When the plants may begin to show themselves, their growth will be much promoted by running the harrow along the rows, and besides this good effect it will have the additional one of insuring regularity in their coming up.

Parsnips and Carrots, in field culture may be sown towards the middle of the month. The soil which suits them best is a rich sand, or deep sandy loam. In which ever they may be planted, it should be deeply ploughed, and twice would be better than once.

Good crops of these fine roots may be obtained, when sown under favorable circumstances, any time from the middle of March till the 20th of April. The earliest sown make the largest roots.

Sugar-Beets and Mangle-Wurzel, for field culture, may be sown any time between the 15th of March and the 20th of April, with a certainty of getting a good crop of either. The soil should be good, well-manured, ploughed deeply, and in fine tilth by harrowing and rolling.

Orchard.—All kinds of fruit trees, which have not already been, should be pruned.—Every apple tree in the orchard, or other fruit trees on the place, should be painted with a mixture of oil and sulphur. Wherever moss may be on a tree, that should be scraped off before the medicinal point is applied.

Early Cabbage Plants should be set two and a half feet apart, and the lettuce six inches in the row—the rows a foot apart.

For the Neighbor.

Mr. Editor—
Dear Sir: I have been to different parts of this and the adjoining counties on business. I have heard a great many things said on various topics. However, the principle one now talked of is that of the presidential election. Some persons that have been violently opposed to us as a people, are now entirely differently disposed. The proclamation, or the 'Views of General Smith on the Powers and Policy of the Government,' is acknowledged by all parties to be the ablest document of the kind they ever saw. His sentiments expressed to Missouri is unexceptionable. I have learned that we have some among us, who 'hold with the hare and run with the hounds.' I hope however that they will get the desire of their hearts, i. e., a reward according to justice.

It is truly an important crisis in the history of our nation. A time when every lover of his country should come to a decided resolution to put down anarchy and wipe away from our nation's escutcheon, those deep stains and vile principles adopted and fostered since Andrew Jackson retired from public life. It is not with us a contest for names, but principles; and according to the law of God, every seventh year was sabbatic, a year of jubilee. Our praiseworthy ancestors, framed a constitution in righteousness; while they were under oppression. The God of heaven raised up a Washington & Marion, to sustain that sacred article, which made all men free and equal. There are now thousands of persons, opposing the very spirit and letter of that Constitution ignorantly, and are serving party with more than triple zeal; that they ever manifested towards their divine master. Those persons are many of them honest, truly so, and need only to be convinced of their error, and will immediately embrace the truth. Motive is the main spring to action; many are honest yet are actuated from improper views.

To cure the mind of a wrong bias and spleen, we must convince them that their prompter is false. Joseph, the son of Jacob, was a servant in Egypt, and because he would not do wrong, satan raised up a harlot to punish him by falsely accusing, and casting him into prison; there he remained for years; but the Lord still remembered him. In process of time, this same servant, who the great, wise and worthy, had condemned was suddenly exalted to the throne of Egypt, where he gave full satisfaction, and actually was in the hand of God, the Savior of all living. Egypt and all the world, was preserved from famine by the superior knowledge and management of the servant of God. Nothing but the knowledge that comes from on high, ever could have saved them. Thus reason resumed her empire. What a blessing to have a Prophet and Seer at the helm, to avert evils, and dispense bounteous blessings. As one of old, 'I would to God all the Lord's people were prophets.' Nothing short of reform will save this land. We desire to see the aim of party prejudice removed, and then will ignorance recede.

There is now a Joseph, a Prophet and Seer; whose services we can obtain. He has been prevailed upon to permit his name to run in the next presidential contest. The reason is obvious. Andrew Jackson had scarce left the presidential chair declaring a truth that he left us a happy and prosperous people in the full enjoyment of liberty and peace; until the pompous Van Buren, seated himself and declared, 'I repose with unwavering reliance on the patriotism, intelligence, and the kindness of a people who never yet deserted a public servant honestly laboring in their cause.'

'We present an aggregate of human prosperity, surely not else where to be found.'

'The thoughtful framers of our Constitution, legislated for our country as they found it.'

'Half a century teeming with extraordinary events, and elsewhere producing astonishing results, has passed along; but on our institutions it has left no injurious marks. From a small community, we have risen to a people powerful in numbers and in strength; but with our increase has gone hand in hand, the progress of just principles.'

'The privileges, civil and religious, of the humblest individual are still sacredly protected at home.'

Permit me here, sir, to digress a little, and ask the world of mankind, whether or not our civil and religious liberties were sacredly protected under his administration. When he was questioned about our situation, he said: 'Gentlemen, your cause is good, but I can't do anything for you.'

'Neither masses of the people, nor sections of the country, have been swayed from their devotion to the bond of union, and the principles it has made sacred. It will be ever thus.'

Now we know Van is a false Prophet, and as it is so no wonder when 'Missouri Democracy' was exhibited, that he fell in with it.

'That predominating affection for our political system, which prevails throughout our territorial limits; that calm and enlightened judgment, which ultimately governs our people, one vast body, will always be at hand to resist, and control every effort foreign or domestic, which aims or would lead to overthrow our institutions.'

'For myself, therefore, I desire to declare, that the principle that will govern me, in the high duty to which my country calls me, is a strict adherence to the spirit and letter of the constitution as it was designed by those who framed it.'

O Tennessee, 'Do you know any thing about the matter?'

The lad knew nothing. But her old men, and young, ever vigilant, soon learned that he was a political weathercock. Steering to every point of the compass, trimming his sails for every gale. His course in public life, has taken the shade of every hue, and colour of the rainbow, completely a camelion.

New-fangled Democracy, of many colours, as Joseph's coat. Many though, perhaps not in legion.

On a time the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air fell out, and engaged in a bloody battle. There were no conservatives, but all must participate in the general engagement. A bat and mole were near together, on the back ground. The birds were likely to prevail. The bat exultingly flapped his wings, huzzah! I am a fowl huzzah! But fortune is fickle; soon the beasts prevailed, and the bat frisking round, huzzah! I am a beast! No, said the mole, you are a fowl! No, I am a beast! See, I have claws, teeth, ears, and hairy skin. Sir, the little Magician, is both mole and bat; and consequently is fast forming an acquaintance, with all the Gods of the earth. For it is decreed, that they shall all be cast 'to the moles and bats.' He has made a covenant with death. We understand from authority we can rely upon, that he has entered into a bargain with Tom Benton, to use his Executive influence, to raise an exterminating persecution against us. 'Great cry and little wool,' as the devil said when he sneered the hog. Counting chickens before they hatch. He is not President now nor will he be. Before he is elected, he will scratch a beggar's bald pate; as I believe, for the citizens of the United States are too well acquainted with his bogus democracy.

It is but little worth while for him to be President, for he can't do any thing, for he has no power to bring offenders to punishment. As for Henry Clay it does seem that he was not born to be President, or he would have been in the chair now, rather than John Tyler.

Having said so much, I must proceed to give you my views respecting the man of my choice for the next Presidency.

A Washington could save America, from utter destruction, and we have a greater than Washington now. Some will say no; but all we ask of those persons, is to become acquainted with General Smith for themselves, and we will risk the matter confidently. A man of sterling integrity, who unlike Henry Clay, fearlessly declares his political as well as religious principles. Uncompromisingly for 'retrenchment and reform.' Considers nothing to be democracy that in any particular violates the letter and spirit of the constitution. Democracy is a fixed principle; fixed down by Washington and Jefferson, and carried out by Monroe, Madison, and Jackson; but departed from by Van Buren, and a solemn pledge broken by Tyler.

General Smith is the man that the God of heaven designs to make a savior of the nations now, as certainly as he did Joseph, the savior of Egypt; and the world.

We ask the people of the United States to examine his claims fairly; if they will, all is safe. There is yet sufficient virtue and discernment in the nation to save it. The worst difficulty is ignorance, willing ignorance.

Great injustice has been done to General Smith; he has had to fight with men, and devils, from boyhood; but, soon will rise triumphant. The world is quite alarmed at the idea of General Smith getting power. They do not know the fact that he is brave and tender hearted. He was some months since a prisoner, in the hands of two cowardly wretches; they, contrary to law & humanity, maltreated and abused him shamefully. Soon it happened his friends came up, he then placed himself between his friends and his cruel enemies, and thus preserved them, not permitting them even to be insulted, when they deserved death at his hands. When I hear of so much unnecessary kicking and hounding, I am reminded of a circumstance that occurred with one of my neighbors in Tennessee. The old man and his family, were at a camp-meeting, and his daughter, among others, got down in the crazy-pen. Soon the straw was flying, and wonderful feats were performed. The old man called out quit; hold down yah leg suh! She did not heed, and the old fellow being determined to stop her, took hold of her legs. He could not talk plain; and his droll manner of expression, brought up a number of spectators. He cried out, 'you need not foh kick suh, I can hole you leg suh, now you nassy whep you?'

Now I say, great nor small need not kick and yet call themselves Democrats, for we will hold them to the Constitution; although several articles of it has long since been spiritualized out of existence.

You have before learned, sir, that I am a Tennessean, and although I now am a resident of another State, I have not forgotten the land of my nativity. Many ill-founded prejudices exist in the minds of a great many Tennesseans, against us as a people; but, sir, it is for want of correct information. We must show them that they are not correctly informed respecting our people and Prophet. This is our duty to them.

A Cato could love his country even in banishment, nor was that country, Utica, or Adymittum; but Rome. O, Tennessee, remember the days of thy infancy, clear of party strife, poor, but free and happy. Union and equality was experienced among all honest citizens. The Governor, Chief Justice, and some few other officers, received pay for their services in deer skins. While the same law provided that other inferior officers should have their pay in racoon skins. At that day good feelings generally prevailed; yet some of the predominant principles of Missouri democracy pervaded the minds of some. Opossums were very plenty, and the collectors procured the requisite number of their skins, and then cut off the racoon tails, and sewed them into the opossum skins; paid off the unsuspecting officers, and then sold the racoon skins to the hat makers. This is a fair sample of Missouri Democracy. Not Jackson democracy; but Van Buren Democracy!

For the sake of illustration, I will here relate one of Felix Granly's anecdotes.

As he was a Van Burenite, I shall be compelled to metamorphose the ideal. A man who was not under very good character at home, went some distance to a Baptist camp meeting, in order to join the church. After some days he returned, and when interrogated whether he had joined the church or not, he replied in the negative, and offered as an excuse, that 'he were done taking in before he had got there.' Sir, it was just so precisely with Missouri. The democrats of '76 were done taking in, before she became 'a sovereign state.' They discovered the Opossum skins although the Racoon tails were on. Deadly hate has ever since rankled in her bosom, she was and is determined, to protest democracy; but lay low and kept dark. However she kicked up a set of her own established 'her own creed,' and hoisted her flag 'o'er all.' All went on well for a while, at length the deficiency of name must be supplied. ('By their works you shall know them') Mob was prefixed, and on they went. 'A little heaven, leaveneth the whole lump.' Van, caught it, and so it became popular.

Amidst the united voices of Cæsar, Pompey, and Crassus, we are misled until it seems almost as if the sun rose in the western horizon. Simultaneous movements have been made by the pensioned presses in every direction; thus a flood of calumny and falsehood have been poured out, against an innocent and innocent, law abiding people. The whole pack has been unkenneled (like the volcanic eruptions of Mount Vesuvius, belching smoke and vomiting the melted lava) to fill cry without knowledge, or regard for justice: have been let loose upon the reputation and character of him, whom the Lord delights to honor. Curl, twist, mangle, and spit-fire; all sounded the bugle, and then a thousand answering notes have echoed to the blast; each little 'dirty false signal,' desirous to outstrip the other, and be in at the death have been so devoutly engaged, that many of them have become just like the witness who declared on oath, that a certain horse was sixteen feet high. His counsel said, you are mistaken, you meant, sixteen hands high, instead of sixteen feet. Did I say, sixteen feet high. Yes, well, I'll stand to it, as long as I live.

The people's prosperity is not promoted, but sudden destruction seems to threaten us. Speculation rages in party politics. Power and purse, have joined hands; and wield for the favored few of the successful party; and was to the many of the priest ridden people. Millions are drunken, on vanishing prospects. Party triumphs, and patriots weep. Yes, sir, many of those who toiled through the revolution, while they lofty love in their bosoms, the same lofty love of liberty, and scorn of tyranny and usurpation, are deprived of limbs and life. Editors have taxed their brain, to find a witch or hobgoblin story, suitable for a comparison of Joe Smith; nor could they see any thing but in negro colors; and dream of nothing but the rise and fall of kingdoms and empires. Drunkards and black-legs alike cry out and breathe the sentiments of many priests 'Old Joe Smith—bug-a-doo!' Talk to them of law, and like Cæsar, say they, 'talk not of law to men who wear swords.'

Indeed, we seem to be pretty much in the situation of drunken Dary's wife. As he staggered home late one night, he says, if my wife is gone to bed, when I go home, I'll lick her, what business has she going to bed 'till I come! Staggering on, he said, if my wife is sitting up, when I go home I'll lick her; what business has she got sitting up burning wood eh.

If charges are preferred against us, and we are discharged upon trial; soon we hear, that the guilty Mormons cannot be punished. Too smart; yet fools.

The President is required by the Constitution under the most solemn responsibilities, to see that laws faithfully executed. I now ask every lover of his country, to examine Martin Van Buren's declarations, as here quoted verbatim from his inaugural; and then contrast them with his course in administering the law and the attendant disasters; then ask himself if he could not exclaim with Rianzi, Oh Rome, Rome, to what art thou fallen!

His career is over, and his race run. A Moses and Aaron is raised up to over power his magic wand. With truth, all is done. The lullaby now is reword, and magic is swallowed up. As things were, so they will be.

Where is Tennessee, now! is she battling at the shrine of the Constitution?

Does she stand erect! foot to foot, knee to knee, breast to breast, her arm supporting, and her whippersnapper in accents of friendship. Ah sir, erect! My worthy friend Billy Peyton, in Congress in 1836. Speaking of magicians, and the Arch-expurger, (Tom Benton), says he has seen him in grim majesty, lashing with a whip of scorpions, abler and honest men than himself to the work, flogging them on to make war with the Constitution. Then he adds, Benton will never rise again. I know Major Peyton to be an honorable high minded man, possessing acute discernment. So shall his prediction prove true. He is a patriot, a true warm-hearted Tennessean. I feel proud of my State, and doubly gratified, that I have been privileged, with such noble spirits to associate. I have full confidence in the patriotism of Tennessee. Major Peyton declared that, the noblest representative on the floor of Congress, was far behind the spirit of his people, in maintaining equal rights, and asserting their freedom. She may be crushed, says he, but not conquered; she may fall, but it will be at the shrine of the Constitution; in the grave of public liberty. And sir, I will go down with her, I will not survive her fate. So mote it be; So mote it be!

Tennessee can boast many worthy, chaste, and virtuous sons; I know they will deal justly when correctly informed. In their convention in 1834, they declared, 'all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God, according to the dictates of their own conscience,' &c. and a right to be heard by petition. She well recollects the days of her poverty, she weighs not merit by outward show.

'Pride like the Eagle, nests among the stars But pleasure Lark-like, to the dust repairs.'

Such is our worthy countryman, unassuming, but firm and resolute.

'Hark the serafim well known voice, That o'er him made my heart rejoice.'

Leading to victory and glory. Yet many have despised him because of his religious sentiments.

Indeed sir, our country is suffering for want of, so faithful and so true a patriot and statesman, to stand at its head. We need just such a political Accoucher, as Gen. Smith; an experienced person in government affairs, under whose skillful guidance, and direction our country may be delivered from the dilemma, which political demagogues have thrown it into; and while he stands at the helm, the ship of state will wait along at ease, and pass in safety the whirling gulf of straits, and land her crew in the haven of joy.

Some have called him a Doctor, good again. I agree with them. 'Doctor Smith.' An experienced Physician.

One who well understands the nature of diseases, the preparation of panaceas and the mode of their application; the precise effect of the remedy. Our country is sick, his numerous ills, cancer, ulcer, fever and miasma; and all is threatening dissolution. To arrest the progress of this dreadful combination of maladies is an arduous undertaking. But sir, we have the utmost confidence in the skill of our physician.

Fools may bawl, and distract joy rage; but it will not all avail any thing. In November next, the people will rise in the dignity and power of freemen, and once more place a worthy man at their head. JOSEPH SMITH, the Prophet.

Come up ye noble spirits of '76; come to your country's rescue, drive the Goths and Vandals from our dominions. Let every friend to his country, come up to the ballot-box, and use his influence; the object can be effected.

Let every patriot heart, resolve upon conquest, and the country can be saved. I have been disappointed time and again by pledges, but am now satisfied and determined for one, having launched my bark upon the wave, to cling to it, sink or swim; be the elements bright or lowering; in calm or tempest hold on.

Let apostates and other devils, lie and rage with disappointment. Those who fully confide in the mighty arm of Jehovah, can smile at the storm. I have donned the harness for the battle: I have invested myself with the hermit's robe; and I will preach a crusade against all infidelity, bargain and magical intrigue, which is falsely called democracy.

'The federal Union must be preserved.' I have so far transcended my intended limits, I must ask your pardon; but the subject is so interesting it grew upon me, and I was unconscious of the lapse of time, permit me therefore in conclusion to say I hope to hear from all—how stands the case?

If any have objections make them known. No drones can exist long in the political hive. Remember the mole and bat.

If we find men upon the fence, We say 'tis true, they have no sense; Let mongrels creep, behind the wall, With only to hoot, and dragon's fall. It is just so, all may know it. I'm a Mormon, though not a Poet; But with the Saints of latter days, Great God do thou, direct my ways.

Sincerely,
A. YOUNG.

The Old Bachelor.—In the vast flower-field of human affection, the old bachelor is the very scarecrow of happiness, who drives away the little birds of love, that come to steal the homelock seeds of loveliness and despair. Where is there a more pitiable object in the world, than a man who has no amiable woman interested in his welfare, how dismal does his desolate room appear, when he goes home at night, wet and hungry, and finds a cold hearth or barren table, and a lonely pillow, that looks like the white urn of every earthly enjoyment. See the sick old bachelor in the dark afternoon of life—when his heart is sinking to its sundial! Not a solitary star of memory gleams over the dusk of his opening grave; no tender wife to bind like a blessing over his dying bed; no fond daughter to draw his chilly hand into the soft pressure of hers, and warm his icy blood with the vivifying fires of unfailing affection; no manly boy to link his fading name with the golden chain of honorable posterity, and his history in the vast volume of the world he is leaving forever! He has eaten and drunken, and died, and earth is glad to be rid of him; for he has done little else but to cramp his soul into the circumference of a sixpence, and no human being but his washerwoman will breathe a sigh at his funeral.

Large Lights.—The panes of glass in the windows of Peters & Co., Boston, cost $300 each. Each pane occupies an entire sash, and is eight feet by six in size. They were imported from England.

A NATION which would be prosperous, must prosecute various branches of industry and supply its vital wants, mainly by the labor of its own hands.

Railties. As soon as the ground can be got ready, railties seed may be sown. To secure supply, the sowings must be repeated every two weeks.

Beets. Make your drills two feet apart drill in your seed four inches asunder, cover, and press down. When your plants are up, and a few inches high thin out to eight inches.

Small Saladting. as cress, mustard, &c., may now be sown on warm borders.

Substitute for wood. A singular substance has lately reached the country from Singapore, and promises to become of some importance as a material for the handles of knives, tools, and all instruments which require great strength. It is a pale greyish salmon colored material, rather stringy, softening at 150 degrees, and then capable of being moulded into any form. It is hard, compact, and not very unlike horn in texture.

Rearing Apple Trees.—A gentleman in Bohemia, has established a beautiful plantation of the best sort of apple trees, which have neither sprung from the seeds nor from grafting. His plan is to take shoots from the choicest sorts, insert each of them into a potatoe, and plunge both into the ground, leaving but an inch or two of the shoots whilst it pushes out roots, and the shoot gradually springs up and becomes a beautiful tree, bearing the best of fruit, without requiring to be grafted.

The less notice we take of the unkindness and injuries that are done us, the more we consult the quiet of our minds.

He who always speaks the truth is respected.

Negotiations are proceeding, on behalf of her Majesty, Queen Victoria, for a mansion in the neighborhood of Cowes, Isle of Wight, which it is intended to convert into a marine residence for her Majesty and the Royal family.

Queen Victoria has presented a pair of silver chased candlesticks to Mrs. Hollderness, the lady whose carriage the Queen used to return to the castle after the late accident.

The diamonds and pearls in the crown of Queen Victoria is valued at 112,000*l*.

Cut Feed. The question is often asked whether much is gained by cutting up hay straw, &c., to feed neat stock. Something depends on circumstances. If your hay is of the first quality, your cattle will eat the whole without cutting, and save you the labor. But if your fodder is mostly poor, or if it has been injured in making, you will do well to cut it short, and mix something with it to make it more palatable.

We have had coarse fodder cut fine, and sprinkled with water, and by adding a little meal, and mixing the whole together, our cattle have been wintered at less expense than on merchantable hay. Cows in milk live well on it, and it seems to be the best way of disposing of a quantity of hay that is not good. Straw also may be disposed of in this mode. We make it a saving, as we do by hashing up neat that is not fit enough for eating without an addition of butter, or something that will improve the meat.

Husks and corn tops, when well saved, have much virtue in them; and most of it goes into the manure heap, unless particular attention is paid to foddering. Cattle find it difficult to bite off the stems, though they place one foot on a part of them, while they pull with teeth and gums. Some farmers cut them up fine for their cattle, and say they would do it even though the stems should be worth nothing for fodder, because of the trouble they make in overhauling the manure. When all the coarse fodder is cut short, there will be no long manure; a shovel will enter the heap, and when spread, a harrow will bury it sufficiently. —Ploughman.

TO HAVE GOOD CROPS.

Farmers are apt to place too much dependence upon manure, supposing that if they apply that in sufficient quantity, nothing else is required. This error is, of course, of equally evil tendency to that of using no manure at all; but I was almost ready to say it was not very much less so. If the soil be not properly prepared for its reception, and if the manure be not properly made, preserved, and applied, it will matter little whether the 'manure heap' resemble a mountain or a mole-hill. But it cannot be expected that the minute details of all the practice involved in all this can be given in the space afforded by any periodical. One great point is to cultivate no more land than you can cultivate well, both as to labor and manure. If you have more land and less money than you can use with full effect, turn a portion of the land into money by selling it and apply the proceeds to the improvement of that retained. Thus reduce the size of your farm to the capacity of your efficient forces, labor and money—instead of trying to extend your stunted forces over too wide a surface, and thus weakening them and destroying their efficiency. The second principle is, to put your soil into good condition, liming, deep ploughing, manuring, and correcting its proportions of clay and sand when practicable. All land, in my opinion, will be greatly benefited by the application of lime. Some requires more, some less, to produce the same results, but all lands require it as a constituent of the soil. You will find lime most active on red lands, but it is useful on all kinds. Deep ploughing is in my opinion, essential to successful farming. If you have a thin soil, by deep ploughing, liming, and manuring, you will in a very few years, secure a deep soil. Even though you do turn up a portion of the blue clay with your four horse plough, don't be frightened at the sight of it. It is better to have blue clay mixed in a deep soil, than a hard pan of it under a thin one. But if you find too much clay thus turned up, correct its stiffness by carting sand upon it, and mixing it with the clay. A cart-load of sand is often of more value to a soil than the same quantity of manure. Reverse the process, if any portion of the land be too sandy—carry clay to it, and thus stiffen it.

The advantage of deep ploughing is, ways most inculcated. It will ultimately make a deep soil, and a deep soil is essential to a good crop in a dry season. The roots of the plants strike deeply into it instead of spreading out horizontally near the surface, as they are compelled to do in a thin soil, and thus secured from the effects of drought. The rain sinks into a deep soil, and thus preserved to the uses of the crop; while in a thin soil, it runs off, is soon evaporated, or stands on the surface, doing little good in the former cases, and absolute injury in the latter. I should not only plough deep, but I should follow in the furrow, the four horse plough, with a good sub-stratum plough, and this with the lining, judicious manuring, and proper rotation, I should calculate upon as my security for a good crop, always. I believe this practice not only the best preventive of winter-killing and injury from drought, but also of injury from the fly. By this practice you secure a robust constitution to the plant, and, of consequence, thus enable it to withstand, without harm, the pressure upon the sap vessels occasioned by the flaxseed pupa of the fly, as it becomes embedded in its surface. In illustration of the good effects of deep ploughing, I will refer to the practice of garden culture. Who ever doubted that deep spading—even two or three spits deep—was not only useful, but necessary to success? And in what does a garden differ from a farm? In size,—nothing else.—Farmer's Cabinet.

SIN AND PHILANTHROPY.

A True Tale.

In a city which shall be nameless, there lived, long ago, a young girl, the only daughter of a widow. She came from the country, and was as ignorant of the dangers of a city, as the squirrel of her native hills. She had glossy black hair, gentle-beaming eyes, and lips like wet coral. Of course she knew that she was beautiful; for when she was a child, strangers often stopped as she passed, and exclaimed how handsome she is. And as she grew older, the young men gazed on her with admiration. She was poor, and removed to the city to earn her living by covering umbrellas. She was just at that susceptible age, when youth is passing into womanhood, and when the soul begins to be pervaded by that restless principle, which impels poor humans to seek perfection in union.

At the hotel opposite, Lord Henry Stuart, an English nobleman, had at that time taken lodgings. His visit to this country is doubtless well remembered by many, for it made a great sensation at the time. He was a peer of the realm, descended from the royal line, and was, moreover, a strikingly handsome man, of right princely carriage. He was subsequently a member of the British Parliament, and is now dead.

As this distinguished stranger passed to and from his hotel, he encountered the umbrella girl, and was impressed by her uncommon beauty.

He easily traced her to the opposite store, where he soon after went to purchase an umbrella.

This was followed up by presents of flowers, chats by the way side, and invitations to walk or ride; all of which were gratefully accepted by the unsuspecting rustic. He was playing a game, for temporary excitement; showing a head full of romance, and a heart melting under the influence of love, was unconsciously endangering the happiness of her whole life.

Lord Henry invited her to the public gardens, on the fourth of July. In the simplicity of her heart, she believed all his flattering professions, and considered herself his bride elect; she therefore accepted the invitation, with innocent frankness. But she had no dress fit to appear on such a public occasion, with a gentleman of high rank, whom she very properly supposed to be her destined husband.

While these thoughts revolved in her mind, her eye was unfortunately attracted by a beautiful piece of silk, belonging to her employer. Ah! could she not take it, without being seen, and pay for it secretly, when she had earned money enough?

The temptation conquered her in a moment of weakness, she concealed the silk, and conveyed it to lodgings. It was the first thing she had ever stolen, and her remorse was so painful, she would have carried it back, but she dreaded discovery; she was not sure that her repentance would be met in a spirit of forgiveness.

On the evening fourth of July, she came out in her new dress; Lord Henry complimented her upon her elegant appearance, but she was not happy.

On their way to the gardens, he talked to her in a manner she did not comprehend. Perceiving this, she spoke more explicitly. The guileless young creature stopped, looked in his face with mournful reproach, and burst into tears. The nobleman took her hand kindly and said, my dear, you are no innocent girl! I am, I am, replied she, with convulsive sobs. Oh, you have I ever done or said, that you should say me that?

Her words stirred the deep emotions of his better nature. If you are innocent, said he, God forbid, that I should make you otherwise. But you accepted my invitations and presents so readily, that I supposed you to understand me.

What could I understand, said she, except that you intended to make me your wife?

Though reared amidst the proudest distinctions of rank, he felt no inclination to smile; he blushed and was silent. The heartless conventionalities of life stood rebuked in the presence of affectionate simplicity.

Oh! what if she should be discovered! And would not the heart of her poor widowed mother break, if she should ever know that her child was a thief!

Alas! her wretched forebodings were too true; the silk was traced to her, she was arrested, on her way to the store, and dragged to prison; there she refused all nourishment, and wept incessantly.

On the fourth day, the keeper called Isaac T. Hopper, and informed him that there was a young girl in prison, who appeared to be utterly friendless, and determined to die by starvation.

The kind-hearted old gentleman immediately went to her assistance. He found her lying on the floor of her cell, with her face buried in her hands, sobbing as if her heart would break; he tried to comfort her, but could obtain no satisfactory answer.

Leave us alone, said he to the keeper, perhaps she will speak to me, if there is none to hear. When they were alone together, he put back the linen from her temples, laid his hand kindly on her head, and said in soothing tones, my child, consider me as thy father, tell me all thou hast done. If thou hast taken this silk, let me know all about it. I will do for thee, as I would for a daughter; and I doubt not that I can help thee out of this difficulty.

After a long time spent in affectionate tenderness, she leaned her young head on his friendly shoulder, and sobbed out, Oh! I wish I was dead, what will my poor mother say, when she knows my disgrace!

Perhaps we can manage that she never shall know it, replied he; and alluring her by this hope, he gradually obtained from her the whole story of her acquaintance with the nobleman. He bade her be comforted, and take nourishment; for he would see that the silk was paid for, and the prosecution withdrawn.

He went immediately to her employer, and told him the story. This is her first offence, said he; the girl is young, and the only child of a poor widow. Give her the chance to retrieve this one false step, and she may be restored to society, a useful and honored woman. I will see that you are paid for the silk.

The man readily agreed to withdraw the prosecution, and said, he would have dealt otherwise had he known all the circumstances. Thou shouldst have enquired into the merits of the case, my friend, replied Isaac. By this kind of thoughtlessness, many a young creature is driven into the downward path, who might easily have been saved.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT.

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

ROBBERY AND LYNCHING.

For several days past quite an excitement has prevailed in our city, occasioned by a robbery, and the application of the Lynch law to the person, that is supposed to have perpetrated the act,—the particulars are as follows:

On Friday night last, the store of Messrs. Rolison and Finch was forcibly entered and robbed of from fifteen to fifteen hundred dollars in money, and other property to the amount of two hundred dollars or upwards. As soon as the affair was discovered, suspicion rested upon a colored person by the name of Chism, who was taken by a lawless banditti, under the pretence of a legal process, and hurried out some distance into the woods, where he was tied, stripped, and most inhumanly beaten or lacerated, till the fear of extinguishing life itself admonished the perpetrators of this outrage to desist. We are informed by those who have seen him that the wounds he exhibits are sufficient to shock humanity, and create a feeling of indignity against such a transaction, in every law-abiding person.

A prosecution was immediately commenced against a person by the name of Townsend, before Judge Johnson, on the charge of an Assault and Battery, and a verdict rendered of guilty; but for want of evidence to prove the full particulars of the case, he was fined but five dollars and a cent. Mr. J. Easton has since been tried on the charge of being accessory to the above crime; but was acquitted, there being no tangible evidence adduced against him.

We have a word to say about the manner in which this trial was conducted.

The Marshall of the city upon information given, arrested Mr. Easton for the purpose of bringing him before Daniel H. Wells, Esq., and had his witnesses prepared to give evidence before that magistrate. At this stage of affairs, a plot was entered into by some of his friends and associates for the purpose of taking him out of the hands of the Marshall and bringing him before another Justice of the peace. Accordingly, Mr. Finch, upon affidavit obtained a warrant from R. D. Foster to bring him forthwith before him. A jury was accordingly convened, witnesses called, and an investigation had; but as no testimony was adduced to condemn the prisoner, the main witness not being present, he was acquitted, for want of evidence. However, the matter was again called up by Judge Wells, who decided that he had no jurisdiction over the case, from the fact, that the prisoner had previously been tried and acquitted on the same charge. After the court dismissed the case, Gen. Smith fearlessly stated that he believed that it was a plot on the part of those who were instrumental in getting up the previous trial, to thwart the ends of justice, and screen the prisoner from the condemnation he justly deserves. Mr. Foster then stated by way of an apology, that at the time he issued the warrant, he did not know that the prisoner was under an arrest, or that there was any process against him. We hope for the honor of such a man as Mr. Foster, that his statement is true. Mr. Foster, however, called upon one of his jurors, Mr. Caring, to corroborate what he had said; but to our astonishment, he replied that when Mr. Foster summoned him to appear and act as a jurymen, that he was not informed what case he was to act upon, nor did he learn till he entered the office, where he acted according to the evidence given, but believed then as well as now, that it was a sham trial, and a mere mockery of justice. Whether or not there was any honest or justice in the above transaction, we do not pretend to determine; but suffice it to say, that the public judge for themselves. The statement of the negro was that Messrs. Easton, Townsend and W. H. J. Marr were the persons engaged in this diabolical affair. Mr. Gibbs, one of the witnesses against Townsend, believed the above persons were engaged in it; but as a negro knows nothing in this state, and Mr. Gibbs could not positively swear to it—of course we don't know; but we have our opinion and so have the public; we don't remember of ever having seen more indignation manifest than was manifested on this occasion, and the public mind is not satisfied at the turn affairs have taken. Lynch law will not do in Nauvoo, and those who engaged in it must expect to be visited by the wrath of an indignant people; not according to the rules of Judge Lynch; but according to law and equity.

We are glad to see the laws of the land enforced to the very letter; but we are decidedly opposed to the Lynch law in any shape whatever, or to any individual or set of individuals, taking the law into their own hands. We are for equal rights and privileges, and even-handed justice; but we hate oppression, tyranny and mobocracy, let it come from what source it may.

We have no right to say whether or not the negro is guilty of the crime alleged against him, but if he is, we sincerely hope that the laws of our country may be enforced upon him, that he may be thus brought to justice.

Indeed, we regret that it has become our duty to record such an outrage, having taken place in our city or its vicinity, and hope that we never shall be called upon to do the like again; but we take pride in stating, that those who were engaged in this scandalous transaction, are in no way connected with the society of Latter-Day Saints; but are persons who came here as speculators, or for other purposes perhaps best known to themselves.

Mr. Townsend says he hails from Missouri, and certainly we have no reason to doubt his word, when we consider that he has made himself notorious by exhibiting one of the characteristics of the people of that State, especially those of the more counties, which is that of Lynching, or, comparatively speaking, trampling the laws of the country under their feet.

On Monday last Chancy L. Higbee, a lawyer, was brought before Daniel H. Wells, Esq., on the charge of using abusive language to, and insulting the City Marshal, while in the discharge of his official duty—he was fined ten dollars.

On the same day R. D. Foster Esq. was taken before Isaac Higbee, J. P.; and fined ten dollars, for a breach of the ordinance pertaining to gambling, &c.

We are sorry to find that our lawyers and magistrates should be taking the lead among gamblers and disorderly persons, and be numbered among law-breakers, rather than supporting virtue, law, and the dignity of the city.

Drowned. On Sunday the 31st ult. about a mile above Louisiana Mo. in the Mississippi river, a man by the name of Nicholas Hostman, a German emigrant, on his way to Burlington, Iowa, fell from a large tow by the Steamer Amaranth, and passed directly under the wheel. The boat was instantly stopped, the yawl sent out, and every exertion made to save him—but after a few struggles, holding up his hand, he sank into a watery grave, far from the land of his birth, with strangers only to witness his sudden exit to eternity.

DEDICATION.

Next Friday is the day set apart for the dedication of the Masonic Temple. A great number of the Fraternity are expected to be in attendance.—the following are some of the songs to be sung on the occasion.

THE ENTERED PRENTICE SONG.
Come let us prepare, ye brothers that are,
Assembled on merry occasion,
Let's be happy and sing, for life is a spring,
To a free and an accepted mason.

The world is in pain our secrets to gain,
And all let them wonder and gaze on;
They may not divine the word or the sign,
Of a free and an accepted mason.

Thy this and thy that, they cannot tell what,
Why so many great men in the nation;
Should sprout put out, to make themselves one
With a free and an accepted mason.

Great kings, dukes and lords, have laid by their Swords,
Our mystery to put a good grace on;
And thought themselves fain'd to have them—
With a free and an accepted mason.

We're true and sincere, and just to the fair,
They trust us on any occasion;
No mortal can more the ladies adore
Than a free and an accepted mason.

Let's join hand in hand, by each brother firm stand.
Let's be merry, and put a bright face on;
Whit mortal can boast so noble a toast
As a free and an accepted mason.

Hail! mysterious, glorious science,
Which to discord bids defiance,
Harmony alone reigns here,
Come let's sing to him that raised us
From the rugged path that man'd us,
To the light that we revere.

We hail our holy patron's name,
Whose bright example guides us still;
His highest honors we proclaim,
While grateful thanks to our temples fill.

(Dedication to Virtue.)

While thus we seek in pure desire,
Immortal bliss, remains above;
Our hearts shall kindle at the fire,

FOR THE ANNIVERSARY OF ST. JOHN.
Hail! masonry, thou craft divine,
Come brethren! let us cheerful join,
To celebrate this happy day,
And homage to our master pay.

Hail! happy, best and sacred place!
Where friendship brightens every face,
Where music adorns the choir,
Replenish with his noble square.

Next sing, my muse, our warden's praise,
With chords loud, in tuneful lays;
Oh! may these columns never decay,
Until the world dissolves away.

My brethren cheerful join with me,
To sing the praise of masonry;
The noble, faithful, and the brave,
Whose art shall live beyond the grave.

Americans in China.—One of our evening contemporaries, the Commercial, has in account from Canton of a very interesting interview between Mr. Forbes, the American Consul, and Keying, the Imperial Commissioner and a kinsman to the Emperor, with the view of obtaining permission for Mr. Forbes to proceed to Peking on his arrival. The place selected by Keying for the interview with Mr. Forbes was an elegant mansion on the River, a few miles above Canton, the country residence of Puntingqua, a wealthy Chinaman. Mr. Forbes was accompanied by Dr. Parker (the Missionary,) and Mr. Edward King. Keying had with him K'ing, the Viceroy of the two Kwang Provinces (the most unruly Provinces in the Empire,) and Hwang and Hienling, associates of the commissioner.

The Americans were conducted to the presence of the commissioners by two mandarins, and found them in the largest apartment of the house; the central portion of the room was tened in as it were by ranges of chairs and small Chinese tables, forming a large hollow square. Within this were Keying and his associates. As the Americans approached Keying came forward and received them most graciously, asking the name of each when presented and shaking them all cordially by the hand. His example was followed by the Viceroy, and then Keying pointed seats to his visitors near his own, taking care that all were seated at the same moment with himself. The attendants, petty mandarins and servants, amounting to nearly a hundred, stood about the room, gazing at the Americans with evident curiosity. None were seated except the four high officers and the guests.

Mr. Forbes was placed at the left side of Keying, the Chinese post of honor, and between them was a small table on which they both leaned. A linguist then came forward, knelt at the feet of Keying, performing the kotou, and then stood erect before him to interpret. Keying first asked concerning the health of Mr. Forbes, how long he had been in China, if he had a pleasant passage, and lastly now old he was—this question, oddly enough, being deemed a compliment by the Chinese. He then told Mr. Forbes that his own age was 55, and that of the Viceroy 65.

The object of Mr. Forbes was, first to present his credentials and be recognized as consul, and then to fulfill his instructions respecting the reception of Mr. Cushing at Peking—the latter a delicate affair, which required much tact and judgment, and Mr. Forbes being obliged to communicate through Dr. Parker and the native linguist, each understanding the other's language imperfectly, the difficulty was much increased. The business conference was opened by the production of Mr. Forbes's commission as consul, to which was attached the signature of the President, John Tyler. Dr. Parker at the same time produced a Chinese translation of the document, which Keying placed upon the original and slowly read aloud every word, and whenever the commission requested the Chinese authorities to protect and give aid to the consul, he put his hands together and waving them up and down declared emphatically, as the Chinese linguist said, "truly must do so," to which his associates murmured assent. He and the Viceroy appeared to look with much interest upon the signature of the President, and all the petty mandarins crowded round to have a sight of it.

After this servants brought little bowls, made of cocoanut shells, beautifully carved on the outside and lined with silver; these were filled with a thick sweet liquid, composed of pounded almonds and rice, boiled with sugar, and very hot; the officers each took a bowl, as did the guests also, and the former gravely nodding their heads, all drank together.

The Imperial commissioner invited the American gentlemen to partake of some refreshment with him. And a small regiment of servants made their appearance, bearing a great variety of little porcelain cases and bowls, filled with Chinese delicacies, among which the famous bird's nest soup was not forgotten. The Americans made out awkwardly enough with the chopsticks, he more than once jostled him with his own. He also took four small cakes with his fingers from his own dish, partly rose from his seat and gave one to each of the guests, which was a high compliment. The entertainment consisted chiefly of little paste balls, stuffed with meat and fruit.

The object of the visit being made known, the Commissioner observed,—"Why go to Peking and added, in substance, that there was no necessity of his going to Peking as the commercial privileges and terms which had been agreed upon with the English, were granted also to the Americans and all other foreigners, and everything had been settled. He then repeated, "Why go to Peking?" and asked with some anxiety what object Mr. Cushing could have in going there, other than that of arranging a commercial treaty. He said that if there was no other object, it would be perfectly useless for Mr. Cushing to go there, for no one in Peking knew anything about the foreign trade, and evinced the most decided unwillingness that such an intention should be persisted in, dwelling much upon the language and difficulty of going so far, and the uselessness of talking so much trouble. This is in consonance with the intercourse policy always observed by the Chinese. The object itself does not so much arise from any hostility on the part of the Emperor, as from the uniform desire of the Viceroy and Commis-sioners to keep the Foreign Commerce of that country entirely in their possession, without any interference from the Emperor, to whom they do not wish any appeals to be made. The same obstacles were presented on the application of Lord Martiney, but his Embassy was of too much importance to refer its objects to the decision of subordinates. Mr. Cushing will make his way, some how or other, to Peking, or we have mistaken the latitude in which he was born.

Story of a Bear.—Many years ago a beautiful little cub bear was caught by a stout lad near the borders of Lake Winnipicosee, in New Hampshire, carried into town, and after proper dressing became the playfellow of the boys of the village, and often accompanied them to the school house. After passing a few months in civilized society, he made his escape into the woods, and in a few years was almost forgotten. The school-house, meantime, had fallen from the schoolmaster's into the schoolmistress's hands; and instead of large boys learning to write and cipher, small boys and girls were taught in the same place knitting and spelling. One winter's day, after a mild fall of snow, the door had been left open by some urchin going out, when, to the unspeakable horror of the spectacled dame and her threescore hopeful scholars, an enormous bear walked in, in the most familiar manner in the world, and took a seat by the fire. Huddling over the benches as fast as they could, the children ran about their schoolmistress who fled to the furthest corner of the room; and there they stood, crying and pushing to escape the horror of being eaten first. The bear sat snuffing and warming himself, by the fire, showing great signs of satisfaction, but putting off his meal until he had warmed himself thoroughly. The screams of the children continued, but the schoolhouse was far from any other habitation, and the bear did not seem at all embarrassed by the outcry. After sitting and turning himself about for some time, Drump got up on his hind legs, and showing to the door began to take down, one by one, the hats, bonnets and satchels that hung on several rows of pegs behind it. His memory had not deceived him, for they contained, as of old, the children's dinners. Having satisfied himself with their bread, cheese, pies, doughnuts and apples, Drump smelt at the mistress's desk; but finding it locked, gave himself a shake of resignation, opened the door, and disappeared. The alarm was given, and the amiable creature was pursued and killed, very much to the regret of the towns people, when it was discovered by some marks on his body, that it was their old friend and playfellow.—[Belknap Gazette.]

TEMPERANCE.
There is no vice, that has ever made its appearance among the children of men, in any age of the world, which has been more detrimental to society; than a perpetual intemperate course of life, none more degrading to the individuals who fall victims to its seducing influences, none more offensive to God and those who obey his commandments, none better calculated to create domestic broils, brings more to an untimely end, or has a greater tendency to corrupt moral principles. By a continual course of intemperate habits, men are apt to yield up the government of their desires and passions, give loose reign to their appetites, and they cannot tell to what length they will carry them.

This vice has more or less infested every city in the known world, as well as the city of Nauvoo; where I am sorry to say many of the inhabitants have been contaminated by its influence. Now understanding as we do, that this vice is the mother of crimes, and that many have been contaminated by its influence, we have fixed a stain upon our characters, which nothing but repentance and humility has power to wash away. Now understanding as we do, that this vice is the mother of crimes, and that many have been contaminated by its influence, we have fixed a stain upon our characters, which nothing but repentance and humility has power to wash away. But thank God! the principle of reform is a principle of salvation, and true courage, fortitude, and faith has no disposition, to conceal faults, but to acknowledge them; and able to combat the powers of intemperance, until there shall be neither root nor branch left, to contaminate the fingers of our posterity. Now to those who have contaminated themselves with this evil, I make this appeal; I make it, not only for our own benefit, but for the benefit of our posterity which shall follow us; I make it because the spirits of our progenitors are sighing in sorrow because of our folly, I make it because our Presidential contest is at hand, and our united efforts together with temperate habits are necessary that the stamps and a us-army not refuse us a congregation, to whom we may reimburse the glorious principles of our Candidates. Under these circumstances, with united zeal and fortitude, let us oppose the torrent of this vice which rise in heaps around us, that we may gain a rank among those who stand fast in the kingdom, like a rock in the ocean, which bids defiance to the surging waves, the largest class of ships are torn asunder by coming in contact with it; and the storms of calumny, popular clamour, sectarian prejudice, and even priest craft, are not able to confound them; and who have been distinguished by thinking profound, acting nobly, dispelling popular prejudice, and in times of prevailing licentiousness, to maintain unblemished virtue, and uncorrupted integrity, in a public and private way, to stand firm by what is fair and just, all opposition and discharge every duty towards God and man. Men who are endowed with these qualifications, are incapable of lending to low considerations, it is in vain to flatter or threaten them, they rest on a principle, which the storms of persecution or the combined powers of earth and hell are too feeble to deter; they are incapable of betraying their trust, or deserting a friend in the hour of danger. It is accordingly this steady and inflexible virtue and this regard to principle, which has marked the character of the one in any age of the world, who have shone with distinguished lustre, and consecrated their memory to posterity.

Now let us compare those virtues with the vices which daily surround us; we see grog shops more or less inward and plenty of visitors around them, we see them handy, but not high minded; we see them lovers of whiskey, but not lovers of God; they are in form like men but in principle they are fools. From such turn away, for when wine is in vint, out is God and his declared; that they only who seek wisdom, shall find it, and that fools shall be punished because of their transgression, and that the way of the transgressor is hard.

DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.

The Democrats of the counties composing the sixth Congressional District, are requested to hold conventions in their respective counties, and elect delegates to attend a District Convention to be held in the town of Rock Island on Wednesday the first day of May next, for the purpose of nominating a candidate to represent this district in the ensuing Congress. As no ratio was fixed upon by the former Convention, the committee have agreed upon the following ratio, to wit: One delegate for each county; and one delegate for every five hundred inhabitants in each county. We hope that every county will be fully represented in the Convention.

EARTHQUAKE IN GUERNSEY.

(Abridged from the Guernsey (Eng.) Star of Dec.)
On the afternoon of Friday last, at a few minutes before four o'clock, the shock of an earthquake was felt throughout the whole of this island, of very considerable violence. For some days previous the weather had been perfectly calm, and the temperature so mild that many persons continued sun-bathing; the only remarkable meteorological circumstance being, that a luminous body, resembling a glowing moon, was seen over the island at seven o'clock on Wednesday evening, which continued visible for ten or fifteen minutes, and that the evening, excepting during the short appearance of the meteor, were impenetrably dark. The whole of Friday, till about three o'clock, had been fine and bright, but the sky had somewhat an unusual appearance, the clouds being singularly tinted with pale green, red, and purple. At the time when the shock was felt—seven minutes before four—the sky was partially overcast, and had a rainy appearance, the wind blowing in slight squalls from the southward and south-westward. At the time above-mentioned, a loud rumbling or unrelenting noise was heard in every part of the island, accompanied by one or two shocks, which, to our apprehension, had much less affinity to the concussion produced by an explosion, than to the benumbing effect created by electricity. This phenomenon, it is generally agreed, lasted about four seconds, and was evidently subterranean.

The shock, as we have already stated, was felt in all parts of the island, and every where appears to have produced the same effects. Persons out of doors felt the earth heave under them, in some cases so violently as to oblige them to lay hold of the nearest object for support. The banks and hedges of fields were seen to be in motion, and in the houses the furniture and goods were rocked and shaken. Buildings of all kinds were distinctly seen to heave and shake, as well as the pier walls, the iron railings at the south west corner of the quay, and the massive quay at St. Sampson's harbour. The top of the town church was violently agitated, and the bell struck twice.

Martineau is fully persuaded that he has now realized his fond expectations; that the object of all his toil, labor and hope, has been accomplished; and that he will be regarded by all future generations as the true Philanthropist; as having been the instrument, under the direction of an overruling Providence, of rendering good to the greatest number, will be cheerfully conceded.

SIN AND PHILANTHROPY.

The good old man then went to the hotel, and enquired for Henry Stuart. The servant said his lordship had not yet risen. "Tell him my business is of importance," said friend Hopper. The servant soon returned and conducted him to the chamber. The nobleman appeared surprised that a plain old Quaker should thus intrude upon his luxurious privacy; but when he heard his errand, he blushed deeply, and frankly admitted the truth of the girl's statement. His benevolent visitor took the opportunity to "hear a testimony," as the Friends say, against the sin and selfishness of profligacy. He did it in such a kind and fatherly manner, that the young man's heart was touched.

He excused himself by saying that he would not have tampered with the girl, if he had known her to be virtuous. I have done many wrong things, said he, but thank God, no betrayal of confiding innocence rests on my conscience. I have always esteemed it the basest act of which man is capable. The imprisonment of the poor girl, and the forced situation in which she had been found, distressed him greatly.

When Isaac represented that the silk had been stolen for his sake, that the girl had thereby lost profitable employment, and was obliged to return to her distant home, to avoid the danger of exposure, he took out a fifty dollar note, and offered it to pay her expenses. Nay, said Isaac, thou art a very rich man; I see in thy hand a large roll of such notes.

She is the daughter of a poor widow, and thou hast been the means of doing this great injury; give me another. Lord Henry handed him another fifty dollar note, and smiled as he said, you understand your business well. But you have acted nobly, and I reverence you for it. If you ever visit England, come to see me. I will give you a cordial welcome, and treat you like a nobleman.

Farewell, friend, replied Isaac, though much to blame in this affair, thou too hast behaved nobly. Mayest thou be blessed in domestic life, and trifle no more with the feelings of poor girls; not even with those whom others have betrayed and deserted.

Luckily, the girl had sufficient presence of mind to assume a false name when arrested; by which means her true name was kept out of the newspapers.

I did this said she, for my poor mother's sake. With the money given by Lord Henry, the silk was paid for, and she was sent home to her mother, well provided with clothing. Her name and place of residence remained to this day a secret in the breast of her benefactor.

Several years after the incidents I have related, a lady called at friend Hopper's house and asked to see him. When he entered the room, he found a handsomely dressed young matron, with a blooming boy of five or six years old.

She rose to meet him, and her voice, though, as she said, friend Hopper, do you know me? He replied that he did not. She fixed her tearful eyes earnestly upon him and said, you once helped me when in great distress. But the good missionary of humanity had helped too many in distress to be able to recollect her, without more precise information.

With a tremulous voice, she bade her son go into the next room, for a few minutes; then dropping on her knees, she hid her face in his lap, and sobbed out, I am the girl, that stole the silk. Oh, when should I now have been, if it had not been for you! When her emotion was somewhat calmed, she told him that she had married a highly respectable man, a senator of a native state. Having a call to visit the city, she had again and again passed friend Hopper's house, looking wistfully at the windows to catch a sight of him; but when she attempted to enter, her courage failed.

But I go away to-morrow, said she, and I could not leave the city, without once more seeing and thanking him, who saved me from ruin. She recalled her little boy, and said to him: look at that old gentleman, and remember him well, for he was the best friend your mother ever had. With an earnest invitation that he would visit her happy home, and a fervent "God bless you," she bade her benefactor farewell.

My venerable friend is not aware that I have written this story. I have not published it from any wish to glorify him but to exert a genial influence on the hearts of others; to do my mite towards teaching society how to cast out the Demon Penalty, by the voice of the Angel Love.

ANNEXATION OF TEXAS.

The following interesting letter on this subject, is furnished by the Washington correspondent of the New York True Sun:

Washington, Feb. 21, 1844.

I can state to you, on the most undoubted authority—authority in which every reliance can be placed, that Mr. Tyler and Mr. Upshur are about negotiating a treaty with Texas for the annexation of that country to the United States.

By some means or other the President has been induced to believe that 33 Senators, (they have counted noses, will ratify the treaty when made; thus this manoeuvre entirely takes the question out of the hands of the House of Representatives, and completely steals a march upon that body of political schemers. The political capital to be manufactured out of this transaction, is very evident; should it succeed, Mr. Tyler considers himself placed even in a higher niche in the esteem of his countrymen, than the immortal Jefferson. He, it is true, purchased Louisiana, under the pressure of the Western excitement, which had it not thus been allayed, would have stormed New Orleans by arms, and involved us in a desperate war with France; but Mr. Tyler intends to do an equally important act in the way of acquiring territory—unassisted by feeling, and ignorant of the Senate's intentions. If he succeeds, he considers that he will have a fair claim upon the gratitude of the country in general, and upon the South in particular.

This matter has long been in agitation between Mr. Tyler and Mr. Upshur. A few months ago, a confidential agent was despatched by the State department, to the Government of Texas, in order that he might receive and communicate the official intentions and desires of that government in relation to the proposed annexation.

These papers have been received, and upon them as a data, a treaty is now being drawn up to be presented for the consideration of the Senate, in the full confidence that it will be speedily ratified.

The most difficult part of this transaction consists in giving the necessary State reasons that should warrant such precipitate and secret action these reasons have been furnished in detail, by the Texian authorities, and may be briefly condensed as follows:

Unassailed by foreign foes, and at peace from internal strife, Texas finds herself unable to maintain her position among the independent powers of the earth from inherent weakness. She has not wealth enough within her borders to sustain a separate Government, and therefore an imperative necessity compels her to submit her independence to some wealthier power in consideration of protection to be furnished.

This necessity, it is said, has been established to exist; and it is true, Texas most speedily be annexed to the United States or become an appendage of Great Britain. She is already heavily indebted to that country for pecuniary assistance, and she possesses no means of discharging the debt unless by the surrender of her self. Should not the United States assume the obligation by annexing her to our territories?

This forms the ground work of the State necessity, which it is proposed to offer to the Senate in argument for the treaty. The reasons why Texas should not fall beneath the dominion of Great Britain, are the slave question, and the command of New Orleans which would be given to that power in the event of war—for by descending the Red, Alabama, and other streams, which, bordering the north of Texas, empty into the Mississippi, and cut off New Orleans from the Gulf, to our infinite damage and annoyance. The valley of the Mississippi is accessible in nearly all directions from the territory of Texas, which is, in fact a part of it and the possession of which has been considered as very desirable by all classes of politicians from Jefferson to Clay.

That the South will never peaceably behold Texas in possession of Great Britain and erected into a non-slave holding state, is very evident. A border warfare on the subject of runaway slaves would be raised in less than three months after any such disposition of matters; and in order to avoid these causes of disturbance the treaty is to be urged upon the immediate notice of the Senate.

It is, however, probable that the House of Representatives will have a hand in the final arrangement of the question, because the debts of Texas must be assumed and paid by the United States when she is admitted into the Union, and the appropriation of any money on that account must have its origin in the house.

ANNEXATION OF TEXAS.—As soon as the debate upon the 21st rule is closed, the annexation of Texas to the United States will probably arise—so prognostications from Washington assure us. Although the real points of discussion are not over many, yet there will undoubtedly be much extraneous matter logged into the controversy, and we may expect a display of party bitterness, rancor, and animosity, but seldom witnessed even in Congressional debates. The great difficulty of separating the main subject from collateral issues which accompany it, will be the rock which will disturb and agitate the turbulent tide of party politics, and cause a muddying of the waters to a still greater degree, in a stream never over and above pellucid or calm. The present time, above all others is peculiarly unfavorable to anything like calm or candid consideration of the subject. The discussion of the abolition question has exasperated the public mind, in both the Northern and Southern States, and this very subject forms the strongest objectional feature in the minds of Northern men to the annexation. At the South, the feeling of exasperation is still stronger, rendered so by the wordy warfare which has been going on in Congress, which they look upon as created by an attempt on the part of the North to infringe upon their rights, and an embittered feeling of anger and settled opposition is the result.

The debate, therefore, in Congress, on the subject of the annexation of Texas, will not be so much the consideration of the real question at issue, as it may result for the good or detriment of the interests of our common country, as for an occasion to let out the bitterness which is boiling over in the breasts of political partisans. The present state of feeling in Congress, and the tone of the political presses, evidently lead to this conclusion, that a stormy time may be expected. We hope, though but faintly, that the oil of reason and patriotism may in season be poured over the angry flood which threatens so much mischief to the Union, though we see not at present any just grounds for supposing that it will.

An impartial statement of the question as it now is, however much it may hereafter be embarrassed by complex issues, appears to us to be given in the following extract from a letter by the Washington correspondent of the N. Y. True Sun.

"The first question that arrests us in the examination of this subject is, whether the United States possess the abstract right of appropriating Texas; that is, whether, in the annexation of that country, we do not violate some right of property vested in another, or is Texas free from foreign claims upon her. Mexico is the only country which makes that claim. Texas was originally a possession of France, by the universally acknowledged title of the first discoverer of the soil, to the possession of it. Louisiana claimed it for France in 1803, and it remained an appendage to that kingdom until it was purchased by the United States, as a part of Louisiana. By the treaty of 1819, the United States ceded to the Catholic Majesty, the King of Spain, unconventionally it is overruled, and in violation of the purchase treaty with France, whereby we became bound never to surrender that Territory. (The 3rd article of the said treaty is to that effect) the country now known as Texas, Spain at the same time, possessing a claim upon Mexico as her colony. By the Mexican revolution, Spain lost her dominion over that country, and when the independence of Mexico had been recognized (not by the mother country) by foreign powers, that recognition became the basis of her claim upon Texas, then a part of the same Spanish possessions.

But a similar revolution has been attended with the same results as in Mexico, the old authorities have been subverted, and a proprietorship has been subverted for the old. Texas has now the same right to her own soil as the inhabitants of Mexico have to theirs. This right of successful revolution is an admitted law of nations and can therefore be assumed as a postulate.

Now the people of Texas having a clear and indisputable right to their own soil, have by the laws of property a clear and indisputable right to dispose of it, and this disposition they have already made in favor of the United States. In 1836 the question of transfer was submitted by the proper authorities to the people, and agreed to with unparalleled unanimity, only 13 dissentient votes being polled; so that the right of Texas to dispose of herself being ascertained, and that disposition having been made in our favor, it only remains to inquire whether the people of the United States, in view of the compromises mutually made each other in the Constitution, possess the power of accepting the tendered offer. There are three methods whereby the Annexation may be effected:—1st—By treaty. 2d—By an Act of Congress without a treaty. 3d—By the right reserved to each State to enlarge its boundaries and annex additional territories with the consent of Congress.

By the first means we became possessors of Florida and Louisiana; and later, by the measurement of the line, we became dispossessed of House's Point, (contiguous to the northern boundaries of New York and Vermont,) where we had commenced the construction of a fort; we recovered it by the treaty of 1842. The right to acquire territory by the first means, is thus completely incorporated into our system of political economy, and could not be severed without convulsing all our consecrated institutions.

By the second means it may also be accomplished, because many of the new states were originally parts of the old states, and they were admitted into the Union by simple acts of Congress; as also Louisiana, and the states formed out of that purchase were admitted as soon as the Foreign claims upon them were cancelled, and the population amounted to the legal number. The language of the Constitution is,—"New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union." This is the broad language of that instrument and covers territory not then under the jurisdiction of Congress, for to confine it to the territory thus acquired, would be to interpolate a very serious clause.

By the third means the object can also be effected, for that each of the States possessed the power of extending their territory before the formation of the Constitution will not be denied, and that power still exists unless it has been bestowed upon the General Government.

Now, there is no such bestowal, unless it can be found in the following clause of the constitution:—"No State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power."

Then each State may, with the consent of Congress, enter into a compact with a foreign power; and this forms the third means for the acquisition of Texas. Texas is a foreign power, if not belonging to us; and if so, by the consent of Congress, can be annexed wholly or in part by the State of Louisiana.

The above covers all the constitutional, and abstract right ground of the question; but those which cause the greatest difficulty are to be looked for on the side of expediency. Two objections arise there; one that the territory proposed to be annexed is subject to slave institutions, and therefore distasteful to the non-slave-holding States; but as one State has no title to interfere, nor is affected by the domestic institutions of another, this objection resolves itself into one touching the equilibrium of the political balance of power between the North and South, and as such is worthy only of the attention of party schemes and partisan hacks.

The second objection is that it will increase our already overgrown territory to too great an extent. The present area of the United States amounts in round numbers to 2,000,000 of square miles, which, increased by the superficies of Texas, would be swollen to 2,318,000 square miles—a very considerable increase, which causes a smile, when we consider the efforts being made for an occupation of Oregon, a country separate from us by a chain of lofty mountains and bordered by a distant sea, while Texas is intimately associated with the Valley of the Mississippi, and already peopled with the Anglo-Saxon, the most superior race on earth.

Texas and Great Britain.—The sudden and zealous attempt to annex Texas to the Union, was predicated, among other reasons, upon the supposed controlling influence which Great Britain would exercise over the destinies of that Republic, and the attempts that would be made to interfere with the slave question. Lord Aberdeen, in reply to a note written by the Texan Charge des Affaires in London in reference to the unauthorized efforts in Texas to interfere in that matter, avowed that in declining all intention of interfering that there exists on the part of her Majesty's Government any disposition to interfere improperly in the affairs of Texas, Mr. Ashbel Smith is only rendering justice to her Majesty's Government. Nothing can be further from their intention than thus to interfere in the internal affairs of Texas. But, at the same time, the undersigned makes this declaration, he believes that Mr. Smith is fully aware of the continued anxiety of her Majesty's Government to see slavery abolished, not only in Texas, but in all parts of the world; and it is a matter of no surprise to the undersigned that private individuals, who are impressed with the same feelings, should exert every effort in their power to attain an object so desirable.

The declaration of non-interference is sufficiently broad and distinct to do away with any apprehensions on that point. There appears to be an indifference generally on the question of annexation.

The Supreme Court of the United States has declared the Valuation Law of Illinois to be unconstitutional. The decision was made in the case of J. L. H.

McCracken vs. Chas. Hayward, on a certificate of division in opinion from the Circuit Court of the United States for Illinois. Mr. Justice Baldwin delivered the opinion of the court:—1st. That the motion made by the plaintiff's counsel ought to be granted in manner and form as the same is asked; 2d. That the return of the marshal on the execution, under which the property was appraised, and not sold because two-thirds of the appraised value was not bid therefore, should be set aside as insufficient; 3d. That the court should direct the marshal to sell the property levied on in the usual mode at public auction to the highest bidder, without having the same valued by three householders, without regard to the valuation which has been made, and without requiring two-thirds of said valuation to be bid therefor; 4th. That the court should direct the marshal to proceed and sell the property without regard to the provisions of the act of 27th February, 1841, of the legislature of Illinois, and the rule adopting said law at the June term of 1841; 5th. That the court should direct the enforcement of said judgment according to the laws regulating the remedy when said judgment was entered and the contract made.—St. Louis Republican.

Oregon.—The National Intelligencer of the 12th, publishes the following as an extract of a letter dated "Tepic," December 10, 1843, from a gentleman, a native of Washington, just received:

"This letter will be taken to the United States by Mr. Hastings, who is on his way home from the Oregon Territory. He gives a very bad description of that country; in fact, he says that it is a country that can never be settled by an agricultural people. I see that a considerable uproar is constantly made in the United States about that country; but I have seen a great many persons who have been to that section, and they all coincide in opinion with Mr. Hastings.—This gentleman induced to believe that it was a complete paradise, took out one hundred and forty settlers from Missouri; but they all found their way to California. Some of the missionaries have given a very false account of that country."

A YANKEE TACK.—Just before the Declaration of Independence, a Yankee pedler started down to New York to sell a parcel of bowls and dishes he had made of maple. Jonathan traveled over the city, asking every body to buy his wares, but no one was disposed to buy wooden dishes. It happened that a British fleet was then lying in the harbor of New York, and Jonathan struck upon a plan of selling his dishes. So he got a full naval uniform, by hook or by crook, (for history doesn't tell where he got it) and strutting up town one morning, asked a merchant if he had any nice wooden wares, that the Commodore wanted a lot for the fleet. The merchant replied that he had none on hand, but there was some in town, and if he would send in the afternoon, he could supply him. Very good, said our naval officer, and out he went, and cut for home; and he had scarcely doffed his borrowed plumage, before down came the merchant, who seeing that Jonathan had sold no wares, offered to take the whole if he would deduct fifty per cent; but Jonathan said he'd be darned if he didn't take 'em home before he'd take a cent less than his first price. So the merchant paid him down in gold his price for the wooden ware, which laid on his shelves for many a long day thereafter; and Jonathan trotted home in a high glee at the success of his manoeuvre, while the merchant cursed British officers ever after that.

ROBBERY.—A tectorator, on being told that the temperance men were a band of robbers, said "yes, they have robbed the Poor house and the State prison of their victims."

A Woman Beheaded.—Heidelberg, Germany, Jan. 22.—An awful spectacle was this day been presented, such as, happily in modern times, has rarely been witnessed—the decapitation of a woman for the murder of her husband. The wretched murderess was a native of Wittenfeld, an inconsiderable hamlet in Odenwald, about two leagues distant from Heidelberg, and was the wife of a peasant. A clergyman attended to offer her the consolations of religion in her last moments. The culprit exhibited no extraordinary emotion, but surveyed the apparatus of death with perfect composure. Her countenance presented nothing of the ashy paleness of fear. She ascended the scaffold with a firm step, and took her seat in a chair which was placed in the centre of it. A troop of dragoons was drawn round the platform. A short prayer was read by the clergyman, after which, part of her attire was removed from her neck, and a cap was then drawn over her face. The remainder of the melancholy spectacle was sufficiently dramatic. There were two executioners, the principal minister of justice and an assistant. The latter twisted the sufferer's hair, and held it up at arm's length.

When this was done, the principal headman advanced with a broad two-handed sword. A silent thrill ran through the assembled multitude, who now understood that the fatal moment had arrived. The dreadful weapon was raised by the executioner, and a single blow severed the head from the body. A great flow of blood instantaneously flowed. The head was then held up to the gaze of the crowd, while the body sank through a trap-door, and the dismal scene closed.

There are over sixty newspaper publications in this city. Many of them reflect credit upon their proprietors, and make them no money. This is the case with more than one-half. Literature is a non-paying speculation now. The really talented are driven from the field, because they will not write to gratify a depraved taste—the consequence is, most of the publications current are edited and controlled by low and stupid fellows.—When the mass choose to be instructed, the republic of letters will be an independent affair.—[N. Y. Sunday Times.]

The arrival of the Packet Ship Liverpool, on the 8th ult., brings us news of the death of several distinguished persons.—General Bertrand, so lately the honored guest of this country, and the friend and champion of Napoleon, died at Chateauroux on the 1st Feb. The announcement of this event was the signal for general mourning throughout France.

The Chamber of Deputies, in announcing the death of the faithful companion of Napoleon in his adversity, M. de Bricqueville said, "his loss will be keenly felt by all well-thinking men. We have now a duty to fulfil—to unite his ashes to those of the Emperor. The Chamber, in so doing, will perform an act for which France will feel grateful."

The Infanta Charlotte, sister of the King of Naples, the Duchess of Berry, &c., died at Madrid on the 30th January. This event (says the Times) derives importance from the prospect it opens of the marriage of her son with the Queen Isabella, and the consequent settlement of the affairs of Spain.

Retrenchment at Last.—Mr. Hungerford of the State of New York has reported to the House from the Retrenchment Committee a bill cutting down the pay of Members to $6 per day and reducing the spoils of the officers about the Capitol. We hope it may pass, though it is made to take effect only from and after the 1st of July next. Better late than never! It also cuts down the salaries of the best paid clerks, &c., about the departments, and actually abolishes two offices—Solicitor of the Land Office and one of the Postmasters to Congress.

The Committee say they have more such bills to come. Let them grind them out, then, for the people would like any amount of legislation of this sort as a change from the non-doings of the last three months.

Singular way of Courting.—Deacon Marvin, of Connecticut, a large landholder, and an exemplary man, was exceedingly eccentric in some of his notions. His courtship is said to have been as follows. Having one day mounted his horse, with only a sheepskin for a saddle he rode in front of the house, where Betty Lee lived, and, without dismounting, requested Betty to come to him. On her coming, he told her the Lord had sent him there to marry her. Betty replied "the Lord's will be done."

The history of the Executive Department of the United States Government for the last three years, exhibits some most extraordinary facts. The official year has not yet quite expired. Within these three years, therefore, the United States Government has had three Presidents, two Vice Presidents, four Secretaries of State, four Secretaries of the Treasury, four Secretaries of War, six Secretaries of the Navy, four Attorney Generals, and three Postmaster Generals. This includes the administration of Van Buren. Since his administration, the account stands as follows:—

Presidents—Harrison, Tyler. 2
Sec'y State—Webster, Legare, Upshur, Nelson. 4
Sec'y Treasury—Ewing, Forward, Spencer. 3
Sec'y War—Bell, Spencer, Porter, Wilkins. 4
Sec'y Navy—Badger, Upshur, Hendshaw, Gilmer, Warrington. 5
Atty Generals—Crittenden, Legare, Nelson. 3
Postmaster Generals—Granger, Wick. 2
Total. —23

In those seven offices, in the ordinary and undisturbed course of events, seven persons would administer the Government for eight years. But in less than three years last past the number of incumbents has amounted to twenty-three. How many in the extraordinary providence of God, may have been called to fill those offices within the online four years from March 4th, 1844, to March 4th, 1855, no one can tell.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT.

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.ANNEXATION OF TEXAS TO THE UNION.

This question begins to assume a most interesting aspect, and together with the Oregon question, threatens to overshadow all other considerations involved in the great Presidential contest now agitating the country. We are astonished that a man of so high repute in our nation as Mr. Webster, should be so blind to the good interest of the nation as to oppose at this moment the accession to the proposals for this union or annexation. We say that Texas should be annexed to the United States, for two reasons, those of commercial and national advantages. Should it be ceded to Great Britain, in case a national war should ensue, she would be possessed of a country that will give her a decided advantage over us. We are glad to see that Gen. Smith, (our candidate for the Presidency,) is decidedly in favor of this important measure.

The following correspondence will doubtless be interesting to our readers. We copy from the Illinois State Register:

Washington, March 20, 1844.

Gentlemen: Several of the newspapers reaching this city on yesterday, contain a long letter, written by Mr. Webster, against the annexation of Texas to the United States. No official information has yet been given to the public that any treaty has been made, or even any negotiations going on upon that subject; and I regret to see the opinions of persons so distinguished as Mr. Webster thrown out on the public mind, evidently with the view to create prejudice in advance against such a measure.

I have long had in my possession the letter of another distinguished citizen of this country, deeply deploring the original loss of Texas by negotiation, and warmly advocating its restoration to the United States. Heretofore I have not thought it proper, in any respect, to publish that letter; but I am induced now to change that determination, and send you a copy of it. It was written by General Jackson, more than a year ago; and with no possible party purpose whatsoever. With him, the question of annexation rises infinitely above all mere party considerations. Subsequent letters (some very recent ones) which I have seen, whilst they show the deepest anxiety felt by him for the success of the measure, yet treat it throughout as a great national question, identified with the best interests of the whole country.

In the same spirit of nationality, I ask the publication of his opinions, that they may go out and stand before the country, side by side, with those of Mr. Webster. Gen. Jackson discusses the subject in various points of view, and especially in connection with the military defence of this country. In this last respect all must admit that he is peculiarly competent for his discussion. I sincerely hope that neither Mr. Webster's nor Gen. Jackson's letter will be read with a party bias, or for any other party purposes.

Respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
AARON V. BROWN.
Messrs. Blair & Rives.

Hermings, Feb. 12, 1843.

My dear sir:—
Yours of the 22d ultimo has been received, and with it the Madisonian, containing Gov. Gilmer's letter on the subject of the annexation of Texas to the United States.

You are not mistaken in supposing that I have formed an opinion on this interesting subject. It occupied much of my attention during my presidency, and I am sure has lost none of its importance by what has since transpired.

Soon after my election in 1829 it was made known to me by Mr. Erwin, formerly our minister at the court of Madrid, that whilst at that court he had laid the foundation of the treaty with Spain for the cession of the Florida, and the settlement of the boundary of Louisiana, fixing the western limit of the latter at the Rio Grande, agreeably to that he had written home to our government for powers to complete and sign this negotiation; but that instead of receiving such authority, the negotiation was taken out of his hands and transferred to Washington, and a new treaty was there concluded, by which the Sabine and not the Rio Grande, was recognised and established as the boundary of Louisiana.

Finding that these statements were true and that our government had really given up that important territory, when it was at its option to retain it, I was filled with astonishment. The right to territory was obtained from France. Spain stood ready to acknowledge it to the Rio Grande; and yet the authority asked by our minister to insert the true boundary was not only withheld, but in lieu of it, a limit was adopted with stripped us of the whole of the vast country lying between the two rivers.

On such a subject, I thought with the ancient Romans, that it was right never to cede any land or boundary of the republic, but always to add to it by honorable treaty, thus extending the era of freedom; and it was in accordance with this feeling that I gave our minister to Mexico instructions to enter upon a negotiation for the retrocession of Texas to the United States.

This negotiation failed, and I shall ever regret it as a misfortune to both Mexico and the United States. Mr. Gilmer's letter presents many of the considerations which, in my judgment, rendered the step necessary to the peace and harmony of the two countries; but the point in it at that time, which most strongly impelled me to the course I pursued, was the injustice done to us by the surrender of the territory, when it was obvious that it could have been retained without increasing the consideration afterwards given for the Florida. I could not but feel that the surrender of so vast and important a territory was attributable to an erroneous estimate of the tendency of our institutions, in which there was mingled some what of jealousy to the rising greatness of the south and west.

But I forbear to dwell in this part of the history of this question. It is past and cannot now be undone. We cannot only look at it as one of annexation, if Texas presents it to us; and if she does, I do not hesitate to say that the welfare and happiness of our Union require that it should be accepted.

If in a military point of view alone, the question be examined, it will be found to be most important to the United States to be in possession of that territory.

Great Britain has already made treaties with Texas; and we know that that far-seeing nation never omits a circumstance in her extensive intercourse with the world, which can be turned to account in increasing her military resources. May she not enter into alliance with Texas? and reserving (as she doubtless will) the northwestern boundary question as a cause of war with us whenever she chooses to declare it, let us suppose that, as an ally with Texas, we are to fight her! Preparatory to such a movement, she sends her 20,000 or 30,000 men to Texas; organizes them on the Sabine, where her supplies and arms can be concentrated before we have even notice of her intentions; makes a lodgment on the Mississippi; excites the negroes to insurrection; the lower country falls, and with it New Orleans; and a servile war rages throughout the whole South and West.

In the mean while she is also moving an army along the upper western frontier from Canada, which, in cooperation with the army from Texas, spreads ruin and havoc from the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico.

Who can estimate the national loss we may sustain, before such a movement could be repelled with such force as we could organize on short notice?

Remember that Texas borders upon us, on our west, to 42 deg. of north latitude, and is our southern boundary to the Pacific. Remember, also, that it annexed to the United States, our western boundary would be the Rio Grande, which is of itself a fortification on account of its extensive, barren and uninhabitable plains. With such a barrier on our west we are invincible. The whole European world could not, in combination against us, make an impression on our Union. Our population on the Pacific would rapidly increase, and soon be strong enough for the protection of our eastern wharves; and, in the worst event, could always be sustained by timely aids from the intermediate country.

From the Rio Grande, over land, a large army could not march, or be supplied, unless from the Gulf by water, which, by vigilance, could always be intercepted; and to march an army near the gulf, they could be harassed by militia, and detained till an organized force could be raised to meet them.

But I am in danger of running into unnecessary details, which my debility will not enable me to close. The question is full of interest, also, as it affects our domestic relations, and as it may bear upon those of Mexico to us. I will not undertake to follow it out to its consequences in those respects; though I may say that, in all its aspects, the annexation of Texas to the United States, promises to enlarge the circle of free institutions, and is essential to the United States, particularly as lessening the probabilities of future collision with foreign powers, and giving them greater efficacy in spreading the blessings of peace.

I return you my thanks for your kind letter on this subject, and subscribe myself, with great sincerity,

Your friend and obedient servant,
ANDREW JACKSON,
Hon. A. V. Brown.

P. S. The papers furnished me by Mr. Erwin, to which I referred in this letter, can be placed in your possession, if desired.

A. J.
That this boundary could have been obtained, was doubtless the belief of our minister in Spain, but the offer of the Spanish government was probably the Colorado—certainly a line far west of the Sabine.

CONFERENCE.
THE SEMI-ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the Elders and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commenced on Saturday the 8th inst., and continued four days. The weather was most favorable. We do not remember that we ever saw so large an audience before, any where in the western country. The number that composed it is variously estimated from fifteen to twenty thousand. We were particularly attracted by the respectable and gentlemanly deportment of the whole multitude. Many spectators were present from Quincy, Alton, Warsaw, Fort Madison, and other towns of less notoriety. The golden order that was preserved, when we consider the immense number that were present, speaks much in favour of the morality of our city.

A NEW ADVOCATE FOR A NATIONAL BANK.

We have cast our eyes hastily over Gen. Smith's (Mormon Joe) "Views of the Powers and Policy of the Government of the United States. Nauvoo, 1844." This illustrious individual "goes the whole figure" with Messrs. Clay, Webster, Sargent, and the Whig party in general, for a national bank. After this, who can doubt the propriety of such an institution? Here is Joe's plan for a "fiscal agent," which is quite as sensible, both in nature and object, as the famous whig fiscalities.

For the accommodation of the people in every State and Territory, let Congress show their wisdom, by granting a national bank, with branches in each State and Territory, where the capital shall be held by the nation for the mother bank, and by the States and Territories for the branches; and whose officers and directors shall be elected yearly by the people, with wages at the rate of two dollars a day for services; which several banks shall never issue any more bills than the amount of capital stock in her vaults and the interest. The net gain of the mother bank shall be applied to the national revenue, and that of the branches to the States and Territories' revenue. And the bills shall be put throughout the nation, which will mercifully cure that fatal disorder known in cities as brokerage, and leave the people's money in their own pockets.

The prophet seems to be thoroughly imbued with the whig financial doctrines. He wants a national bank for the "accommodation of the people," and to save the federal and State treasuries from taxation. In two respects, however, we think Joe's plan has decided advantages over those of Messrs. Clay and Webster. He sticks to the specie basis, dollar for dollar; and his plan is more economical, as the officers are to be elected by the people, "with wages at the rate of two dollars per day." There is another recommendation, however, of this "great financier," which, we fear, will somewhat embarrass the practical operation of his scheme. He tells the people:

"Petition your State legislatures to paralyze every convict in their several penitentiaries; blessing them as they go, and saying to them, in the name of the Lord—Go thy way, and sin no more!"

We fear that, if this humane recommendation be adopted, the "specie basis" would soon disappear from Joe's mother bank and branches, including that of Nauvoo, which would show a "beggarly account of empty boxes." Perhaps, however, we are unnecessarily apprehensive of the small thieves, who fall into the clutches of the law, since the great thieves, who robbed millions from the late whig bank and its satellites, are permitted to roam at large with perfect impunity. Upon the whole, however, we will do General Smith the justice to state, that we think his financial doctrines more sound, his views more honest, and his scheme more feasible, than those of the hypocrites and quacks who, supported by a great party, have fleeced the country to the very quick, and are now eager to repeat the application of the shears.

The following passage calls vividly to mind Mr. Clay's Hanover speech, in which he promised a perfect millennium to the country, as soon as a Whig President should be elected:

"The country will be full of money and confidence, when a national bank of twenty millions, and a State bank in every State, with a million or more, give a done (an order of nationality) to money matters, and make a circulating medium as valuable in the purses of a whole community as in the coffers of a speculating banker or broker."

The prophet is not only thoroughly imbued with the financial doctrines of the Clay and Webster school, but he has caught the very tone of their "eloquence."

The General is not an admirer of lawyers. "Like the good Samaritan," he exclaims, "send every lawyer, as soon as he repents and obeys the ordinances of Heaven, to preach the gospel to the destitute, without purse or scrip, pouring in the oil and the wine." How it must have delighted his heart to learn that the pious Daniel has lately become an eloquent preacher! though we fear he does not "repent and obey the ordinances of the gospel," nor is contented—not he—to preach "without purse or scrip," however willing to "pour in the oil and the wine."

We cannot refrain from treating our readers to the following glowing passage, in which our friend Joseph so eloquently describes the defeat of Mr. Van Buren. We have read nearly all the Whig slang on this same subject; and we have met with nothing to equal the gloomy grandeur of this portentous paragraph:

"At the age, then, of sixty years, our blooming republic began to decline, under the withering touch of Martin Van Buren. Disappointed ambition thirst for power, pride, corruption, party spirit, faction, patronage, perquisites, fame, tangling alliances, priestcraft and spiritual wickedness in high places, struck hands, and revelled in midnight splendor."

Trouble, vexation, perplexity and contention, mingled with hope, fear, and mourning, rumbled through the Union, and agitated the whole nation, as would an earthquake at the centre of the earth, heaving the sea beyond its bounds, and shaking the everlasting hills. So, it hopes of better times, while jealousy, hypocritical pretensions, and pompous ambition were luxuriating on the ill-gotten spoils of the people, they rose in their majesty, like a tornado, and swept through the land, till General Harrison appeared, as a star among the storm-clouds, for better weather.

After this, won't Mr. Botts give way, and let General Smith be the Whig candidate for the Vice Presidency? But let us finish the picture:

"The good man died before he had the opportunity of applying one balm to ease the pain of our groaning country; and I am willing the nation should be the judge, whether General Harrison, in his exalted station, upon the eve of his entrance into the world of spirits, told the truth or not; with acting-President Tyler's three years' perplexity and pseudo-whig democratic reign, to heal the breaches, or show the wounds, secundum artem, (according to art.) Subsequent events, all things considered, Van Buren's downfall, Harrison's exit, and Tyler's self-sufficient turn to the whole go to show, as a Childen might exclaim: Benam elai elah bash-mayah gashah rausen. (Certainly there is a God in heaven to reveal secrets.)"

Joseph is unquestionably a great scholar as well as financier. Cannot Mr. Clay persuade the General to accompany him on his electioneering tour? With Poindexter, Prentiss, the Bear the Borer, Joe Smith, and a few other quadrupeds to complete his menagerie, he could not fail to convince the moral and enlightened people of the United States of the necessity of a national bank, and of their duty to make him President.

Before we close, we have a few suggestions to make. We propose, then, that Joe Smith (Mr. Biddle being out of the way) be made president, and George Poindexter cashier, of the new Whig national bank that is not to be; that the mother bank be established at Nauvoo, with branches over all creation; that the honorable Mr. Mitchell be appointed counsel, and that Mr. Webster have unlimited power to draw, with Governor Doty of Wisconsin as his security. With this arrangement we should have the perfection of a Whig system of finance.—Globe.

We should not be surprised if a comet or some other powerful body, has struck the "globe," and at least produced a great deal of uneasiness; but from the above we discover that a monstrous effort is made to ward off the blow, and cause it to pass in an oblique direction to some other tremendous body. But, Mr. "Globe," this will never do, you must take it as it comes.

It seems the editor of the Globe has got hold of an edged tool, which he does not know how to use, which has caused no little uneasiness. But however in regard to the views of Gen. Smith, respecting a national bank, and sundry other things on the great affairs of the nation, he is obliged to acknowledge, are far superior to those of the Clay and Webster school, and no doubt, if he had spoke the honest sentiments of his heart, he would have said, Mr. Van Buren and Tyler too! However, like all other specimens of meanness, he turns into ridicule every thing that he cannot controvert with reason and evidence.

Gen. Smith's views on the great affairs of the Government, are unanswerable, for this reason, they are the views of a statesman who is uncorrupted by the schemes of political demagogues of the present age. Indeed, we know him to be a man well qualified for the highest station in our Government, for he is a learned man and one that is well versed in the affairs of State, but he is a philanthropist. He is certainly the man that every person who regards the welfare of our country should vote for, at the next Presidential election.

We are informed that Dr. Smith, of Kenkuk, will deliver a lecture in the Library and Institute hall, on Thursday afternoon (the 11th inst) at 4 o'clock P. M., on a new French system of medical practice. We advise all that can attend, to do so. "Prove all things and hold fast to that which is good."

LIST OF PRICES IN NAUVOO.

We take this opportunity to inform our readers that we are preparing a regular list of prices, embracing all kinds of produce, groceries, &c. &c., which we shall insert in our next, and shall correct it each succeeding week as the prices vary. The object we have in view, is to guard the good citizens of our city against deception, and the unjust method of dealing which (we have reason to believe,) some of our merchants, and shop-keepers, have adopted; and to establish a uniformity in the prices.

The Mormons—Horrible Conspiracy!
—There are serious difficulties growing up between the people of Illinois and the Mormons, and knowing the excitable and irritable temper in that region of country, and their propensity to take the law into their own hands, we have great apprehension for the results. We recently noticed the fact that a large meeting had been held at Carthage in consequence of the difficulties occurring between the citizens of that place and their Nauvoo neighbors. The Warsaw Message holds forth the following language:—

"We see no use in attempting to disguise the fact that many in our midst contemplate a total extermination of that people; that the thousands of defenceless women and children, aged and infirm, who are congregated at Nauvoo, must be driven out, eye, driven, scattered, like leaves before the autumn blast! But what good citizen, let us ask, what lover of his country and his race, but contemplates such an event with horror!"

Shocking indeed! And are we going to have a second edition of the massacre of St. Bartholomew? Are we in a country of law? Are we to have a whole Nation as it were destroyed on account of their Religion? We hope not. We call upon the men of Illinois to reflect. Several thousand able bodied men can be marshalled in a week for the protection of the Mormons; not to protect the religion, but to vindicate the great principle of Religious freedom. Our Institutions protect all alike, and all must be protected.—N. Y. Sun.

It will be seen from the above, that the tall doings of our neighbors in the south part of the county, and the big sayings of the Warsaw Message, (some time since dead,) are not seconded by the press, as they perhaps supposed they would be; and that notwithstanding some of the well-meaning part of the community, are some, what opposed to the religion of the Mormons, yet they are decidedly opposed to any violent means against them, or to their civil and religious rights being infringed upon.

Extract from a letter from London, received by the last steamer:—

"We have a Yankee here who has opened a shop in the Strand for the sale of American manufactured articles, such as cut tacks, screws, augurs, combs, pins, milk pails of cedar, wine coolers, corn brooms, wooden clocks, &c. &c. John Bull will find out at last, that we can make our own mouse traps!"

Rev. Andrew Cooper, a Scotchman, about forty-six years of age, tall and muscular, sallow or rather swarthy complexion, thin Auburn hair, inclined to curl—with his son, a fine boy nine years old—left Brownsville, Licking county, Ohio, for Illinois, in June, 1841, and has never been heard of since. Any information regarding them, is anxiously sought for by his numerous friends in Scotland, and would be thankfully received and conveyed to them by the subscriber.

Halloo, steward! exclaimed a fellow in the steamboat Norfolk, after he had retired to bed—Halloo, steward? What, massa. Bring me the way bill. What for, massa? I want to see if these bedbugs put down their names for this berth before I did; if not, I want 'em turned out.

The first Bell in Haverhill, says the Salem Gazette, was purchased in 1694, before that time there was a singular substitute, as appears by a vote passed in 1690. That Abraham Tyler, blow his horn half an hour before meeting, on the Lord's day, and on lecture days and receive one pound of pork annually for his services, from each family.

Mysterious and Extraordinary.—The Cincinnati Enquirer states, that on Saturday evening week, the skin of a negro boy, apparently about five years of age, was found floating along down the river, and was taken to shore at the foot of Ludlow street. The scalp and hair were above water, and at first led to the impression that it was a human body. It was found, however, to be a perfect hide from head to feet, carefully skinned, even to the toes and fingers, and as yet without smell. What tale of brutality is at the bottom of this extraordinary matter? It is impossible to conceive. Nothing of the kind, we are assured, was ever heard of as coming from a dissecting room; and as to all other sources, the mind gropes in vain without supposing some most aggravated crime. Not a little excitement was created by the discovery in the neighborhood where it was made. The skin was floating a considerable distance out from shore when first seen.

A Strike.—I ain't going to be called a printer's devil any longer—no more I ain't; exclaimed our imp the other day, in a terrible pucker.

Well, what shall we call you?
Call me typographical spirit of evil if you please—that's all!

Epitaph on an Editor.—We do not know who is the author of the following, as it is tolerable old:

TO THE MEMORY OF

An Editor.

His pen is worn out—his inkstand is dry—
His form is worked off—his case is all pie—
His tick, rule and types, are all cast aside,
And none but his ink knows the place where he died.

Employment of Americans by the Russian Government.—The Emperor of Russia, is engaged in one of the most noble works that can engage the national attention, the construction of a railroad between Petersburg and Moscow, a distance of 400 miles. The road has been put under the superintendence of Major G. W. Whittier, an American Engineer, and the Baltimore American states that the Emperor has just concluded with the Establishment of Messrs.

Eastwick Harrison & Winans, of Philadelphia, for the furnishing of locomotive cars, &c for the road. The contract is said to be the largest of the kind ever made in the world and was secured by these gentlemen in competition with some of the largest and most influential manufacturers of Great Britain. The number of locomotives to be built is one hundred and sixty-two, with tenders for each; and the number of burthen cars is five thousand three hundred—together with duplicates of such parts of the machinery as may require to be renewed. Thirty locomotives and one hundred burthen cars are to be furnished by the end of the year 1845; forty locomotives and one hundred burthen cars in 1846; forty locomotives and fifteen hundred burthen cars in 1847; and the balance cars in 1848.

The whole cost of the machinery here contracted for, will be more than four millions of dollars! Notwithstanding the Emperor is thus willing to employ American talent and enterprise, he has made it a distinct condition of the contract that the entire work shall be done within the limits of his own kingdom, thus giving employment to his own people.

The American adds that the Emperor last year ordered from Mr. R. Winans, the contractor, in this case, three powerful steam pile-driving machines, which are used in the construction of parts of the great Petersburg and Moscow railroad, where the country is marshy. These were found to answer as well, that Mr. W. is now constructing a fourth one for the same road. The Russian Minister is now, and has been for some time past under the orders of the Emperor, purchasing for Russia various agricultural implements of approved construction, besides other machinery that may prove serviceable in the Russian Empire.

A Miss Mis-Elased.—An amusing incident occurred with a friend of ours the other day. He was expecting his mother in the evening car from Baltimore, and like a good son repaired to the depot to meet her. It was a dark day, and by the time the cars arrived, there was no such thing as distinguishing the faces of passengers. As he entered one of the cars a lady seated in a corner addressed him as "Father," the voice was his Mother's, and the little one which she always gave him while at his house and among his children—so without hesitation, he threw his arms round the lady's neck and kissed her. Just then a gentleman pushed him gently aside and went through the same ceremony. This was very strange, he thought, a man kissing his mother! Hardly had the thought passed his mind, when his veritable mother came forward and kissed him. Very much embarrassed, he turned to the gentleman. Sir, I have made an egregious blunder, but whose pardon shall I ask, yours or the lady's? The meek reply was, thee had better ask the lady's pardon, though I don't know, which had the best of the bargain, thee or my blooming daughter.

THE TALKING MACHINE.—Du Solle says, there is nothing in New York better worth a visit than this extraordinary invention. We were there on Saturday last, the 2d inst., and took a good look at it. It has about as much brains as some of our representatives in Congress—talks as well and is quite as easily "played upon."

Further Miller, in the "Midnight Cry," of Dec. 7th, 1843, says:—
My principles, in brief, are that Jesus Christ will come again to this earth, cleanse, purify, and take possession of the same, with all his saints, sometime between the 21st of March, 1843, and the 21st of March, 1844.

The last number of the "Cry" says:—
"We have no new light on the Prophetic Periods. Our time ends with this Jewish year. If time be continued beyond that, we have no definite period to fix upon; but henceforward, shall look for the event every hour, till the Lord shall come. Others can give their views on the termination of the periods, on their own responsibility."

The Jewish year closes to day."

The Jerusalem Artichoke.—This root is beginning to be raised in considerable quantities in Georgia, as food for sheep, calves and pigs. In good land the Artichoke produces from eight hundred to one thousand bushels per acre. This is a subject worthy the attention of our intelligent farmers.

The Jewish Passover commences on the evening of the 2d of April. Several Bakers were actively engaged in baking the Passover bread for 10,000 people of that persuasion in New York.

General Jackson.—Intelligence of passing the law remitting the fine of General Jackson, has reached the Hermings, and the General, although in feeble health has replied to his friend's grateful thanking them for the interest they took in the matter. One of the paragraphs from his letter is indicative of his present feeble condition and his resignation to his fate:—

"If I am to judge from my present afflictions, I cannot be here at the next Congress. I must long before, be in the tomb prepared for me; but I am in the hands of a just and wise Providence. When He makes the call, I am prepared, with due humility, to submit to his will. He has long spared me through a long and variegated life. How much longer I am to be here, He knows, and only He!"

Remedy for the Bots.—The Southern Cultivator says, that strong tea, made of common garden sage, is an effectual remedy for the Bots. Give a quantity of strong tea, and the horse will recover in a few minutes. A branch of sage chopped into the feed for horses once a week, will prevent the Bots altogether.

Extract of a letter from a Yankee in London, 1st Feb., 1844.

Dear Cousin:—
I suppose you know how much our folks have complained at the Yorkshire folks, who have imported their goods undervalued into the United States, and sworn to invincible, too, and all true; and yet somehow the laws of the tariff were exactly not answered;—that is making a thing half way, and only requiring finishing till after the duty was paid. Well, I was considerably anxious about that, and seeing no way to correct it by the law, I thought I would try my hand in seeing how the matter would work in the shape of retaliation; and that comes as high reciprocity as the prime minister can make it.

I got safe here by the packet on the 8th ultimo, and landed my cases of clocks. The duty was 25 per cent on the value; and I put down on the invoice six shillings and sixpence sterling, each clock. The officer stared, and looking at the invoice, and then at my clocks. "What," says he, "only 6s. 6d. for these clocks—mahogany cases, three feet high, and warranted to go! That's no go," says he; "I must seize 'em." "Very well," says I, "do so. But the law says you must pay the invoice price and ten per cent. additional; and that is all I care for, so go ahead." And so I left him.

Not caring to seem very anxious about it, I didn't go back to the custom house for nigh upon three weeks—for this is such an eternal city, it takes nigh upon three weeks to walk about it and find out any thing concerning the clock trade—so I went back. Well, says I, Mr. Officer, what about my clocks? Well sir, we called in some clock-makers to examine them, who said they would not go, as they were made merely to sell; the treasury conclude, you may pass your clocks at your invoice. And so I paid the duty accordingly and carried my clocks to the city. Now it seems that all the custom house officers, all the clock makers, and all the lords of the treasury, did not see that only one small wheel, not bigger than a shilling, was wanting in each of these clocks; and that I had in my chest, and without it the clocks was "no go," but with it, every man, woman and child can tell where the sun is a great deal more accurately than they can through the fog and smoke of this city; for it had not been for my clocks, I never could have told day from night here. Well, I wasn't long after I got my clocks through the custom house before they were all going as true as the sun. And the way they regulated the time, here is a caution to Roskell.

There is no people on earth can beat us in clock making. I want one of mine to the Queen, and she is tickled most delectably with it, and regulates all her business by it, and don't allow any body to wind up but Prince Albert.

This business about state debts is very bad here, and makes us feel very small. Nations are like families. You know how the Stiles family went to ruin on account of not paying their debts. Good credit is almost as good as real money to any man; and just so it is with a family or a nation. Old Uncle Ebenezer used to say that as long as he paid interest promptly, he never knew the day he could not borrow all he wanted. I wish our states would think on this, for that is all lenders want. Love to all.

Your friend and cousin,
AMOS DOOBITTLE.

IRELAND.

The State Trials.—On Saturday, 3d, Mr. M'Donagh addressed the Court on behalf of Mr. Barrett, and Mr. Henn on behalf of Mr. Steele. During the day Mr. O'Connell applied to the Court that his address might be adjourned until Monday, and the Court complied. On Monday, then, at ten o'clock precisely, their Lordships took their seat; upon the Bench, and as soon as the names of the traversers and jury were called over, Mr. O'Connell rose and commenced his speech, which was very long, and occupied the Court throughout the day. The Court was crowded with an immense throng of eager listeners.

Mr. O'Connell disclaimed having ever violated any law or having ever been accused by any motive save a desire to serve his country. He, however, acknowledged himself a Repealer, and avowed that, with the most upright intentions his acts, since he first began that course of conduct which had brought him before their Lordships, had for their end and object the Repeal of the Union. "I tell (he exclaimed) I cannot bear it—it is forced upon the Irish people by the most foul and unjustifiable means that over a Government had recourse to, and I have the highest authority for saying so." He then went on, as he said, not to take back any of the sentiments he had advocated, but to repeat the substance of every thing he had previously said.

Mr. O'Connell ridiculed the idea of his course in behalf of Repeal being charged upon him as a conspiracy, and displayed with much power and biting irony the mockery of calling that a conspiracy which had been transacted at noon day, and published upon the winds. If there be a conspiracy, where is it? Where the time, the place, the circumstances, the actors? No specifications were made, and it was not at all certain that he was even supposed to have been present at it! But if so, he certainly should have been informed of the time at which the conspiracy took place, that he might have the benefit of an alibi if he could make it out! Instead of the unraveling of dark and horrible machinations and treasonable conferences, the Attorney General has occupied eleven mortal hours in reading and commenting upon extracts from newspapers which you had all read long ago, and knew all about, and his then thrown these dreadful newspapers into the jury box in a heap, and told the jury, where they are—help yourselves to the conspiracy! He had told them nothing, proved nothing, hinted at nothing new—no new developments—nothing which all the world did not already know. Was this the way to establish a conspiracy? To prove its charge of conspiracy, the prosecution relied first upon the public meetings in favor of Repeal, and next upon the newspapers. The idea of a conspiracy, from such facts, was absurd. Would slavery have been abolished if its advocates had entered into a conspiracy? And yet they held their public meetings, and made bitter and unrelenting enemies, and hid their newspapers, and their calumnies, and had done and suffered exactly the same as the friends of Irish Repeal—and their leading men, with equal propriety, ought to have been prosecuted for conspiracy; they should have indicted Wilberforce, who has written his name upon the most prominent pages of history as the strenuous advocate of freedom; and who will never be forgotten while a feeling of humanity exists—he should have been indicted for conspiracy. The venerable Clarkson, too, should not have escaped. Convict us, and he is not free in his old age. By the names of Wilberforce and Clarkson I conjure you to dismiss from your box every attempt to shut out free discussion. Large meetings, and which were reported, too, in the newspapers, were held in favor of Catholic emancipation, and great agitation and excitement were produced. Was this a conspiracy? The Anti-Corn Law League and the Anti-Slavery Society—they, too, held public meetings and received money—why were they not indicted for Conspiracy?

Mr. O'Connell then went on to examine in detail the two classes of charges which had been made against the prisoners—monster meetings and newspaper publications. The speech is altogether one of the ablest, most argumentative and powerful efforts we have ever read, and goes over the whole ground of the great question of Irish Repeal.

After Mr. O'Connell had concluded, the Court adjourned to the next day.

Ending a Fine.—On Thursday last a sleigh to which two fine horses were attached and in which sat a dashing buck and two extremely beautiful ladies, was seen dashing down the sixth avenue at the rate of ten miles an hour. The horses were without bits, and no one stopped, looked and marvelled in silence, until, when near Fourth street, a child, narrowly escaped being crushed beneath the runners of the vehicle.

Hallo, exclaimed an old gentleman to the buck who had halted, you will be fined!

Fined, what for?

Because you have no bits.

Bell! exclaimed the tonish driver, no bells!—you are blind; do you not see them?

See them—where?

Here!—pointing to the ladies, "if these are not bells where are they?"

Pretty Superstition.—In Poland every individual is supposed to be born subject to some particular destiny or fate, which is immutable for him to avoid. The month of his nativity has a mysterious connection with one of the unknown precious stones; and when a person desires the object of his affections with an acceptable present, a ring is invariably given, glittering with the jewel by which the fate of that object is imagined to be determined and described.

For instance, a lady is born in January—her ring must therefore be jacinth or garnet, for these stones belong to that peculiar month of the year, and express constancy and fidelity.

Here is a list of every month, which we faithfully transcribe for the benefit of our fair readers.

January—Jacinth or garnet. Constancy and fidelity in every engagement.

February—Amethyst. This month and stone preserve mortals from strong passions, and insure them peace of mind.

March—Blood stone. Courage and success in dangers and hazardous enterprise.

April—Sapphire and Diamond. Repentance and innocence.

May—Emerald. Success in love.

June—Agate. Long life and health.

July—Cornelian or Ruby. The forgetfulness of, or the cure of evils springing from friendship or love.

August—Sardonyx. Congugal love and felicity.

September—Chrysolite. Preserves from, or cures, folly.

October—Aquamarine or Opal. Misfortune and hope.

November—Topaz. Fidelity and the purest friendship.

December—Turquoise or Malakite.

The most brilliant success and happiness in every circumstance of life; the Turquoise has also the property of procuring friendly, as the old saying is, that he who possesses a Turquoise will always be sure of friends.

For the Neighbor.

Mr. Editor, I have noticed in your valuable Paper, the reply of two or three individuals to my offer for half a million of Bricks; neither of which suit me exactly, therefore unless some new offer is made, I shall wait till Brick making commences. I have taken some observations on the brick of the City, as I have understood from the different kilns; the kind in Mr. Ivin's store, is the best I have seen, being pressed, and one thickness of those brick, will make a dryer wall, than two thickness unpressed, and will be more durable. At present I leave the subject, with this suggestion, those who want my money for brick, must press them; and every man would say the same, were he as well acquainted with the matter as I am; and knew that pressed brick could be made as cheap as those of unpressed, by the saving the loss of broken and waste brick; for few will break when pressed, and one house of pressed brick is worth two of unpressed.

A BUILDER.

For the Neighbor.

Nauvoo Mansion, March, 1844.

Mr. Editor:—Before I take my departure, permit me to express my views relative to the leading men of your city, where I have been these few days.

I have been conversant with the great men of the age, and, last of all, I feel that I have met with the greatest, in the presence of your esteemed prophet, Gen. Joseph Smith. From many reports, I had reason to believe him a bigoted religionist, as ignorant of politics as the savages; but to my utter astonishment, on a short acquaintance, I have found him as familiar in the cabinet of nations, as with his Bible; and in the knowledge of that book, I have not met with his equal in Europe or America. Although, if I should beg leave to differ with him in some items of faith; his nobleness of soul will not permit him to take offence at me. No Sir, I find him open, frank and generous, as willing others should enjoy their opinions, as to enjoy his own.

The General appears perfectly at home on every subject; and his familiarity with many languages affords his simple means to become informed concerning all nations and principles, which his familiar and dignified deportment towards all, must secure to his interest the affections of every intelligent and virtuous man that may chance to fall in his way; and I am astonished that so little is known abroad concerning him.

Van Buren was my favorite, and I was astonished to see Gen. Smith's name as a competitor; but since my late acquaintance, Mr. Van Buren can never re-seat himself in the presidential chair on my vote, while Gen. Smith is in the field; forming my opinions alone on the talents of the two; and from what I have seen, I have no reason to doubt, but Gen. Smith's integrity is equal to any other individual; and I am satisfied he cannot easily be made the pliant tool of any political party. I take him to be a man who stands aloof from little caucuses, quibblings and squabbles, while nations, governments and real men, are wielded in his hands as familiarly as the top and hoop in the hands of his little masters.

Free from all bigotry and superstition, he dives into every subject, and it seems as though he would be no large enough to satisfy his capacious soul, and from his conversation, one might suppose him as well acquainted with other worlds as this.

So far as I can discover, Gen. Smith is the nation's man, and the man who will call the nation, if the people will give him the opportunity; and all parties will find a friend in him, as far as right is concerned.

Gen. Smith's movements are perfectly anomalous in the estimation of the public. All other great men have been considered wise in drawing around them wise men; but I have frequently heard the General called a fool because he has gathered the wisest of men to his cabinet, who direct his movements; but this subject is too ridiculous to dwell upon; suffice it to say, so far as I have seen, he has wise men at his side; superlatively wise, and more capable of managing the affairs of a state, than most men now engaged therein; which I consider much to his credit, though I would by no means speak diminutively of my old friends.

From my brief acquaintance, I consider Gen. Smith, independent of his peculiar religious views, (in which, by the by, I have discovered neither vanity nor folly,) the wise and man of the age; to our nation's prosperity. He has learned the all important lesson, "to profit by the experience of those who have gone before," so that, in short, Gen. Smith begins where other men leave off. I am aware this will appear a bold assertion to some, but I would say to such, call and form your acquaintance; as I have done, then judge.

Thus, Sir, you have a few leading items of my views of Gen. Smith, formed from personal acquaintance, which you are at liberty to dispose of as you think proper. I anticipate the pleasure of renewing my acquaintance with your citizens at a future day.

Yours, Respectfully,

A TRAVELLER.

POETRY.

HYMN FOR THE PEOPLE.

BY C. D. STUART.

Not for crowns and gilded places
Where life's pagan feet have trod, Leaving deep and awful traces
In the noble man of God!

He who on his garments' leaveth
Not of guile, and not of stain,
On his brow a signet weareth,
Prouder than the diamond chain.

Lip to speak that never feareth
Boldly o'er the head of wrong,
Soul that day by day, but neareth
Victuals that every strong;

There, with deeds of earnest toil,
Are the only marks I seek
On the shifting human dial,
Worthy of the noble man!

O'er your kings, are skies serene
That have beamed on harvest fields—
The earth beneath them greener,
Than for those to whom it yields!

If to stride the streets of battle,
If to plunder realms oppress,
Swarmer sounder than the rattle
Of the sickle bravely press;

Then, the monarchdoms of ages,
Titles true are they to fame;
And the noble from its pages,
Are the kings of boasted name!

But if to be noble, we are
To be earnest, good, and true,
Finner faithful and ever free,
Titles, as less, Kings, as few!

In the strength of God's own spirit,
Doing as we have, and own;
Acting what we all inherit,
Then, is each a noble man!

FROM PRESCOTT'S CONQUEST OF MEXICO. FIRST INTERVIEW OF CORTES WITH MONTEZUMA.

In the midst of these unpleasant reflections they beheld the glittering retinue of the Emperor emerging from the great street which led them, as it still does, through the heart of the city. Amidst a crowd of Indian nobles, preceded by three officers of state, bearing golden wands, they saw the royal palanquin bearing with burnished gold. It was borne on the shoulders of nobles, and over it a canopy of gaudy featherwork, powdered with jewels, and fringed with silver, was supported by four attendants of the same rank. They were barefooted and walked with a slow measured pace, and with eyes bent on the ground. When the train had come within a convenient distance, it halted, and Montezuma, descending from his litter, came forward leaning on the arms of the lords of Tetzuc and Xitlapalepan, his nephew and brother, both of whom, as we have seen had already been made known to the Spaniards. As the monarch advanced under the canopy, the obsequious attendants strewed the ground with cotton tapestry, that his imperial feet might not be contaminated by the rude soil. His subjects of high and low degree, who lined the sides of the causeway, bent forward with their eyes fastened on the ground as he passed, and some of the humble class prostrated themselves before him. Such was the homage paid to the Indian chief, showing that the slavish forms of Oriental admiration were to be found among the rude inhabitants of the Western World.

Montezuma wore the girdle and ample square cloak, emblematic of his nation. It was made of the finest cotton, with the embroidered ends gathered in a knot round his neck. His feet were defended by sandals, having soles of gold, and the leathern thongs that bound them were embossed with the same metal. Both the cloak and the sandals were sprinkled with pearls and precious stones; among which the emerald and the chachaville—a green stone of higher estimation than any other among the Aztecs—were conspicuous. On his head he wore no other ornament than a panache of plumes of the royal green, which floated down his back, the badge of military, rather than of regal, rank.

He was at that time about forty years of age. His person was tall and thin, but not ill-made. His hair, which was black and straight, was not very long; to wear it short was considered unbecoming persons of rank. His beard was thin; his complexion somewhat paler than is often found in his dusky, or rather copper-colored race. His features though serious in their expression, did not wear the look of melancholy, indeed of depression, which characterizes his portrait, and which may well have settled on them at a later period. He moved with dignity, and his whole demeanor, tempered by an expression of benignity not to have been anticipated from the reports circulated of his character, was worthy of a great prince. Such is the portrait left to us of the celebrated Indian Emperor, in his first interview with the white men.

The army halted as he drew near. Cortes dismounting, threw his reins to a page, and supported by a few of the cavaliers, advanced to meet him. The interview must have been one of uncommon interest to both. In Montezuma, Cortes beheld the lord of the broad realms he had traversed, whose magnificence and power had been the burden of every tongue. In the Spaniard, on the other hand, the Aztec prince saw the strange being whose history seemed to be so mysteriously connected with his own, the predicted one of his oracles, whose achievements proclaimed him something more than human. But whatever may have been the monarch's feelings, he so far suppressed them as to receive his guest with princely courtesy, and to express his satisfaction at personally seeing him at his capital. Cortes responded by the most profound expression of respect, while he made ample acknowledgments for the substantial proofs of which the emperor had given the Spaniards of his munificence. He then hung round Montezuma's neck a sparkling chain of colored crystals, accompanying this with a movement as if to embrace him, when he was restrained by the two Aztec lords, shocked at the menaced profanation of the sacred person of their master. After interchanges of these civilities, Montezuma appointed his brother to conduct the Spaniards to their residence at the capital, and again entering his litter was borne off amidst prostrate crowds, in the same state in which he had come. The Spaniards quickly followed, and with colors flying and music playing, soon made their entrance into the southern quarter of Tenochtitlan.

Here again they found fresh cause for admiration in the grandeur of the city, and the superior style of its architecture. The dwellings of the noble class were indeed chiefly of reeds and mud. But the great avenue through which they were now marching was lined with the houses of the nobles, who were encouraged by the emperor to make the capital their residence. They were built of red porous stone, drawn from quarries in the neighborhood, and though they rarely rose to a second story, often covered a large space of ground. The flat roofs, azoteas, were protected by some parapets, so that every house was a fortress. Sometimes these roofs resembled parterres of flowers, so thickly were they covered with them; but more frequently these were cultivated in broad terraced gardens, laid out between the edifices. Occasionally a great square or market place intervened, surrounded by its portico of stone and stucco, or by a pyramid temple reared its colossal bulk, crowned with its tapering sanctuaries, and alters blazing with inextinguishable fires. The great street facing the southern causeway, unlike most others in the place, was wide and extended some miles in nearly a straight line, as before noticed, through the centre of the city. A spectator standing at one end of it, as his eye ranged along the deep vista of temples, terraces and gardens, might clearly discern the other, with the blue mountains in the distance, which in the transparent atmosphere of the table land, seemed almost in contact with the buildings.

But what most impressed the Spaniards was the throngs of people who swarmed through the streets and on the canals, filling every doorway and window, and clustering on the roof of the buildings. 'I well remember the spectacle,' exclaims Bernal Diaz; 'it seemed now, after so many years, as present to my mind, as if it were but yesterday.' But what must have been the sensations of the Aztecs themselves as they heard now, for the first time, the well cemented pavements rising under the iron tramp of the horses—the strange animal which fear had clothed in such supernatural terrors, as they gazed, the children of the East, revealing their celestial origin in their fair complexions; saw the bright fashions and bonnets of steel, a metal to them unknown, glancing like meteors in the sun, while sounds of unearthly music—at least such as their rude instruments had never awakened—floating in the air! But every other emotion was lost in that of deadly hatred, when they saw their detested enemy, the Tlascalans, stalking in defiance, as it were, through their streets, and starting around with looks of ferocity and wonder, like some wild animal of the forest who had strayed by chance, from his native fastnesses into the haunts of civilization.

SHORT PATENT SERMON ON DANCING.

BY DOW, JR.

My dear hearers—I have no doubt but the subject before me might be a source of Buncom delight to young men afflicted with levity were I to decant upon it according to their notions of fun, pleasure and happiness, in this talking sort of a world. I wouldn't have you to think that I am te-totally opposed to dancing in every shade—for the very reason that I used to heel and too it a trifle, ere my legs had refused to perform the bidding of the will, as is now the case. But the fact is, I was wont to cut it down altogether—I carried the step too far—went the double shuffle too mightily—but I couldn't help it. I was obliged to mind the music and keep up with my partner, and the way she would balance up right and left, was significant to something more than nothing. I soon began to loose health, flesh, and morality; and finally told all the frivolities of the world to go to pot, and I would go to preaching, preach good morals, moderation, temperance, love, and particular cautious step in the scientific practice of dancing. I don't like the looks of such ball rooms as they have lately nor the way they manage matters. Artificial corruptness covers over and destroys all that beautiful simplicity which graces the domestic circle. The girls are so tipivated off with false beauty and flippings, that a fellow loses his heart before he knows it; and the plague of it is, he don't know which of the fair ones has got it. Generally speaking, it's much better for him if he never finds it out, or he should take it into consideration, that every thing is not gold that glitters—neither is every girl an angel, though she glides through the mazes of the dance like a spirit clothed with a rainbow and studded with the stars. He may behold his admitted object, on the morrow in true light of reality—perchance emptying a wash tub in the gutter, with frock turned up behind; her cheeks pale for want of paint; her hair matted and mossy, except what lies in the bureau; and her whole contour bearing the appearance of an angel rammed through a bush fence into a world of wretchedness and woe. Now my dear friends supposing a young man does happen to find his snatched up beauty in such a predicament? I say it is a glorious recommendation for him, and if he don't like it he must keep away from such a place where loveliness is so patched up for the occasion, and where a devil and a seraph are only one and the same thing. Every ball now-a-days, is a masquerade, their attendants are as false as they appear to be fair; and when daylight comes to unmask them they can boast of no great attractions, either inside or out. They are too fond of blowing out 'till daylight appears,' instead of hanging up their fiddles at 11 o'clock, and winding off with 'Lord dismiss us with a blessing,' as was the case in the good old days of Yore. Dancing has been gathering a thick coat of corruption for a long time. The primitive Shaker jig is the only pigeon wing to my notion, though I never went that figure. The old down out side and back is the next natural and simple form of leg worship; the Jim Crow jump is a falling off from either; and the fashionable cut at the present day, are all stupid nonsense. What meaning is there in what they call a cotillon? Its all full of such hog latin as does a dose, lemonade all pussy! almonade at the corners! chuse-here and de-chase here! and so on and so forth.

Waiting is more studied yet—no body can do it really sleek unless they have the string halt in one leg, as horses sometimes have. When I can see a chap hugging up to a girl, performing constant revolutions at the rate of six to a minute, I can't help suspecting that he is trying to get around her in a very nonsensical way. O, this waiting is a very silly piece of business. A puppy whirling round after his tail makes a more respectable appearance than a couple of our heavenly Father's images in the ludicrous position of waiting. If dancing must be done at all, I say let it be done decently and in order—after the manner of the Times in which I came the ajotta to a nicety. Let the figure be simple—keep at a respectable distance while balancing to partners—and when you get down the middle, don't squeeze hands too tight, and look out for corn plantations on either side.

My beloved friends—it always affords me a full purse of pleasure to see my young pupils happy in the enjoyment of rational pastimes. I would not for the world throw alms in the wine cup of young men; neither could I have the cruelty to force warmwood tea down the delicate throats of those dear delightful angels who honor me with their presence. But while drinking from the pitcher of pleasure, you must be careful and not drink so deep as to make a burking quill factory of your cock lofts. If you do, you may stand a chance to learn St. Vitus's Dance, or be obliged to dance down the dark alley, to the tune of Delerium Tremens. Think of this my young friends and too out but like a tea stand. I know that you find a good deal of fun in your dances; you loose at the time, all sense of present woe; feel light as corks; but mind I tell you, if you keep it up as right till you get your pores too far open, the storm that may blow on the morrow will beat in till you become water soaked, and finally sink down beneath the waves of corruption, to rise no more. May each of you weigh my sentiment on the subject, with the steadiness of prudence; dance not on slippery places and return as far as convenient, towards the good old ways of your ancestors. So mote it be!

From the Sangamo Journal.

THE GLOBE AND JOE SMITH.
The Globe of the 14th has a long article, attacking Joe Smith's views of government, as lately published by him in the Nauvoo paper. The real cause for this attack, we presume, may be found in the fact, that Smith does not choose to quibble on his armor, and support Martin Van Buren for President. Smith has done pretty well for the Globe party, by electing one member to Congress for them; and as it is an object for the Globe to keep him there, we presume, the editors were satisfied, that however much they might abuse Smith, he would be compelled to go for Hoge again. The Globe evidently believes in the potency of the red held over Joe by Gov. Ford.

The following paragraph and quotation from Smith's 'views,' we copy from the Globe. If Joe never misses the truth more than in the quotation here made, he will get along quite well.

[From the Globe.]
We cannot refrain from treating our readers to the following glowing passage, in which our friend Joseph so eloquently describes the defect of Mr. Van Buren. We have read nearly all the whig slant on this same subject; and we have met with nothing to equal the gloomy grandeur of this portentous paragraph:

'At the age, then, of sixty years, our blooming republic began to decline, under the withering touch of Martin Van Buren. Disappointed ambition, thirst for power, pride, corruption, party spirit, faction, patronage, perquisites, family tangle, alliances, priestcraft, and spiritual wickedness in high places, struck hands, and revelled in midnight splendor. Trouble, vexation, perplexity and content, mingled with hope, fear, and murmuring, rumbled through the Union, and agitated the whole nation, as would an earthquake at the centre of the earth, heaving the sea beyond its bounds, and shaking the everlasting hills. So in hopes of better times, while jealousy, hypocritical pretensions, and pompous ambition were luxuriating on the ill-gotten spoils of the people, they rose in their majesty, like a tornado, and swept through the land, till Gen. Harrison appeared, as a star among the storm-clouds, for better weather.'

SACRIFICE OF THE SPANIARDS.
The general having concluded his instructions, affectionately embraced his lieutenant, and dismissed him to his quarters.

It was late in the evening when he reached them; but the sun was yet lingering above the western hills, and poured his beams wide over the valley, lighting up the old towers and temples of Tenochtitlan with a mellow radiance, that little harmonized with the dark scenes of strife, in which the city had been so lately involved. The tranquility of the hour, however was on a sudden, by the strange sounds of the great drum in the temple of the war-god, sounds which recalled the noche triste, with all the terrible images to the minds of the Spaniards, for that was the only occasion on which they had ever heard them.

They intimated some solemn act of religion within the unshuffled precincts of the teocalli: and the soldiers startled by the mournful vibrations, which might be heard for leagues in the valley, turned their eyes to the corner whence they proceeded. They beheld a long procession, winding up the huge sides of the pyramid; for the camp of the Alvarado was pitched scarcely a mile from the city, and objects are distinctly visible at a great distance, in the transparent atmosphere of the table land.

As the long file of priests and warriors reached the flat summit of the teocalli, the Spaniards saw the figure of several men stripped to their waists, some of whom by the whiteness of their skins, they recognized as their own countrymen. They were the victims of the sacrifice. Their heads were gaudily decorated with coronals of plumes, and they carried fans in their hands. They were urged along by blows, and compelled to take part in the dances in honor of the Aztec war-god. The unfortunate captives, then stripped of their skin and finery, and were stretched one after another, on the great stone of sacrifice—on its convex surface, their breasts were heaved up conveniently for the diabolical purpose of the priestly executioner; who dashed the ribs with his sharp razor of iztil, and then thrusting his hand into the wound tore away the heart, which, hot and reeking, was deposited on the golden censor before the idol. The body of the slaughtered victim was then hurled down the steep stairs of the pyramid, which, it may be remembered, was placed at the same angle of the pile, one flight below another, and the mangled remains were gathered up by the savages beneath, who soon prepared with them the cannibal repast which completed the work of abomination.

We can imagine with what sensations the stupid Spaniards must have gazed on this horrid spectacle, so near that they could almost recognize the persons of their unfortunate friends, see the struggles and writhing of their bodies, hear—or fancy they heard—their screams of agony! yet so far removed that they could render them no assistance.—Their limbs trembled beneath them, as they thought what might one day be their fate, and the braves among them, who had gone to battle, as careless and light hearted, as in the banquet or the ball room, were unable, from this time forward, to encounter their ferocious enemy without a sickening feeling, much akin to fear, coming over them.

Such was the effect produced by this spectacle on the Mexican forces, gathered at the end of the causeway. Like vultures maddened by the smell of distant carrion; they set up a piercing cry, and, as they shouted such should be the fate of all their enemies, swept along in one fierce torrent over the dike. But the Spaniards were not to be taken by surprise; and before the barbarian horde had come within their lines, they opened such a deadly fire from their musketry and cross bow, that the assailants were compelled to fall back slowly, but fearfully mangled, to their former position.

Advertising.—The mass of those who attempt to do business have a very imperfect knowledge of the immense advantages of advertising. Many a man gives a thousand dollars a year for a favorable stand yet grudges a hundred for advertising; not reflecting that a hundred men would be made acquainted with his business through the newspapers, where one would pass and observe his store, though in the most favorable location.

There are a few who understand this matter are making fortunes, while thousands around them are toiling in like pursuits barely to live, and often failing in that.

[N. York Tribune.]
The School-mistress Abroad.—'Now then close your book, Bob, said the mother, and Alec give me yours; put your hands down, turn from the fire, and look up at me dears.

What is the capital of Russia?
The Hittin Empire, said Alec, with unhesitating confidence.

The Baltic sea, cried Bob, emulous and ardent.

Wait—not so fast, let me see my dear, which of you is right.

Mrs. Thompson appeared immediately to her book, after a long communication with which, she emphatically pronounced them both wrong.

Give us a chance, mother, said Bob, in a wheedling tone, (Bob knew his mother's weakness,) then such hard words, I don't know how it is, but I never can remember them—just tell us half the syllable—oh, do now please.

Oh, I know now, cried Alec, its something with a G, in it.

Think of the Apostles dears. What are the names of the Apostles?

Why, there's Moses, began Bob, counting on his fingers, and there's Sammy-well, and there's Aaron and Noah's ark.

Stop my dear, said Mrs. Thompson, just begin again. I said who was Peter, not that—who was an Apostle?

Oh I know now, cried Alec again—(Alec was the bright boy of the family,) it's Peter, Peter's the the capital of Russia.

No, not quite, my dear, try again.

Paul, half murmured Robert, with a reckless hope of proving right.

No, Peter's right; but there's something else. What has your father been taking down the beds for?

There was a solemn silence, and the three industrious sisters blushed the slightest blush that could be raised on a maiden's cheek.

To rub that stuff off the wall, said the ready Alec.

Mr. Tierny, who was found guilty on two counts only.

The court had adjourned to April 18, and the defendants remained as before subject to their own recognizances to appear at the ensuing term, when judgment would be given, unless delayed by motions which were to be offered in arrest of judgment.

Our last accounts closed at the middle of the twenty-fourth day of the trial, (Feb. 10) when the Chief Justice was delivering his charge to the jury.

He closed by alluding to the appeals that had been made on behalf of the defendants, 'sometimes to the feelings, by gentlemen of great ability; but he said, they were to hold themselves as entirely indifferent parties, and remembering only the evidence and the oath they have taken, give a true verdict.

In drawing their conclusions, and finding their verdict, they would attend to the evidence before them, and let it be conformable to the dictates of their reason and their conscience, and he did trust that the Lord who ruled over all would enlighten their direction.'

The papers were handed to the jury at half past five o'clock, when they retired and at ten minutes to eleven, on the same night returned with their verdict.

After the verdict had been recorded, The Chief Justice thanked the jury for the patient attention they had bestowed for nearly a month upon this unprecedented case, admitted the loss and injury it must have been to them, regretted that the Court did not possess the power of granting them compensation, which the Foreman, in delivering the verdict, applied for and dismissed them.

The Verdict—Popular Excitement.
The accounts from the country show that the verdict of 'Guilty' against Mr. O'Connell has produced extreme excitement and irritation in all quarters.

An Old Soldier.—A slave named Gilt, died near Stanton, Virginia, on the 18th ult. aged 112 years. He was a servant to Col. Washington at the great battle of the Monongahela, on the 9th of July, 1755, when Braddock was defeated, and afterwards with the General at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, on the 19th of October, 1781.

The Taunton Spectator says, he was honest and industrious, and the boys of our town will long remember the 'old man in regiments,' they have been accustomed to look upon with delight on our high days of parade.

Another Prophet.—A rival to Father Miller, has appeared in this city. The new prophet is named Leonard Jones, and formerly established a sect in Kentucky called 'Live Forever'—a term significant of the creed of his people, who were to enjoy bodily existence and perennial youth upon this time-wasting world, through the renovating influence of faith. One of their preachers having died, the sect was broken up. He has since imbibed a new philanthropy, in the shape of a direct revelation, which was made to him in the neighborhood of Danville, Ky., on or about the 14th of March last. He now preaches Millerism with a difference. He contends that the world is coming to an end only so far as Satan is concerned; the Devil is to be put down and his works disappear; a most consoling belief.—[New Orleans Bee.

The Hungry Arab.—An Arab was lost in the desert. For two days he found nothing to eat, and was in danger of death from starvation, until, finally, he discovered a fountain from which travellers were accustomed to water their camels. Near the fountain, lying upon the sand he saw a leather sack.

God be praised! said he, as he raised and felt it; these are, I believe, dates, or nuts of some kind. Oh, how I will strengthen and refresh myself upon them!

In this sweet hope he opened the sack, saw the contents, and cried out full of sorrow:

Alas! they are only pearls.

Annexation.—There is a rumor that negotiations have been opened with Mexico to obtain the consent of that country to annex Texas to the United States, and offering to pay a fair consideration, backed by the supposition that Mexico has less to apprehend from this Government than from Texas. It is not improbable that the consent of Mexico may be obtained, as it is a spirit of pride and determined hostility which prevents Mexico from acknowledging the independence of Texas. We must confess that this one great obstacle overcome, there would be less repugnance in bringing in Texas. At all events, it is a great national question, and must not be allowed to mix itself up with the Presidential election.

Dr. Duncan's Opinion. The Cincinnati Atlas of Wednesday, says: Our member of Congress returned home yesterday from Washington. We are told he publicly expresses his opinion that the annexation of Texas will immediately take place.

Irish O'Connell's Trial Verdict. The Irish State Trials have now closed. The verdict, which was rendered on the 12th ult. was guilty generally against all the defendants, except Rev. place.

Those elders who are numbered in the foregoing list, to reside on the different states, will appoint conference in all places in their several states where opportunities present, and will attend ALL the conference, or send experienced and able elders who will preach the truth in righteousness, and present before the people the General Smith's views of the power and policy of the General Government; and seek diligently to get up electors who will go for him for the presidency. All the elders will be faithful in preaching the gospel in its simplicity, and in all meekness, humility, long suffering and gentleness; and the Twelve will devote the season to travelling, and will attend as many conferences as possible.

Elder B. Winchester is instructed to pass through Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North and South Carolina, and Virginia, to visit the churches, hold conferences and reside over them.

DROWNED—In the Mississippi river, near this city, on the 17th day of March, William Burch, between 22 and 23 years of age, his hair dark brown, wore a velvet coat, gray pants and dark colored waistcoat had a silver watch with a silver or silver plated guard with a half dollar and some small change in his pockets. If any person should find the body or be in possession of any knowledge relative to it, they will confer a favor by giving information thereof to his mother in this city or at this office.

April 17th 1844.

We received the following affidavits just as our paper was going to press and stopped it on purpose to insert the precious moreau. We have only time and room to make a few remarks on this discreditable plot, which is as execrable and heinous, as the subject is filthy. We could hope, for the sake of humanity, that the statements made by the deponents are untrue; but we are obliged to believe them till we have other evidence.

We know not how to express our indignation at the statements contained in the affidavits. We thought that the saints had been slandered enough already by the Missourians, and a lot of apostates, with John C. Bennett at their head; and that the vocabulary of the lower regions, and the ingenuity of his satanic majesty had been exhausted to find out matter of accusation against the saints, and language filthy enough to convey their ideas in; but we find that the pupils of the great John C. Bennett, bid fair to outvie their preceptor in deeds of darkness, and to stand foremost in the ranks of infamy. All that we have to say is, from such men, from such measures, from such corrupt and debasing ideas and plots 'good Lord deliver us.'

Personally appeared before me, Daniel H. Wells, acting Justice of the Peace, in & for the said county, Abner B. Williams, who being duly sworn according to law do depose & say, that on or about the 15th day of March, A. D. 1844, Joseph H. Jackson came to my house and requested me to walk with him, which I did. During the time we were walking, said Joseph H. Jackson said that he was then coming direct from Mr. Law's; that there was going to be a secret meeting in the city of Nauvoo, probably to-morrow evening; but as it was not decided he could not say positively as to the time but he would inform me in season. The said Joseph H. Jackson said that Doctor Foster, Chancy Higbee and the Laws were red-hot for a conspiracy, and he should not be surprised if in two weeks there should not be one of the Smith family left alive in Nauvoo. After we arrived at Mr. Loomis' the Masonic Hall, in the city of Nauvoo, he related some thing which he stated that Dr. Foster had said relative to his family. This he did in the presence of Mr. Eaton, & myself and strongly solicited myself & Mr. Eaton to attend the secret meeting, & join them in their intentions. The said Joseph H. Jackson further said that Chancy Higbee had said that he and Chancy Higbee had seen mentioned hand and foot and run through the heart with a sword, and their heads taken off, and then buried; and he should not say a word. This the said Jackson said in Mr. Loomis' room, and further this deponent saith not.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 27th day of March, A. D. 1844.

DANIEL H. WELLS, J. P. [L. S.]

State of Illinois, ss.

Personally appeared before me, Daniel H. Wells, acting Justice of the Peace, in and for said county, M. G. Eaton, who being duly sworn according to law depose and say, that on or about the 15th day of March, A. D. 1844, Joseph H. Jackson came to my house several times and requested me to go on the hill with him. I finally consented and went with him to the Key-stone Store, in the city of Nauvoo. Dr. Foster and one of the Higbees, I think Chancy Higbee, were in the store. The said Joseph H. Jackson, together with the said R. D. Foster and said Higbee, went into the back room of the store. They appeared to enter into private council. Soon after they went into the said room the said Joseph H. Jackson invited me into the room where they were then sitting. I immediately complied. Soon after I went in the said Higbee commenced talking about the spiritual wife system. He said he had no doubt but some of the Elders had ten or twelve apiece. He said they married him whether the females were willing or not; and they did it by recording the marriage in a large book; which book was sealed up after the record was made, and was not to be opened for a long time, probably not until many of the husbands of those who were thus married were dead. They would then open the book & break the seals in the presence of the females, and when they saw their names recorded in that book they would believe that the doctrine was true and they must submit. He said this book was kept at Mr. Hyrum Smith's. I asked the said Chancy Higbee

(He follows some expressions too indecent for insertion.)

The aforesaid R. D. Foster then asked me what I would think if during my absence from home a carriage should drive up to my house, a person alight, and the carriage then drive off again, this person should then go into my house and begin to tell my wife a great many things against me to prejudice her mind against me and use every possible means to do this, and finally would introduce and preach the spiritual wife doctrine to her and make an attempt to seduce her, and further this person should sit down to dine with my wife, bless the victuals &c., and while they were thus engaged, I should come home and find them thus associated; this person should rise up and say how do you do and bless me in a very polite manner &c., and also, if upon these appearances, I should feel jealous that something was wrong and when the person was gone I would ask my wife what had been the conversation between her and this person, but she would refuse to tell me. I then draw a pistol and present it to her head and threaten to shoot her if she did not tell me, but she would still refuse. I then would give her a double barreled pistol and say to her defend yourself, for if you don't tell me, either you or I would shoot. She would then faint away through fear and excitement; and when she came to again, she would begin and tell you how this person had been trying to poison your wife's mind against you, and by preaching the spiritual wife system to her had endeavored to seduce her. I replied R. D. Foster, answered that he was the man who had had that trial, and who had been thus abused.

The said Dr. Foster, Higbee and Joseph H. Jackson then remarked that they were about to hold a secret meeting to oppose and try to put a stop to such things. The said Joseph H. Jackson also said that if any person undertook to arrest him he should begin to cut them.

The said R. D. Foster said he was afraid of his life and dare not be out nights. The said Higbee said he had not a doubt but there had been men killed in Missouri who had had secrets that they were afraid they would divulge. He said he was afraid of his life.

The said Jackson further said that he should not be surprised if there should be a real muss and an insurrection in the city in less than two months and that if a disturbance should take place the Carthaginians and others would come and help them.

He mentioned some names of persons who would come from Carthage, which names I do not remember. The same day when in Mr. Loomis' room I heard the said Jackson say that the Laws were ready to enter into a secret conspiracy tooth and nail.

The said Higbee also said while at the Key-stone if ever he was brought before the Mayor's Court again, and the Mayor told him to hold his tongue, that he should get up and tell him he had a right to speak and should do so, and then if any man attempted to put him out of court he would shoot them through and further this deponent saith not.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 27th day of March, A. D. 1844.

DANIEL H. WELLS, J. P. [L. S.]

State of Illinois, ss.

The witness shall inherit glory, but shame shall be the promotion of fools.—Solomon's Proverbs.

In the daily Globe of March 14, Mr. Blair notices my 'Views on the Powers and Policy of our Government,' under the head of 'A new advocate for a National Bank,' with remarks and extracts. As it does not bespeak a gentleman to tell all he knows, nor indicate wisdom to murmur at the oddities of men, I rarely reply to the many remarks, sayings, and speculations upon me and my plans which seem to agitate the world, for like the show ers upon the verdure of the earth, they give me vigor, beauty, and expansion—but when a man occupies a station in his country, which ought to be honored as an exaltation, which ought to be sustained with dignity; and which should be filled by a friend and patriot of the nation, too wise to be cozened by counterfeit principles; too great to blur his fame with hypocrisy; too proud to stoop to the vanity that is momentarily wasting the virtue of the Government;—and too good to act the hypocrite to accumulate wealth, or frustrate the ends and aims of justice; I feel it my duty to bring forth the truth; that the man and his measures, if right may be sustained; and if wrong, may be rebuked.

Without reference to men, parties, or precedents, the plan of banking, suggested in my 'Views,' is assumed upon the all-commanding, and worthily considered, omnipotent position of the people, and whether, as a 'fiscal agent,' great financier prophet, priest or king, I act wisely and righteously, so as to answer their virtuous prayers, without fear, favor or partiality; and produce union; give satisfaction to twenty millions of freemen, rather than sport with their holy supplications to boost a few hungry, crafty, hypocritical demagogues into office to gamble for the 'loaves and fishes'—no matter whether the game is played upon the tables of the living, or the coffins of the dead,—and whether I raise the honor and credit of the nation above the little, pica-yune, cramped, narrow minded schemes of the dominant, undominant, and would be dominant parties, cliques, knots, and factions; or whether, like the venerable fathers, I launch my new ship into the great ocean of existence,—and, like them, luckily bring relief to the oppressed, is all the same, so long as the people are honored as noble in their patriotism; virtuous in their intentions; and almighty in their majesty: no populi—no Dei!

But it is extraneous, irrelevant and kick shawing to connect me or any part of my 'Views on the powers and policy of the government,' with Mr. Clay, Mr. Webster, Mr. Adams, Mr. Benton, Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Van Buren or any of their galvanic cronies;—what have they done to benefit the people? The simple answer is—nothing but draw money from the Treasury. It is entirely too late in the age of this Republic to clarify a Harry of the west; deify a Daniel of the east; quidify a Quincy of the Whigs; or bigify a Benton of the democrats; leaving Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Van Buren such fair samples of bogus-democracy, that he that runs may read.

As the beautiful excellence of a head may be a desideratum only remedied by the 'Excelsior' of the brain, so a great man ought to exhibit his wisdom by his liberality to the unfortunate among men as a token of philanthropy, unbounded by party lines, unfettered by chain-cable opinions, and untrammelled by cast iron rules. Why shun the noble project of letting the prisoners go free by petition? It is sanctioned by ancient custom; it is the counsel of God, and would be the only visible testimony to the world that this realm is what it professes to be, a Government of Liberty! Heaven, earth, and hell know that the penitentiaries of the several States are a disgrace to the United States, and a stink in the nostrils of the Almighty. And the county and city prisons are still worse. Unfortunately men, and in nine cases out of ten, innocent, are hurled into prison by corrupted Judges, suborned witnesses, or ungodly men who gamble themselves into Congress, into Legislatures into courts, into churches, and into notice and power, and thus damn their friends and fellow beings to prison, wretchedness and ruin.

And in ninety and nine cases out of a hundred, the prisoners are treated meaner than dogs; half starved to put money into the pockets of speculators; fed upon unwholesome provisions; whipped without mercy and even murdered with impunity. Look at the beastly conduct of  to the female in Auburn State Prison, N. Y. Remember a man was whipped to death, not long since, in Alton penitentiary, Illinois, and it is not uncommon to lacerate with the 'rope's end' thirty men at once, in the parish prisons of New Orleans, so that the voice of reason now cries from the vast number of prisons and the multiplying number of prisoners in the United States for relief; and the death like groan from cells, bastiles, castles, and cursed holes throughout the whole earth, is ascending up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth to be avenged of such cruelty. And when great men, in high places, see a Governor Reynolds shout out his own brains with a rille; or gaze upon the havoc made by the bursting of a 'great gun' among the 'Executives' of the nation, then know ye, the hour of his judgment is come!

The United States is the boasted land of 'Liberty,' where 'these truths are held self evident,'—that ALL men are created equal; and endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, LIBERTY and the pursuit of happiness; but at the same time, in the face of these truths, slavery is tolerated by law; imprisonment is tolerated by law; and murder is threatened by law; and over fifteen thousand free citizens are exiled from one State to another—and the General Government has no power, (according to the opinions of Van Buren and Benton) to redress the wrong. O, Queen Victoria, and ye Lords and commons of Great Britain, what think ye of a Republican Government! and how do you imagine your daughter will come out in her attempt at equal rights and reigning in righteousness? Pshaw! (will they answer) your citizens are robbed with impunity; your citizens are mobbed, and driven like chaff from the threshing floor; and the government, controlled by a set of money gambling, chicken hearted, public fed cowards, cannot redress you! Ask the reigning sovereigns of Europe, Africa and Asia, what they think of the boasted Republic in America! and will they not laugh in the face of the whole world, and taunt the United States, by exclaiming: Ah! hah! hah! hah! if there is any power in a Republican Government, in a real case of necessity, you have failed to find just men to exercise it. Party spirit cuts the cords of union; patronage veils the face of justice, and bribery closes the lips of honor, and when the wicked rule the people mourn.

Perhaps it may be said, the government has been adequate to the calls of justice; and I answer, if it has, it was because the officers in authority considered their power and the rights of the people paramount to patronage pelf and popularity!

They were patriots who carried out the poets explanation of true greatness: 'A wit a feather, and a chief a rod, But an honest man's the noblest work of God.'

It is said that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and when men are called "quadrupeds," and ridicule occupies the place of reason, and the virtue, dignity, honor, power, and majesty of the people seems to be buried in rubbish; covered with dust; mildewed with fog; tainted with treachery; burlasqued by blackguards; or hampered by de bauchees; it is high time for humanity to exclaim: 'How has the gold become dim, and where has the glory departed!'

The only suggestion worthy of commendation relative to a National Bank, in Mr. Blair's remarks, is, that the mother bank should be located at Nauvoo. This is correct, for Nauvoo as a city, collectively or individually, cannot be reproached with dishonesty, crime, corruption or bribery. Neither has a Secret or Price mingled his millions with the majesty of monarchs by walking out of the unvalued and ungrated Nauvoo. The blood of Commodores and Congress men, shed by the heaven-daring, hell-begotten, earth-disgracing practice of duelling, has never stained the virtuous soil of city of Nauvoo. Nor does a slave raise his rusting fetters and chains, and exclaim, O liberty, where are thy charms! Wisdom, freedom, religion, and virtue, like light, love, water and air, 'spread undivided, and operate unspent,' in the beloved Nauvoo; while the gay world, and great politicians may sing, and even the "great Globe" itself may chime the melodious sounds:—

Hail Columbia, 'free and equal'—

By the saints, the Mormons, bless ye!

For thy glory most severely.

When Missouri gave them Jesse:

Hail Columbia, 'free and equal'—

Negro slaves, like common cattle, Bought and sold for cash at auction?

Prayers and chains together rattled!

Hail Columbia, 'free and equal'—

'Gold and silver' is thy 'standard'—

Treasury notes, (aside from Biddle), Foreign loans, and fallen splendor!

As the 'world is governed too much,' and as there is not a nation or dynasty, now occupying the earth, which acknowledges Almighty God as their lawgiver. And as 'crowns won by blood, by blood must be maintained,' I go emphatically, virtuously, and humbly, for a Theocratic democracy, where God and the people hold the power to conduct the affairs of men, in righteousness. And where liberty, free trade, and sailor's rights, and the protection of life and property shall be maintained inviolate, for the benefit of ALL. 'To exalt mankind is nobly acting the part of a God; to degrade them, is meanly doing the drudgery of the devil. Unitas, libertas, caritas—esto perpetua!

With the highest sentiments of regard for all men, I am an advocate for unadulterated freedom.

JOSEPH SMITH.

Nauvoo, Ill. April 15, 1844.

For the Neighbor.

Mr. Editor,—Having been a resident of your beautiful and flourishing city for a considerable length of time, and having therefore had abundant opportunities of cultivating the acquaintance and contemplating the character of the distinguished individual who is the leader of this people, and who now fills a large space in the public eye, I have concluded to give you my 'impressions' of him, and if you deem them worthy of a place in the columns of your interesting journal, you are at liberty to dispose of them in that way. General Joseph Smith is naturally a man of strong mental power, and is possessed of much energy and decision of character, great penetration, and a profound knowledge of human nature. He is a man of calm judgement, enlarged views, and eminently distinguished by his love of justice. He is easy, affable, and courteous in his manners; kind and obliging; generous and benevolent, sociable and cheerful, and sometimes even playful; yet he is possessed of a kind of a contemplative and reflective character; he is honest, frank, fearless, and independent; and as free from dissimulation as and man I have ever seen. But it is in the gentle charities of domestic life, as the tender and affectionate husband and parent, the warm and sympathetic friend; the prominent traits of his character are revealed; and his heart is felt to be keenly alive to the kindest and softest emotions of which human nature is susceptible, and I feel assured that his family and friends formed one of the greatest consolations to him, while the trials of war were poured upon his head, while his footsteps were pursued by malice and envy, while the arrows of desolation were hurled at him, and reproach and slander were strewn in his path, as well as during his numerous and cruel persecutions, and severe and protracted sufferings in chains and loathsome prisons, for worshipping God according to the dictates of his own conscience. He is a true lover of his country, and a bright and shining example of integrity and moral excellence in all the relations of life. As a religious teacher, as well as a man, he is greatly beloved by the people. As a public speaker, he is generally impressive, and sometimes eloquent. Gen. Smith, who is now before the country as a candidate for the highest honors in its gift, is eminently qualified for that exalted station; and he is not a Northern man with Southern principles, but a Western man with American principles; and if elected will be the President, not over a clique or a party, but the President over the whole people of the United States.

A CONSTANT READER.

Nauvoo, April 15, 1844.

MORMONS IN ALABAMA.

The Mobile Journal of the 7th inst. says:—The Mormons are upon our borders. We learn from a late letter from Sumpter county, that they are making a somewhat formidable demonstration in the adjoining county of Mississippi. They commenced operations at Pleasant Springs, late in fall, and now number about seventy-five proselytes, some twenty being seceders from the Methodist connexion, and about twenty six from the Baptist; the balance from non-professors. They have recently commenced propagating their faith at Brooklyn, only a few miles from our State line, they will probably meet with a like success. [Boston Bee.]

TEXAS.

Treaty with Mexico.—Galveston papers of the 17th inst. have been received at N. Orleans.—The Civilian states, that the commissioners to Mexico are daily expected to return. An Armistice has, we have no doubt, be established. The fear that a part of the territory claimed by Texas might be ceded, is pronounced wholly groundless. The boundary is to be adjusted in the final negotiation for peace. Whatever may be the precise terms of the arrangement entered into at present, we have great confidence that permanent peace will be the result.

Since the beginning of the armistice in June, we have regarded the war as at an end, and every day strengthens the convictions.

The Young Man's Leisure. Young man! after the duties of the day are over, how do you spend your evenings? When business is dull, and leaves at your disposal many unoccupied hours, what disposition do you make of them? I have known, and now know, many young men, who if they devoted to any scientific, literary or professional pursuits, the time they spend in games of chance, and lounging in bad, and idle company, might raise to any eminence. You have all read of the sexton's son who became a fine astronomer by spending a short time every evening in gazing at the stars, after ringing the bell for nine o'clock. Sir William Phipps, who at the age of forty-five had attained the order of knighthood, and the office of high sheriff of New England and Governor of Massachusetts, learned to read and write after his eighteenth year off a ship carpenter in Boston. William Gilford, the great editor of the Quarterly, was an apprentice to a shoemaker, and spent his leisure hours in study. And because he had neither pen nor paper, slate nor pencil, he wrought out his problems on smooth leather with a blunt awl.

David Rittenhouse, the American Astronomer, when a school boy, was observed to have covered his satchel with figures and calculations. James Ferguson the great Scotch astronomer, learned to read by himself and mastered the elements of astronomy whilst a shepherd's boy in the fields by night. And perhaps it is not too much to say, that if the hours wasted in idle company, in vain conversation at the tavern, were only spent in pursuit of useful knowledge, the duldest apprentice in any one of our shops, might become an intelligent member of society, and a fit person for most of our civil offices.

By such a course, the rough conversation of many a youth is laid aside; and their ideas instead of being confined to local subjects and professional technicalities, might range throughout the wide fields of creation; and other stars from the young men of this city might be added to the list of worthies that is gliding our country with a bright yet mellow light.—Rev. Dr. Murray.

QUEEN VICTORIA.—Letters received in Buffalo from a gentleman in England, according to the Commercial Advertiser of that city, state distinctly what before has been darkly hinted at, that the insanity which so long afflicted George III. is likely to prove hereditary in his granddaughter, Queen Victoria. The symptoms, it is said, are already apparent, producing as yet but little more than what the French term tete moule, but giving rise to painful apprehensions of the result.

Ruins of former Cities.—A gentleman who has travelled over a large portion of the Indian country of Northern Texas, and the country lying between Santa Fe and the Pacific informs the editor of the Houston Telegraph that there are vestiges of ancient cities and ancient cities and ruined temples on the Rio Puerco and Colorado of the West. On one of the branches of the Rio Puerco, a few days' travel from Santa Fe, there is an immense pile of ruins that appears to have been an ancient temple. The building occupies nearly an acre of ground—portions of wall are still standing, consisting of large blocks of limestone, regularly hewn, and laid in cement. The ruins bear a general resemblance to those of Palenque or Ooluln. There are many similar ruins on the Colorado of the West, which empties into the Californian Gulf. Neither the Indians in the vicinity, nor the oldest Spanish settlers of the nearest settlements, can give any account of the origin of these buildings.

SEEDLING FRUIT TREES.

Mr. Editor: I was much struck with the plausibility and apparent force of some observations of a writer in the August number of the Cabinet, under the appropriate signature of 'Poma,' on the subject of Apples; particularly the apples of Ohio. I have not the article by me, but the gist of the reasoning was, that the youthful appearance of the fruit trees, especially the apple trees of Ohio, and the fairness and roundness of the fruit, which have attracted the notice

even of passing strangers, was probably to be ascribed to the trees themselves being seedlings, or recently derived from seedling trees. He argued the probability that 'settlers' in Ohio from the Eastern States, had taken the seeds of apples.

is a matter of convenience, in lieu of grafted stocks from old trees;

and that, therefore, the present orchards of Ohio are, in fact, youthful trees. This conclusion would appear to be warranted

by the theory and practice now prevalent in Europe; especially in Belgium; where they are creating, as it were, new and ameliorated varieties of fruits, by planting

the seeds for several successive generations, until a fine variety is obtained, worthy to be preserved and propagated.

They are not at all particular about the excellence of the fruit from which they take the first seed for planting; neither does the fruit the first planting show much, if any sign of amelioration; but the second generation comes out with higher promises, and a superior variety is usually established in the third generation, with the peach, according to Van

Mons, and in the sixth with the apple.

Knowing how observant he is of things useful in their nature, and connected with the substantial interests of society, I called the attention of Mr. Whittlesey, who himself a practical farmer of Ohio, to 'Po-ma's' remarks, and received from him, with his characteristic promptness, the enclosed letter, which you are at liberty to publish if you see proper.

J. S. STINER.

Washington, Oct. 1st, 1843.

Auditor's Office, P. O. Department.

Washington, Sept. 9th, 1843.

My Dear Sir: Having read your letter of this date, and the article signed 'Poma,' copied from the Farmer's Cabinet, I shall very briefly attempt to answer your inquiries.

The apples in the north part of Ohio,

in what is known by the Western Reserved, and in the country bordering on the Ohio river, as far as Marietta and vicinity, where I am best acquainted,

when proper care has been taken in selecting and cultivating them, are superior in size, fairness and flavor. I have visited no part of the country where they so generally abound. It is uncommon to see a house without an orchard, as without a garden.

When trees are taken from nurseries not grafted or budded, and are left to contend with weeds and grass, they become scrubby; are covered with rough bark and moses, and bear small ill-flavored fruit.

Seedlings, when reared and pruned by a horticulturist, are in very many instances, delicious.

Several years elapsed after my residence in the western country, before I saw a defective or wormy apple. South of Lake Erie, and distant from it from two to twelve miles, is a ridge composed of loam and sand. This, and the land between it and the Lake, is the best region for fruit I have seen, whether abundance or perfection is desired.

The writer under the signature of 'Po-ma' raises the question, whether the youthful appearance of the trees and the excellency of the apples in Ohio, may not be accounted for, from their much more recent derivation from seedlings?

He is correct in saying, that the early settlers particularly those who went to the northern part of Ohio from the New England States, carried apple seeds of the most esteemed varieties, and there is no doubt a variety of choice fruits might be selected in different sections of that country, from such seedlings thus produced. The youthful appearance of the trees depends first on age and culture;

secondly, on climate and soil. Trees of the same age, on the ridge mentioned, are generally more thrifty, smoother and taller, than they are on the high land south of it. Their roots strike deep into a good soil, from which nourishment is derived.

Mr. Knight's theory, that all plants of one species, however propagated from the same stock partake, in some degree, of the same life, &c., is worthy of serious consideration and experiment.

The result of my observations and comparisons is, that the same kinds of apples west of the mountains are larger, sounder, fairer, and better flavored than those of the same kind east of the mountains.

At the east, that young trees in a virgin soil, produce better fruit than old trees in a country long cultivated.

'Poma's' plan of propagating fruit at the east by seedlings from the west, should be put in practice. Several generation would search for and send grafts, if desired. Dr. Jared P. Kirtland, near Cleveland, and N. Longworth, Esq., at Cincinnati, much skilled in horticulture, would be valuable correspondents, for extreme sections of the State, and their acquaintance in other parts, enables them to designate other gentlemen who would cheerfully render any services to that object.

The north, east, and south are indebted to the west for the Mercer potato, and no doubt they can be supplied from that quarter with delicious, new varieties of the apple.

We will pay this class of our foreign debts as demanded, without repudiation.

ELISHA WHITTLESEY.

New Mode of Grafting. Mr. Downing, of Newburg has lately practised with success, a new mode of grafting, the object being, to test the quality of fruits raised from seeds in a shorter period than would be possible by permitting such seedlings to stand until their natural time of bearing.

The method is, to put the top of a shoot from a seedling tree, or a new variety,

when it is desirable to procure a specimen of the fruit immediately, upon the top of a thrifty shoot of a middling aged and fruit-bearing tree; the process being simply to take thrifty shoots, about a quarter of an inch in diameter, and cut them in a slanting manner clear through, so as to detach about four inches of the top from the rest, making the line of the angle about an inch—the stock being cut in the same manner. The backs are then carefully united, and bound up with yarn covering the whole with grafting wax, to exclude the air. By this mode fruit may be obtained in a short period, so as to test its value at an early day; the operation being simple, with scarcely a fear of fail-

POETRY.

THE WIDOW OF NAIN.

BY N. P. WILLIS.

The Roman sentinel stood hoarse and tall
Beside the gate of Nain. The busy tread
Of comers to the city mark was clear,
For it was almost noon, and a dead heat
Quivered upon the line and sleeping dust,
And the cold sun crept panting from the wall,
And back his weary eyelids in the sun.
Upon his spear the soldier lean'd, and kept
His idle watch, and as his drowsy dream
Was broken by the solitary foot
Of some poor mendicant, he raised his head
To curse him for a tributary Jew,
And slumberously dozed on.

'Twas now high noon,
The dull, low murmur of a funeral
Went through the city—the sad sound of feet
Unmurmured with voices, and the sentinel
Shook off his slumber, and gazed earnestly
Up the wide street along whose paved way
The silent throng crept slowly. They came on,
Bearing a body heavily on his bier,
And by the crowd that in the burning sun,
Walk'd with funeral solemnity, 'twas of one Mourner's wail and wailing sorrow. The broad gate Swung on its hinges, and the Roman bent
His spear point downwards as the lever past.
Bending beneath their burden. There was one—
Only one mourner. Close behind the bier Crumpling the pall up in her wither'd hands, Follow'd an aged woman. Her short steps
Falter'd with weakness, and a broken moan
Fell from her lips, thickened convulsively
As her heart bled afresh. The pitying crowd
Follow'd a step, but none spoke to her.
She had no kinsmen. She had lived alone—
A widow with one son. He was her all.
The only tie she had in the wide world—
And he was dead. They could not comfort her.

Jesus drew near to Nain as from the gate
The funeral came forth. His lips were pale
With the moon's solitary light. The bearded saint Stood thickly on his brow, and on the worn
And sinew-laden of his shoulders lay Thick the white dust of travel. He had come Since sunrise from Capernaum, starting not
To see his life by green Bethesda's pool.
Nor walk his feet in Rachel's silver spurs,
Nor turn him southward upon Tabor's side
To catch the sunset and the evening breeze.
Gourmeth stood cool upon the east,
Fast by the sea of Galilee, and the Weary traveler might bide till eve;
And on the shores of Bethesda's plains
The grapes of Palestine hung ripe and wild;
Yet turn he not aside, but gazing on,
From every swelling bosom, he saw afar
Amid the hills the humble spires of Nain,
The place of his next errand, and the path
Toward that Bethesda, and a vague awe
Upon the east by pleasant hills.

From the city gate the pitying crowd Follow'd the stricken mourner. They came near
The place of burial, and the straining hands,
Closer upon her breast she clasp'd the pall,
And with a gasping sob, quick as a child's,
And an inquiring wail flash'd through
The thin gray lines of her fever'd eyes,
She came where Jesus stood beside the way.
He look'd upon her, and his heart was moved.
'Weep not,' he said, and as they stand the bier,
And at his bidding laid it at his feet,
He gently drew the pall from out her grasp
And laid it back in silence from the dead.
With troubled wonder she through drew her ear,
And gazed on his calm looks. A minute's space,
He stood and pray'd. Then taking the cold hand,
He said, 'Arise.' And instantly the breast
Heaved in its earnestness, and a sudden flash
Ran through the lines of the divided lips,
And with a murmur of his mother's name,
He rend'd the veil, and sat himself in his chair,
And while the mourner hung upon his neck,
Jesus went calmly on his way to Nain.

SHORT PATENT SERMON.

BY POW, JR.

TEXT.—O that man should put an enemy in his mouth
To testify against him.—SHAK.

MY HEARERS—War and pestilence, as you all know have each time and again, sufficed the voracious stomach of Death with millions of their slaughtered victims, but the record of these occupies only a small space on the dusty record of mortality, compared with that which is allotted to intemperance to write down the sum total of her annual sacrifices. The broad avenue that leads to eternity, is continually choked up with the dead carcasses of her slain, and thousands are daily being dumped upon the putrid heap of life and rot in the oblivious fog of forgetfulness. To be wounded or physically disabled, while fighting for your country, your liberties and your homes, as a glory and an honor; but to be shot in the neck with a pistol loaded with the percussive elements of damnation, while you are sleeping upon the watch-tower of virtue, is a sin and a disgrace. O that man should put an enemy in the shape of alcohol, in his mouth to steal away his brains!—to shrivel up his soul, like a dried apple—to destroy that regulator of the intellect, Reason, and leave the complicated machinery of the mind to run at random, without the guidance of a single sober reflection! It does steal away the brains, my friends, and leaves, instead, a soft, pulpy substance of non-composmentisness as disgusting as it is useless; and I ask, what is man, without a secularity of brains, more than a monkey? Nothing at all. He is even less—for the discount levied upon his character for abusing the confidence of his Maker, places him upon a par with the loathsome reptile that ever cast its slime on the green carpet of earth. Rum not only steals away the brains, but it evens the brood, also. Not long since, my friends, I saw a silver haired man, (perchance the father of lovely daughters,) in a gloomy state of don't-care-iveness: there was a delightful mingling of heaven and hell in his head, and any quantity of change in his pocket: his thoughts were so elevated above the things of earth, that he never once deigned to look down and see that the sinister leg of his trousers, like his own moral character, hung by a single thread. Not he—the kept on spouting politics, war, and the best method of parental government, with all the enthusiasm and fire of a hot whiskey punch, till he was laid upon his bed, shrouded in the pall of a death-warning stupor. When the morning broke, and reason again dawned upon the chaos of his senses, and discovered to him that the other turgor of his pantalons was among the missing, how do you think he felt then? Why, with his fist he committed an assault and battery on his breast, and declared by all the spirits, infernal, terrestrial and celestial that he would join the Temperance Society, and become once more a man; but he resolved and re-resolved—and the last resolution I heard him utter, was when he had two horns in his hand. Yes, with one hand on the horn of a firm resolution never to drink again, and with the other on a horn of brandy, he'd look first on this picture, and then on that, till at last the spirit of evil prevailed—and I fear he will go headlong to destruction, unless I can throw a halter about him and hold on till he opens his eyes, and sees the awful gulf that yawns at his feet.

Beloved friends—I know of another of the frail human race, who is in the prime of life, and the empire of whose mind has been planted by Nature with those trees which bear the fruit of principle, rather than the fascinating blossoms of sentiment; but the blight of dissipation has thus early fell upon his fair prospects—and now one of the noblest works of God is falling to ruin, for the want of a moral power to support it in its last stage of decay. He is now, as it were, slipping down a greased plank to perdition. He often sticks in his clutches, and tries to hold on—but finding his physical faculties in a state of prostration, he calls aloud for 'Jo!' to bring him another glass of brandy and water to strengthen his nerves, to enable him to meet his fate with that courage which the crisis requires. The little black bottle which he places at his bed side to allay all nocturnal delicious tremblings, will soon s'and empty by his coffin, and with a triumphant smile, exclaim: 'Twas I that did the deed!' I hand him over to the protection of a merciful Providence. I know another, whom I venerate for his white hairs, and respect for his urbanity of manners, who is so fond of 'dig's noses,' that I fear the latter end of his existence will be chopped off as square as a sawmill log, instead of tapering to that almost imperceptible point to which the prudent and temperate extend. Instead of repeating the prayers which his mother had taught him in his youth, or he recites to his slumbers, he claps a spiral night cap on his head, sings the song of 'Begone Dull Care,' and bids good night to trouble—unmindful whether tomorrow shall find him in the sheet of death. He had better beware, lest he appear too animated at the bar of Omnipotence, and in a crazy, jesting mood, ask for a gin cocktail, instead of supplicating for mercy and forgiveness on his marrow bones.

O, my dear friends! that visible spirit of evil, called rum, will yet be the ruin of this world. I see its sad effects upon every side, almost every flower and shrub in the moral kingdom is growing pale beneath its withering influence. The few temperance societies that exist, are so many green spots in a boundless desert. Delightful and refreshing to all, except to the sore-eyed suckers of Bacchus. O, it is passing strange that the lovers of earth, who cling to it with all the affection of a steel-trap, will inoculate themselves with this deadly plague, and transmit its poison to posterity! I have known some babes to have been made drunk with their mother's milk; but generally speaking, my friends, people make themselves drunk—with their own hands they sow the tares in their wheat-fields—with their own hands they thrust the fire brands in their bosoms, and then curse madam Fortune, up hill and down, for being partial in the distribution of her favors. I shall not dwell upon female intoxication. I can't think upon the subject without feeling both sick at the heart and stomach. A beautiful woman saturated with alcohol, and with the froth and scum of depravity oozing from her mouth is about as disgusting an object as can be found between Catharine's Market and the slop-yard of Beelzebub.

My friends, keep sober—avoid those fatal glasses, at the bottom of which lie the sediment of destruction—drink only at the pure and limpid stream which flows directly from the ever-gushing fountains of heaven, whose waters are refreshing to the body—nourishing to the soul—and purifying to the heart; and oh, dash down forever upon the adamant rock of resolution that seducing goblet, which steals away man's brains, his breeches, his boots, his morals, and his reputation. So mote it be.

SKILL OF THE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS.

Lost Arts.—If the Thebans, 1800 years before Christ knew less in some departments of useful knowledge, than ourselves, they also in others knew more.—One great proof of the genius of that splendid line of potentates, entitled the eighteenth Theban dynasty, and the extent of civilization under their rule, was that the practical, chemical, astronomical and mechanical knowledge which they shared with the priestly (scientific) colleges; was in some respect equal to, 'in some respect greater than our own.' They made glass in great profusion (Diodorus Siculus) and burning glasses, and lenses for glasses. They must have cut their delicate cameos by the aid of microscopes. Ptolemy describes an astrolabe; they calculated eclipses; they then said that the moon was diversified by sea and land (Plutarch de facie lunae) that 'one lunar day was equal to fifteen of the earth'; that 'the earth's diameter was a third of the moon's'; and that 'the moon's mass was to the earth, as 1 to 72.' All these things show good instruments. They made gold potable, (inferentially, Moses did so, who was a scribe, brought up by the Sovereign Pontiff and nursed in the 'wisdoms of the Egyptians;') an 'art lost,' till recently recovered by a French chemist. Their workmanship in gold, as recorded by Homer, their golden clockwork, by which thrones moved, must be exquisitely ingenious. They possessed the art of tempering copper tools so as to cut the hardest granite with the most minute and brilliant precision. This art we have lost. We see the sculptors in the act of cutting the inscriptions on the granite obelisks and tablets. We see a pictorial copy of the chisels and tools with which the operation was performed. We see the tools themselves. There are sculptor's chisels at the museum, the cutting end of which preserves its edge unimpaired, while the blunt extremity is flattened by the blows of the mallet. But our tools would not cut such stone, with the precision of outline which the inscriptions retain to the present day. Again, what mechanical means had they to raise and fix the enormous imposts at the lintels of their temples at Karnak? Architects now confess that they could not raise them by the usual mechanical power. Those means must, therefore, be put to the account of the 'lost arts.' That they have been familiar with the principles of Artesian wells has been lately proved by the engineering investigations carried on while boring for water in the Great Oasis.—That they were acquainted with the principles of the railroad is obvious that is to say, they had artificial causerways, level, direct and grooved, (the grooves being anointed with oil,) for the conveyance from great distances of enormous blocks of stone, entire stone temples, and colossal statues of half the height of the monument. Remnants of iron, it is said, have lately been found in these groves. Finally, M. Arago has argued, that they not only possessed a knowledge of steam power, which they employed in the cavern mysteries of their Pagan freemasonry, but that the modern steam-engine is derived through Solomon de Caus, the preceptor of Worcester, from the invention of Hero, the Egyptian engineer. The contest of the Egyptian Saphos with Moses, before Pharaoh, pays singular tribute to their union of 'knowledge and power.' No supernatural aid is in material magic (see Sir D. Brewster) the jugglers of the East can and do now perform. In the fourth, an attempt to produce the lowest form of life, they fail.—From the whole statement one inference is safe, that the daring ambition of the priestly chemists had been led from the triumphs of embalming and chicken-hatching (imitating and assisting the production of life) to a Frankenstein experiment on the vital fluid and on the principle of life itself perhaps to experiments like these (correctly or incorrectly) ascribed to Mr. Crovis, in the hope of creating, not reviving, the lowest form of animal existence.—Westminster Review.

his forefathers had lived about 200 years. The lease by which he held was on the point of expiring, and the steward refused to allow Donald a renewal, wishing to give it to a friend of his own. Poor Donald tried every argument in his power with the steward, but in vain. At length he determined to make his case known to his lordship himself; but at the castle door he was repulsed, the steward having given orders that he should not be admitted. Donald, almost in despair, resolved on a bold measure. He climbed over the garden wall, and entered a private door, made his way unobserved towards the apartments of the nobleman. As he drew near he heard his lordship's voice engaged in prayer; and waiting till he should conclude, distinctly heard him pleading earnestly with the Virgin Mary and St. Francis to intercede with the Father and Son in his behalf. After the voice ceased, Donald gently knocked at the door, was admitted, and made his case known to the nobleman, who greatly moved by his tale, assured him that his lease should be renewed, and himself and family protected from the resentment of the steward. Donald poured forth his earnest and artless thanks, and was about to take leave, when a feeling of anxiety for the generous nobleman took possession of his mind, and he addressed him thus: 'My lord, I have been a bold man, but you have forgiven me, and saved me and my family from ruin. I would again be a bold man, and say something farther, if I have your permission.'

DONALD AND A CATHOLIC NOBLEMAN.

A Scotch nobleman of the Roman Catholic persuasion, lived a very retired life, and left his affairs very much in the hands of others. One of his tenants, named Donald, rented a farm upon which wrote, knew not the use of fire, or had but just learned it. Facts of the same kind are attested by several modern nations.

The inhabitants of the Marian Islands, which were discovered in 1551, had no idea of fire. Never was astonishment greater than theirs when they saw it on the descent of Magellan in one of their islands. At first they believed it to be some kind of an animal that fixed itself to, and fed upon, wood. The inhabitants of the Philippine and Canary Islands were formerly equally ignorant. Africa presents even in our own day, some nations in this deplorable state.

IMPORTANT FROM THE SOCIETY ISLANDS.

It is stated in 'The Friend,' a paper printed at Honolulu, Jan. 1, 1844, that Admiral Du Petit Thouars arrived at Tahiti on the 2d Nov. with the 'Reine Blanche' and 'Darcus,' of 50 guns each, and the 'Tranie' of 64 guns. On the 6th the Admiral dethroned the Queen and formally took possession of the Society Islands, for the throne of France—giving as a reason for so doing, that the Queen had refused to haul down her flag, which had been presented to her by Commodore Nichols of the English razee Vindictive. Mons. Banaat had changed his functions to that of Governor of the French possessions in the Pacific. Mr. Pritchard, the English Consul, had struck his flag. The Admiral had landed about 300 troops with about 100 operatives and artisans were at work erecting fortifications.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.

The 'Mona's Herald,' published on the 1st of Nov., has the following article in it relative to the state trials: 'The injustice done to the traversers by the manner in which the Government prosecution against them has been conducted, is thus forcibly and concisely represented by the Sun:—No correct copy of the indictment supplied to them, contrary to law and to English practice; the names of the witnesses sworn in secret, and not in open court contrary to law both in England and Ireland; the striking off the jury of all men of the Catholic faith, contrary to Christian charity and common justice;—and the suppression of nearly one-tenth of the entire jury panel, contrary to law, principle, and all fair dealing;—these are the preparations for a great act of justice, in the year 1844, in the time of a Tory Government, but after all—and greatest shame of all—in the Premiership of Sir Robert Peel!'

IT IS EASY TO BE MISTAKEN.

Charity is a Christian grace and virtue. We need its exercise, and should be careful how we treat those who may not agree with us in all things. There is much of evil in the disposition to slander and traduce the character of others. We ought not to give heed to tales that vilify and abuse a neighbor. It is easy to be mistaken. It may be that no such thing as is alleged against him has ever been done, and innocence may be where guilt is imputed.

It is goiklike to awaken joy and relieve distress; here there can be no mistake. Opportunities are frequent whereby we may assist and benefit a fellow-being. To produce smiles and gladness, instead of weeping and sorrow, is certainly a Christian act. How greatly do we err, when indulging in an acrimonious and bitter temper towards those whom we imagine have injured and offended us. It may be and probably is true, that they are mistaken in relation to the supposed injury. We ought not, as we often do, to seek to bite and devour one another. If we would reflect credit upon ourselves, and confer honor upon humanity, we must be charitable and forgiving. Relieved as society is, in such a great measure, from the dreadful evil and curse of intemperance, and enjoying as we now do exemption from one of the most injurious practices that ever obtained among men, it seems to be our duty more than ever to aim at a high standard of moral excellence. Not only should we speak no evil of one another, but we should endeavor constantly to do good to all.

The means of usefulness we are furnished with; the object upon which they may be brought to bear, and upon which good may be produced, do constantly surround us. Let us, therefore, study to render our fellow men services that will be gratifying and acceptable; let us learn to forgive one another the faults that have been committed and be kind, gentle, and courteous to each other. Unless mutual concession is made, and mutual forbearance exercised, much of happiness will be lost.

THE NATIONS WITHOUT FIRE.

According to Pliny, fire for a long time was unknown to some of the ancient Egyptians; and when Exodus, the celebrated astronomer, showed it to them, they were absolutely in raptures. The Persians, Phoenicians, Greeks and several other nations, acknowledged that their ancestors were once without the use of fire; the Chinese confessed the same of their progenitors. Pomponius, Nels, Plutarch and other ancient authors, speak of nations; who at the time they lived, knew not the use of fire, or had but just learned it. Facts of the same kind are attested by several modern nations.

The inhabitants of the Marian Islands, which were discovered in 1551, had no idea of fire. Never was astonishment greater than theirs when they saw it on the descent of Magellan in one of their islands. At first they believed it to be some kind of an animal that fixed itself to, and fed upon, wood. The inhabitants of the Philippine and Canary Islands were formerly equally ignorant. Africa presents even in our own day, some nations in this deplorable state.

IMPORTANT FROM THE SOCIETY ISLANDS.

It is stated in 'The Friend,' a paper printed at Honolulu, Jan. 1, 1844, that Admiral Du Petit Thouars arrived at Tahiti on the 2d Nov. with the 'Reine Blanche' and 'Darcus,' of 50 guns each, and the 'Tranie' of 64 guns. On the 6th the Admiral dethroned the Queen and formally took possession of the Society Islands, for the throne of France—giving as a reason for so doing, that the Queen had refused to haul down her flag, which had been presented to her by Commodore Nichols of the English razee Vindictive. Mons. Banaat had changed his functions to that of Governor of the French possessions in the Pacific. Mr. Pritchard, the English Consul, had struck his flag. The Admiral had landed about 300 troops with about 100 operatives and artisans were at work erecting fortifications.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.

The 'Mona's Herald,' published on the 1st of Nov., has the following article in it relative to the state trials: 'The injustice done to the traversers by the manner in which the Government prosecution against them has been conducted, is thus forcibly and concisely represented by the Sun:—No correct copy of the indictment supplied to them, contrary to law and to English practice; the names of the witnesses sworn in secret, and not in open court contrary to law both in England and Ireland; the striking off the jury of all men of the Catholic faith, contrary to Christian charity and common justice;—and the suppression of nearly one-tenth of the entire jury panel, contrary to law, principle, and all fair dealing;—these are the preparations for a great act of justice, in the year 1844, in the time of a Tory Government, but after all—and greatest shame of all—in the Premiership of Sir Robert Peel!'

THE PEOPLE OF IRELAND—FELLOW CITIZENS.

Once again I return you my most heartfelt thanks for the peace, quiet and good order you have observed, and I conjure you by the country we all love, and in the name of the God we all adore, to continue in the same peace, quietness and perfect tranquility.

I tell you solemnly that your enemies, and the enemies of Ireland, are very desirous that there should be a breaking out of tumult, riot, or other outrage. Be you, therefore, perfectly peaceable. Attack nobody. Offend nobody. Injure no person. If you respect your friends—if you wish to gull your enemies—keep the peace, and let not one single act of violence be committed.

You are aware the jury have found a verdict against me; but depend upon it that I will bring a writ of error, and will not acquiesce in the law, as laid down against me, until I have the opinion of the twelve judges in Ireland, and if necessary, of the House of Lords. Be you, therefore, perfectly quiet. Do no violence whatsoever. You could not possibly offend or grieve me half so much as by any species of riot, assault or outrage.

It is said that the great question of repeal has been injured by this verdict. Do not believe it. It is not true. On the contrary, the result of this verdict will be of the most material service to the repeal, if the people continue to be peaceable as they have hitherto been, and as I am sure they will continue to be.

Obeys my voice. No riot. No tumult. No blow. No violence. Keep the peace for six months, or at the utmost twelve months longer, and you shall have the Parliament in College Green again. I am, fellow-countrymen, your affectionate and devoted servant,

DANIEL O'CONNELL.

Merion Square, Feb. 11, 1844.

On Saturday night great excitement prevailed throughout Dublin, and dense masses of people of the lowest order were congregated in the streets in the immediate neighborhood of the courts, around which a crowd had stationed itself, apparently with a determination to stay out the whole night. Beyond the terrific yell outside the court which greeted the announcement of the verdict, there was no manifestation of any riot or disturbance; on the contrary, taking the occasion into consideration, there was a remarkable silence up to between two and three o'clock, by which time all was perfectedly tranquil. Large bodies of mounted and foot police continued to patrol the streets during the whole night. The troops in garrison were under arms in case their services should be required, but the civil force was found to be perfectly adequate to preserve the peace.

Repeal Association.—At a weekly meeting of this association, on Monday, Mr. John O'Connell was the principal speaker. He announced that the association could no longer distribute the repeal newspapers throughout the country. A letter from the Liberator was read, but the following extract comprises the only matter of importance contained in it: 'There is not the least reason for any kind of despondency. On the contrary, it appears to me to be as clear as the noon-day sun, that the repeal must succeed if the Irish people observe two essential conditions of success. The first is the strict observance of the peace—the absence of riot, tumult, outbreak, or force, in short, to continue peaceable under every circumstance and in every event.'

Secondly—to continue perseveringly and unflinchingly the repeal agitation—to continue the agitation in strictly legal channels; and in no other—to abandon and avoid any course that may be declared, however wrongfully, to be illegal, and to continue to model every public body into such a shape as shall set every prosecution at defiance; in short, to continue constitutional and legal agitation so long as one shred of the constitution remains. The rent for the week was announced as amounting to 1824 10s. 8d.

British Parliament.—On the 13th ult. Lord John Russell brought forward his promised motion in reference to Ireland. He moved for a committee of the whole House, to take into consideration the state of Ireland. The discussion of this motion wholly occupied the attention of the House of Commons for nine nights, and the result was, that it was lost by a vote of 225 for, and 324 against, giving ministers a majority of 99 votes.

It may be remarked that even ministerial members, throughout the debate admitted that something must be done to improve the condition of Ireland.

Mr. O'Connell was present during the debate, and made an eloquent appeal in behalf of his country.

A debate of more than passing interest was raised on Friday night by Mr. Duncombe, who moved for certain papers relative to the correspondence between the government, two or three reporters, and two conservative newspapers—the Standard and the Morning Herald.

Women Fattened at Tunis for Marriage.—A girl, after she is betrothed, is cooped in a small room. Shackles of gold and silver are placed upon her ankles and wrists, as a piece of dress. If she is to be married to a man who has discharged, despatched, or lost a former wife, the shackles which her former wife wore are put on the new bride's limbs, and she is fed till they fill up a proper thickness. The food used for this custom worthy of the barbarians, is called arroug, which is of an extraordinary fattening quality, also famous for rendering milk rich and abundant. With need, and their national dish, ousoussou, the bride is literally crammed, and many actually die under the spoon.

It may be said in reply, that the fat of the Tunisian bride is fat; but those who bustle up their daughters for the market, seem to be guilty of a deception as next as is the butcher who blows up his venison.

National Retrenchment.

Mr. Haywood, of N. C. has reported to the Senate a bill cutting down the salaries of the high functionaries of our government. In as far as it relates to Judicial officers, we offer no opinion upon it, for we do not know what salaries would be sufficient to induce the first jurists in the country to accept seats on the Supreme Bench. Let them be high enough for this. As to other officers, we are in favor of the bill, and we hope especially that our Diplomatic allowances will be thoroughly revised. At present, the same salaries are paid to our Ministers at London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Madrid, Mexico, and Rio Janeiro.

This is unwise and unjust: $10,000 a year, would not be too much for London and Paris while $5,000 each would be abundant at other Courts. At present, the salaries and outfits paid to Ministers at the secondary Courts are merely pensions to pauper politicians—generally payments for pliancy in Congress or elsewhere. Let this be reformed.

Mr. Calhoun.—The Madisonian says: We are authorized to say that Mr. Calhoun accepts the State Department, and will be at his post the last of this week. An interval of nine days occurred between the mailing, at this place, of the letter announcing to him his appointment officially, and its receipt. We take pleasure in saying that his acceptance was equally prompt with the tender.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1914.

FOR PRESIDENT.

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

MORE MORMONS.

Elder Wm. Smith, one of the Twelve, has just arrived from the east, on the steamer Charlotte with a company of saints. Elder G. M. Grant, from Philadelphia; Elder R. M. Grant, from Burlington; Elder J. J. Elder Newton and family; Elder P. C. Gibson and family from Philadelphia; Elder T. Hickenlooper and family; Elder Wm. Hickenlooper and family; Elder Wm. Critchlow and family; and two other families from Leechburg, Pa.; and two from Pittsburgh, Pa. Amounting in all to 70 souls, composed this band of saints.

We are happy to say that our well beloved brother William Smith, has returned once more to our goodly city, in first rate health and spirits; the same old champion of the rights of man; "the world for all, and all for the world;" he certainly has a great many Mormon notions in his mind, calculating that unless there is a speedy reform in Christendom, in the governments and morals throughout the earth, the Lord will cut the work short in righteousness. He is the same unyielding advocate for the extension of "Mormonism Unceasing" power, dominion, grace and glory, not only in all this world, but in worlds without end. And with the blessing of God and the saints—may he continue so in company with the servants of the "exalted" till the Morning Stars sing together again at the second creation of the earth.

NEW POST OFFICE.—It will be gratifying to many of our readers to be informed that a Post Office is established in Macedonia in this county. J. E. Johnson Esq. has received the appointment of Post Master.

PUBLIC MEETING.

Yesterday at ten o'clock A.M., a Public Meeting was held in the large room, over Gen. Smith's Store, for the purpose of consulting upon measures for the furtherance of our designs in the next Presidential election.

The meeting was addressed in a very spirited manner by several gentlemen present, setting forth our grievances, our rights, our numbers, and our political influence. From the statements presented, we have no reason to doubt, but that we can bring, independent of any other party, from two, to five hundred thousand voters, into the field. Several gentlemen were nominated to attend to the Baltimore Convention, to make overtures to that body.

It was resolved, that a State convention be held in the city of Nauvoo, on the second day of May next.

Mr. W. W. Phelps, moved that the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Nauvoo Neighbor, with a request that the State Register, Sangamo Journal, and all other papers in the State, publish the same.

JOHN TAYLOR, President,
WM. CLAYTON, Clerk.

It is in contemplation to hold a National convention, in the city of Baltimore, or in some other eastern city, as shall be agreed on.

The following memorial was addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, of the State of Massachusetts, and was kindly received by that honorable body and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE—No. 61.
COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.
MEMORIAL.

To the Honorable the Governor, Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in Legislature assembled.

Your memorialist, a native of the State of Massachusetts, county of Hampshire, and township of Plainfield, is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, and was born on the 7th day of May, A. D. 1796, begs leave most respectfully to represent to your honorable body, that, after breathing the free, elastic air of the land of his nativity, and leaving the winter blasts of the Green Mountains for twenty-one years, during which time the principles of religious liberty began to bud, and the rights of man became deeply rooted in the bosom of your memorialist, he then went forth to the then thinly settled and wilderness part of Ohio, where he remained for about twenty-one years, enduring the hardships of turning the wilderness into fruitful fields, the products of which often help to compose the luxuries of your tables, cheering the hearts of some of the noble sons of '76, as well as those who are my contemporaries in life.

From thence he went to the State of Missouri, where he became an exile, with about twelve or fifteen thousand of his brethren. Not from the birth of our national existence to the year 1820, can the annals of the United States of America be found, to display the character of her noble sons, by telling the blood-chilling tale of assembled mobs, to deprive her citizens of their civil or religious liberties, without their meeting a due denier and punishment for all their crimes. But, alas how changed the scene! In consequence of which, your memorialist has to relate to you the sad tale that, in 1831, a number of respectable families residing in the vicinity of Parkman, my then place of residence, went into the State of Missouri, and, in connection with others from various parts of our country, who were members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, who purchased lands of the general government, in the county of Jackson in said state, and there became lawful residents and voters in that free and independent portion of our country, but, in consequence of an unprecedented mob rising against the Saints, who, after high-handed threats, proceeded to destroy property by demolishing our store and printing press, taking roofs from houses, whipping, tarring and feathering some of our men, shooting others, abusing women and chil-

ren, driving about one hundred of them out on to the bleak prairies, many of whom were barefooted and could be followed by the blood that gushed from their lacerated feet, where they traveled through barbed grass, or upon the sharp stubble of a burnt prairie, for five days without food, when they succeeded in getting across the Missouri river into Clay county, where they were, for a short time, permitted to stay in peace—when, in 1836, threats of violence again began to be made, public meetings to be held, resolutions were passed, and our affairs again assumed a gloomy and a fearful attitude, and vengeance and destruction was threatened; and, as the authorities of Jackson county would not protect us in the enjoyment of our inalienable rights, so it was in this, and, after much violence, we were again driven, suffering the loss of property and enduring the privation of again removing and settling in the new counties of Caldwell and Davis, where there was but few inhabitants, who were either willing to sell out or live in the enjoyment of equal rights with us. Hoping, at least, that we should be permitted to enjoy the rights of American citizens in the last mentioned counties, and still having confidence in our national government, the Church through the assistance of some of their eastern brethren, who lent them funds, again purchased lands, to a considerable amount, of the United States. Although Jackson county was the place of our choice, where also, through the labor of our own hands and the blessing of God, we had raised the earth to yield an abundance to supply our families with the necessary comforts of life; whilst there, yet, while in exile from under the iron hand of oppression, we again commenced building houses and other machinery, for our mutual benefit, quietly tilling our lands to supply our returning wants. The stranger, by passing through the place of our exile, might have laudably boasted of our industry, from the sound of the axe in the woodland, the busy teams on the prairies, the clattering of the hammer and the plane, and hum of wheels. These ought to have been sufficient evidence to the world, that we were lawfully and laudably endeavoring to make our new homes comfortable, if not delightful. In the midst of this scene and bustle, our social hours were not unfrequently turned into mourning, from a recollection of past sufferings, and lost friends through the Jackson and Clay county mobs. The trickling tears on the cheek of the disconsolate widow, and the bawling sobs from a bereaved orphan bawling the loss of a husband or a father—are scenes that are better left than described, and are ever calculated to throw a gloom over all our social circles.

O where! where! is the home of heaven so nobly won by her fathers? First, alas! fled—But we hope not forever. Laudable industry and the blessing of heaven soon caused our farms to present a cheering aspect, which awakened a covetous spirit of envy in the hearts of our enemies, and the cry went forth, if the Mormons (as they called us) were let alone, Caldwell, in five years' time, would be the most wealthy and populous county in the state. Our enemies, (who depended mostly upon the labor of their slaves for their prosperity,) at beholding themselves outdone by the diligence of the hard laboring sons of the Green Mountains, immediately took measures to possess themselves of our lands and effects; and a regular system of mobocracy was entered into, to rid the state of their rivals in prosperity. They formed a formidable band of marauders, under the command of a man by the name of Bogard and others, whose numbers increased until, at length, through falsehood and duplicity, they got the authorities of the state to interfere, when a number of officers were sent, with a large military force, to exterminate us and confiscate our property—and all this by the authority of their most willing mobocrat governor, Lilburn W. Boggs. Plunder, rapine and murder immediately ensued, which would have disgraced a savage war in their wildest state. Men were shot down without provocation; women were insulted and ravished until they died in the hands of their destroyers; children had their brains blown out while playing for their lives; men moving into the county with their families, were shot down their tame, wagons and loaded, taken by the plunderers as booty, and their wives, with their little ones, ordered out of the state forthwith, or suffer death, or had their husbands, leaving them no means of conveyance but their feet, and no means of subsistence but begging. Soldiers of the revolution were slain in the most brutal manner, while pleading for their lives in the name of American citizens; many were thrown into prison, and, after enduring a mock trial that would have disgraced an inquisition, were confined in irons, and remained in prison until they made their escape. In these mock trials, no man was allowed to testify in favor of the Saints; and the trials undoubtedly were designed to make the distant public believe that there was an excuse for all this outrage and violence.

To give your honorable body a correct idea of the origin of those scenes of cruelty and woe, we will here transcribe the preamble to a set of resolutions passed by those plunderers at their first meeting, held in Jackson county, for the purpose of taking measures for the expulsion of our people from that county. It is as follows: "We, the undersigned, citizens of Jackson county, believing that an important crisis is at hand as regards our civil society in consequence of a pretended religious society of people that have and are still settling in our county, styling themselves Mormons; and intending as we do, to rid our society peacefully if we can, forcibly if we must, and believing as we do, that the arm of the civil law does not afford us a guarantee, or at least a sufficient one, against evils which are now inflicted on us, and seen to be increasing by the said religious sect, do it expedient, and of the highest importance, to form ourselves into a company, for the better and easier accomplishment of our purposes, which we deem it almost superfluous to say, is justified as well by the law of nature as by the law of self defence."

Your honorable body will see by the above, that the reasons assigned for the formation of this first company of marauders, was the want of power in the civil law to enable them to carry out the diabolical plottings of their wicked hearts. Hear their own words. "And believing as we do, that the arm of the civil law does not afford us a guarantee, or at least a sufficient one against the evils which are now inflicted on us."

What were the evils complained of? Let their own words give the strange answer; the existence of a religious society among them; a society too, against which, not even the first crime, which the law would recognize as such, could be proved; themselves being judges, while yet their hearts were filled with envy and malice.

If individuals, or even our society as a body, had transgressed the laws, the law was open, and they could have punished the offenders according to law, as easy as to have felt to butchering indiscriminately, men, women, and children. Here let your memorialist ask your honorable body, to ever remember, that it was not the law our enemies sought to magnify and enforce; for no law had been broken, but they proceeded in open violation of, not only the law of the land, but that of nature too.

Hear again the contents of their unlawful preamble. Intending as we do, to rid ourselves of the Mormons, peacefully if we can, forcibly if we must; or this is the import of their diabolical preamble, by the strength of which our people were attacked indiscriminately, their houses rifled, their farms desolated and crops destroyed; men were tied up and whipped until some died in their hands, others to prevent their bows from gushing out, tied handkerchiefs round their bodies, others were shot down, their wives and their children driven from their habitations; houses would be set on fire and consumed, leaving hundreds of women and children nearly naked, in the dead of winter to wander barefooted in the dark hours of the night upon the open fields and prairies, without any bed but the earth, or covering but the heavens. And why all this abuse? I answer, from the very fact that we had broken no law by which they could get the slightest pretext to rid themselves of us peacefully by law. Therefore they betook themselves to spreading falsehoods and slanders, by which they roused others to assist them to accomplish their murderous designs.

Similar outrages were again inflicted upon us in Clay county as was in Jackson county, and the people were again driven and went into Caldwell and Davis counties where lands were again purchased by us of General Government. After remaining about two years in Caldwell and Davis counties, and having by dint of labor raised large crops of grain and other produce, which were ready for harvest, we were followed by the same relentless spirit, and by the hands of the same persecutors, who were among the first to form a company of marauders in Jackson county. The same unhallowed principles were put in operation as was first started in Jackson county; and for the purpose of creating a shadow of a pretext to justify themselves in the eyes of the public, they even went so far as to set fire to their own buildings, and then reported that the Mormons had done so; by which means we were driven into exile in a strange land, though one (to its honor be remembered,) where we found a friendly home. During the whole progress of those scenes of cruelty, our entreaties and petitions were continually made to the authorities of Missouri, for protection and redress. In the name of American citizens, we appealed to their patriotism, their justice, their humanity and to their sacred honor; but they were deaf to our cries and heeded not our petitions. All attempts at protection or redress were unheeded and fruitless. And furthermore, your memorialist has to tell your honorable body that since we have resided in the State of Illinois, the same foul means have been resorted to by the State of Missouri, as was practiced in Jackson and Caldwell counties. In order to prevent their base and unjust proceedings coming to light before an injured public, they are wittingly accusing our citizens, and kidnapping others and dragging them into Missouri; and there, after whipping and insulting them, have cast them into prison and left them to get out as they could. All this without even the form of a trial. Three several warrants have been sent by the governor of Missouri, to the governor of Illinois, demanding the body of Joseph Smith, all of which have been acted on by the legal authorities of Illinois. These warrants were based upon the pretext (though false) that Joseph Smith was accessory to the shooting of L. W. Boggs. Would it not be well for Missouri to strike at the root of the matter, and find out justice to some of the murderers of our saints. Here I have to tell your honorable body that the before mentioned Bogard, a Methodist preacher, who was one of the leading men in the mob, has since murdered one of their own clan, and to escape the hand of justice has fled to Texas. Therefore, it would not be unreasonable, to suppose that governor Boggs was shot by one of the same class of fiendish villains, who yet remain in their midst.

The United States are now reaping the benefits of the money paid into her treasury by us, for those lands which we have been so unjustly driven from; and those lands are still held from us by the state of Missouri; from whose hands we have received no remuneration and from whom we can obtain no redress. These are the wrongs of which your memorialist complains; wrongs which are in open violation to the laws of the whole civilized world. The United States are bound by the constitution to give to each state a republican form of government, and to suppress insurrection and rebellion. Are not these outrages here portrayed before you, insurrection and rebellion? Let your honorable body give the answer. Where is that action to be found, so stupid to her welfare, so blind to her interest, as to suffer her laws thus to be trampled upon, without making a manly attempt to wipe the bloody stain from her escutcheon? If such a nation is now to be found in existence, she no longer deserves to have her name recorded among the nations of the earth, lest her unborn sons be made to blush at the history of her crimes. Let me further invite the attention of your honorable body to the disgraceful fact, that the very characters who committed all the above described outrages, were upheld and paid off by the executive of the state; and at the same time that they committed those outrages, they declared that they were the militia, and that they were called out to enforce the laws and see that they were kept. Under this cover, they put at defiance both the laws of God and man, and with worse than a savage cruelty, committed theft, violence, robbery, rape and murder! Is it a republican form of government where such a blood-chilling tragedy as this, is acted in the face and eyes of all the authorities of this nation, and no redress to be had? Let your honorable body give the answer. Is it a fact that in this boasted land of liberty, that a man's crimes, either pretended or real, are sufficient to subject his bosom companion to insult, his daughters to rape, himself and family to starvation and exile? Let it be answered by every virtuous man and woman in letters of gold, big with meaning, No! Yet all these outrages have been committed upon us without there being the first crime proved against us and yet after repeated application to the authorities of Missouri, for redress, we can obtain none. Then to say the least, had the not ought to be made to feel the chastening hand of a parent nation, and as far as in her power, be made to restore to us, not only our rights and property, but damages for all the injury she has done us. This is our claim, and a just one too.

To whom then shall your memorialist look for redress of wrongs committed upon himself and his brethren in tribulation? And where can he look for human assistance with more confidence than to the people of his native state? No where! Then to your honorable body I appeal in the name of an American citizen, and in behalf of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, for redress of our wrongs; and through you to the general government. To you he has told his wrongs and that of his brethren, and in confidence he looks to the patriots of Massachusetts, the state of his nativity, and the land of the stipules of his ancestors. On yonder Green Mountain, in the town of Plainfield, lies the ashes of my father, who labored and fought to gain the liberties you now enjoy; he filled a place in the ranks of the army at the critical hour of the taking of Burgoyne; and shall his spirit be wounded at beholding the sons of Columbia in exile, and the banner of liberty stamped in the dust, and nothing done by the patriots of Massachusetts in behalf of suffering innocents? Tell it not in the streets of the valley, publish it not in the high ways of the Green Mountains, lest the wicked hear the sound thereof, lest the daughters of Missouri laugh at your weakness. Yes, your memorialist tells you, that he will tell his wrongs and that of his brethren in Massachusetts, I will publish them in the streets of the valley, until the round thereof reaches to her mountain tops; that her statesmen may plead the cause of suffering innocents in the legislative halls of our nation; her patriotic sons, stimulated by her fair daughters, raise their voices and cease not until the cadence of innocence shall be heard, and our most sacred rights restored. As one of the native sons of Massachusetts, I ask your honorable body, in the name of all the constitutional rights of man, to instruct the whole delegation of Massachusetts, in Congress, to use all lawful and constitutional means to obtain for us a redress of all our wrongs and losses. Believing, as your memorialist does, that our case comes within the power of the general government, and that they are bound, not only by every principle of justice, but also by law, to see that justice is meted out to every son and daughter of our national republic. Weak indeed must have been the capacity of statesmen, if they framed and accepted a constitution that made no provision for self defence. Is it a fact that our laws have become so weak, our statesmen so stupid to the existence of our nation, that American citizens can be driven from lands and enjoyments guaranteed to them by the government, and she has no power to redress their wrongs? Tell it not in the streets of Lexington, publish it in the ships of Boston, lest it is wafted by the western breeze till it salutes the tyrant's ear, and causes the daughters of Columbia to weep. If, indeed, there remains no means of redress for us, well may the despotic powers of Europe laugh and rejoice in their hearts, in the anticipation of beholding the United States of America fall and crumble to atoms beneath its ponderous weight. If this be the case, come on then ye prowling beasts and feathered fowl, prepare to glut yourselves upon the flesh of the fair sons and daughters of Columbia's soil; fallen by her own depravity, and slain by wicked aspirants and robbers from all nations. But I hope better things than those from your honorable body; yet certain causes will produce certain effects. If America refuses to punish robbers and murderers, she opens a door for a tenfold ingress of the same. From a recollection of some of the facts contained in the history of his native state, your memorialist feels a confidence in making his appeal to your honorable body, the executive of Massachusetts, a state whose people are noted in the annals of history, and one famed for her zeal in the cause of civil and religious liberty, as well as her firmness in breaking the tyrant's chain.

Her soil was the cradle of the first religious society in New England, who were exiles from Europe, as we now are from Missouri. She can boast of being the first to rise in virtuous indignation against the unjust principle of taxation without representation, when her bold sons hurled the tyrant's tea by the board, and defied the despotic power. The blood of her sons was the first to flow in the support of those principles that gave birth to our national existence. At Lexington, in defiance of the tyrant's laws, and fearless of her power, her citizens in just indignation rallied around the murderous clans, and in firmness of soul, dared to redress the wrongs of her bleeding sons, and in the greatness of their philanthropy, declared that the rights of man should be sacred, and that her land should be free; an asylum for the oppressed, a land of liberty for the tyrant's slave. Yes, on the ever memorable 19th of April, A. D. 1775, flowed the first blood that gave birth to our national independence. It was then the blood of the martyred sons of Massachusetts, by the hand of tyranny, first cried from the ground for the vengeance of an offended God and suffering innocents, to be poured upon the murderous band. (Nor did the mingled groans of the dying, the wailings of the orphan, the flowing tears of the bereaved parent, and the deeper moans of the disconsolate widow, but barely have time to reach the heavens, until a just retribution of an offended God was poured upon the offenders, through the valor of the patriotic sons of my native state. Fallen indeed, must be the sons of those martyrs and statesmen of 1775 and '76, if their minds are so degenerated that they have not independence of soul, sufficient to throw their influence into the legislative hall of our nation, in support of the rights of suffering innocents, such as your memorialist has here laid before your honorable body. Honorable regard for the character of my native state forbids the thought. Confident, then, that the pure principles by which our forefathers were actuated, still linger in the bosoms of their sons, and need only be awakened in the hearts of your honorable body by the tale of woe here laid before you.

Your memorialist comes to your honorable body, to tell you that the civil and religious liberties sought for and found by the pilgrims on Plymouth rock, and maintained by the blood of our fathers, have been sacrificed by relentless tyrants, upon the altar of jealousy. He comes to tell you, like Babylon of old, our nation is assailed by the jealous tyrant of mankind at one end; and that your assistance is wanted in the national hall, in defence of the temple of freedom, erected by your fathers. He comes to tell your honorable body, that the sons of his native state are denied the liberty of conscience and the right of protection under the wide-spread wings of our national escutcheon, and that the blood of the patriotic heroes of the revolution who have been slain in Missouri for enjoying their religious rights, the boon of heaven to man, is crying from the ground; and with the dying groans of the females and infant innocents, are ascending with the prayers of the widows of the patriots of the revolution, into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Yes, their blood, their groans, their tears and the prayers of suffering innocents, together with the prayers of your memorialist, are now crying in the ears of your honorable body, through this, my silent messenger, saying "redress!" redress the wrongs of your memorialist, and those of his brethren, and wipe disgrace from the stained banner of our national republic; and perpetuate the glorious laurels so nobly won by our native state, when on Bunker's Hill, our fathers in unequal combat first sustained the shock, and dared assert the rights of man amidst the clatter of flashing steel, the blaze of arms, and the more deep-toned thunder of the tyrant's cannon. May the departed spirits of the brave Warren and his associates, whisper in the ears of your honorable body, saying, redress the wrongs of the innocent; and maintain by legislation, those rights of man so dearly bought by our blood that flowed on Bunker's height. Let not the names of a Hancock and Adams, written by their own hands, and attached to the declaration of independence, be obliterated or dimmed by the weakness or timidity of the sons of Massachusetts.

Under all these circumstances your memorialist prays to be heard by your honorable body, touching all the matters of his memorial; saying to you, that except our prayers are heard, our rights restored and maintained, and ample redress made, as far as it can be by the legislative powers of the United States of America, wrath of an offended God will be poured out upon the whole nation; and her statesmen and legislators shall be awakened from their dreams, by a voice in their ears, saying that art no longer worthy to wield the destinies of the brave, noble, patriotic and virtuous sons and daughters of Columbia's soil.

And as in duty bound your memorialist will ever pray,
NOAH PACKARD,
RUSSELL, Mass., March 5, 1844.

Joe Smith the Mormon Prophet, in a work which he has recently published entitled, "Views of the powers and policy of the government of the United States, holds forth in the following strain:—

"Now, oh people! people! turn unto the Lord and live; and reform this nation. Frustrate the designs of wicked men. Reduce Congress one half. Two Senators from a state and two members to a million of population, will do more business than the army that now occupy the halls of the National Assembly. Pay them two dollars and their board per diem (except Sunday's) that is more than the farmer gets, and he lives more honestly. Curtail the offices of government in pay, number, and power; for the Philistine lords have shorn our nation of its goodly locks in the lap of Delilah."

There are now over thirty six hundred miles of Railroad in operation in the U. States. In 1820, an enterprising gentleman of this city, Hon Wm. Foster, invited several capitalists to meet at his office, to take into consideration the expediency of constructing a railroad from here to Providence, a distance of only forty-two miles. Only one person attended as desired, and he declared the project a wild one. At this moment, seven hundred and twenty miles of railroad, terminate in the "city of notions," and we shall shortly have many miles more. What a mighty change in fifteen years.

The grand total of the Royal expenditure from the accession of George 3d to the death of George 4th was the enormous sum of 92,000,807, or four hundred millions of dollars!

The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Express says: "I am happy to believe, this evening, that the present Senate would not only ratify any treaty for the annexation of Texas, which might be submitted by Mr. Tyler, but to believe that if consulted to give an opinion as to the motive of the proposed annexation, or the morality of the means used to obtain it, that they would rebuke the conduct of the Chief Magistrate as one of unparalleled audacity."

No!—not quite that!—An old bachelor in Congress is urging in the tariff compromise that there shall be a tax on bran and feathers! And the way some of the dear ladies are getting their backs, up at this monstrous interference in their articles of form and fashion, is a caution!

Annexation of Texas.—Col. R. M. Johnson, Ex-Vice President, says—I am in favor of the annexation on equal ground, with the original States; when it shall be in accordance with the sentiments and wishes of a majority of the people of the U. States, and the people of that Territory consenting. The constitutional question was settled when Louisiana was purchased; and in addition to this, Texas was a part of that purchase.

Female Beauty.—That is not the most perfect beauty which in public would attract the greatest observation, nor even that which the statuary would admit to be a faultless piece of clay, kneaded up with blood. But that is true beauty which has not only a substance, but a spirit; a beauty that we must intimately know, justly to appreciate; beauty lighted up in conversation, where the mind shines as it were through its casement; where in the language of the poet, the eloquent blood spoke in her cheeks, and so distinctly wrought, that we might almost say her body thought. An order and a mode of beauty which, the more we know, the more we accuse ourselves to not having before discovered those thousand graces which bespeak that their owner has a soul. This is that beauty that never eludes, possessing charms as resistless as the fascinating Egyptian, for which Antony wisely paid the bubble of the world—a beauty like the rising of his own Italian suns, always enchanting, never the same.

Mr. Calhoun has accepted the appointment of Secretary of State; with the understanding that he will resign as soon as the Texas and Oregon questions are disposed of.

An Extract.—But thither daily, in rain or sunshine, came the solitary lover, as a bird that seek its young in the deserted nest; and again he haunted the spot where he strayed with the list, again and again murmured his passionate vows beneath the fast fading limes. Are those vows destined to be ratified or annulled? Will the absent forget, or the lingerer be consoled? Had the characters of that young romance been lightly stamped on the fancy, where, once obliterated, they are erased forever, or were they graven deep in those tablets, where the writing, even when invisible, exists still, and revives, sweet, letter, by letter, when the light and warmth borrowed from the one bright presence are applied to these faithful records? There is but one wizard to disclose that secret, as all others; the old grave-diggers, whose church yard is the earth; whose trade is to find burial places for passion that seemed immortal; disintering the ashes of some long-crumbing memory, to hollow out the dark bed of some new perished hope. He who determines all things, and prophecies none; for his oracles are uncomprehended till the doom is sealed. He who in the bloom of the fairest affection, detects the hectic that consumes it, and while the hymn rings at the altar, marks with his joyless eye, the grave for the bridal vow. Wherever is the sepulchre, there is the temple, oh melancholy.—But Great Discoveries.—Great and important discoveries are seldom made without long preparation; they have often lain smouldering through quiet ages, till the breath of mind, or perhaps of chance, has fanned the glimmering fire into a flame, and has given light to the universe. When we look upon a flower, we can go back to the stem? the root buried in the ground, and to the seed which contained the future plant in its dark bosom. And shall not all things in the earth, tend to a like unfolding?—Strife and Peace, by F. Bismarck.

Silence.—All great things are born of silence. The fury indeed, of destructive passion may start up in the hot conflict of life and go forth with tumultuous delirium. But all beneficent and creative power gathers itself together in silence, ere it issues out in might. Force itself, indeed, is naturally silent and only makes itself heard, if at all when it strikes upon obstructions, to here them away, as it returns to equilibrium again. The very hurricane that roars over land and ocean, flits noiselessly through spaces where nothing meets it. The blessed sunshine says nothing, as it warms the vernal earth; tempts out the tender grass; and decks the field and forest in their glory. Silence came before creation, and the heavens were spread without a word; Christ was born at dead of night; and, though there has been no power like his! he did not strive nor try neither was his voice heard in the streets. Nowhere can you find any beautiful work, any durable endeavor, that was not matured in long and patience silence, ere it spoke out in its accomplishment.—Rev. James Martineau a Unitarian.

Adultery worse than Sheepstealing.—On one occasion he found the bench were "sinners sale" occupied by an Irish gentleman, who had destroyed the domestic felicity of the village blacksmith, by estranging the affections of his trusty spouse, and hence had drawn upon himself the awful displeasure of the kirk. Presently another offender, attended by an old woman, modestly advanced and deposited his person on the cuttle stool. The minister had not yet appeared, and the old lady, who turned out to be the mother of the second delinquent, felt a womanly curiosity to ascertain who might be the fellow sinner who had made a settlement upon the bench with Master Jock. 'Heigh ho, am sorry till see ye here,' said the goodwife, opening the conversation. 'Then, upon my soul,' responded the gay deceiver, 'I'm sorer to see myself here. An' what might ye have done, young man, to bring ye till this place or shame?' 'A'rah, the devil a thing I did,' returned the Irishman, 'that should cause me to be stuck on an old stool, and made a world's wonder of, but show a little civility to a blacksmith's wife when her husband was from home.' 'Och, Och!' groaned the old lady, 'I comprehend it.' You unfortunate man, ye have breckit the seventh command. Gude guide us! but the devil maun have been busy wi' ye. I wadna hurt ye, feelins for a' that, if I could help it; but—sit a wee bit farther up—when the minister's rebukin' ye, some folk might think it was my Jock he was spoken at—and he, put in a word, is only on the stool for simple sheepstealing.'—Maxwell's Wanderings.

Desperate Remedy for a Desperate Disease.—Dr. Hind was called on to visit a hypochondriac patient, who fancied she had swallowed a mouse. On his entering the room the lady exclaimed, 'Dear doctor I am so glad to see you—I am in such distress—such pain! Oh, doctor! I have swallowed a mouse! I swallowed—non-sense! replied the doctor, in his mild and pleasant manner. 'Oh, no doctor, said the patient, 'it is no nonsense—it is a mouse—a live mouse; he ran down my mouth open, and I feel him now croaking about my stomach, and trying to gnaw out. Oh doctor, do prescribe something quick, or I shall die!' 'Prescribe?' said the doctor, 'yes, I will prescribe something that will cure you in a minute.' 'What is it doctor? what is it? I'll take anything you order.' 'Well then, my dear madam, swallow a cat if that don't cure you, nothing will.' The prescription was effectual.—Manchester (Eng.) Advertiser.

Strong Metaphor.—Two brothers recently from the old country via Halifax, were lately walking up the Worcester Railroad, and their curiosity was somewhat astonished by the iron tracks, but soon the cars hove in sight, and the following dialogue took place:

Michael:—Och, brother, d'ye see that queer creature coming?
Patrick:—Troth ah! I do. What, in the devil and his grandmother does it mane?
Michael:—Faith, an' it's not me that is to tell ye, but an' ye don't stand out of the way, ye'll hear quite satisfactory, I'm thinking. Don't ye mind how hard he breathes—he must have been running right tight for a long space.—
[The car whizzed by.]

Patrick:—Och, Mike, we're completely lost; for by my mother's milk, it is like Hell in harness, and just the sort of a coach I once dreamt the old devil took the morning air in!

In an anecdote of Kent it is related that one Harwood had two daughters by his first wife, of whom the eldest was married to John Cusick the son, and the youngest to John Cusick the father. This Cusick the father had a daughter, by his first wife, whom old Harwood married, and by her had a son; with the exception of the former wife of old Cusick, all these persons were living at Faversham in February 1850, and his second wife could say as follows:—

My father is my son, and
My sister is my daughter,
I'm mother's mother;
I'm grandmother to my brother

TO PREVENT MOULDING IN BOOKS. INK, PASTE AND LEATHER.—Collectors of books will not be sorry to learn that a few drops of oil of lavender will ensure their libraries from this pest. A single drop of the same oil will prevent a pint of ink from moulding for any length of time. Paste may be kept from mould entirely by this addition; and leather is also effectually secured from injury by the same agency.

The way to settle difficulties.—Two neighbors (who were brothers by marriage) had a difficulty respecting their partition fence. Although they had mutually erected a substantial fence four and one-half feet in height on the line separating the sheep pasture of one from the grain field of the other, yet the lambs would creep through the crevices and destroy the grain.

Each asserted it to be the duty of the other to think the fence—after the usual preliminaries of demands, refusals, threats, challenges, and mutual recrimination, they resolved to try the glorious uncertainty of the law—they were, however, persuaded by their friends, to the more amicable mode of submitting the defence to the final determination of a very worthy and intelligent neighbor, who was forthwith conducted to the scene of trouble, and in full view of the premises; each party, in a speech of some length, asserted his rights, and set forth the law and the facts, at conclusion of which the arbitrator very gravely remarked:—

'Gentlemen, the case involves questions of great nicety and importance, not only to the parties in interest, but to the community at large, and it is my desire to take suitable time for deliberation, and also, for advisement with those who are learned in the law, and most expert in the customs of good neighbors; in the meantime, however, I will just clap a billet or two of wood into the sheep holes,' and in ten minutes time, with his hands, he effectually closed every gap.

The parties silently retired, each evidently heartily ashamed of his own folly and obstinacy. The umpire has never been called upon to pronounce final judgment in the case—so the law remains unsettled unto this day.—Vermont Patriot.

Agricultural.

Oil from Corn.—There was placed upon our desk the night before last, a lamp filled with Corn Oil, manufactured in this county by Mr. W. H. Weston, at a place known as Cold Water. It is a beautiful oil, of about the consistence of sperm or hard oil, without the smoky which usually attends vegetable oils.

We learn that the manufacturer will shortly be able to bleach it, which will make it more clear and white, and doubtless add to the purity and brilliancy of the light. We are informed that it will not congeal in the coldest weather. We learn that it can be furnished for 75 cents per gallon. As it is a new and valuable addition to our manufactures, we trust it will receive the encouragement it merits. [St. Louis Republican.]

Spring Wheat.—There has been, and in some sections of the West, there still exists a strong prejudice against spring wheat. And as I think it has arisen in consequence of errors committed in the management of it. I beg leave to speak a few words in its favor, and as a set off I will endeavor to point out some of the errors and give the remedy; so far as my experience or observation will enable me.

First a good article is generally preferred to fall wheat for bread by those who have tried it.

Second, with the same labor bestowed, it will as a general rule yield more than winter wheat.

Third, its being sown in the spring, farmers can raise more wheat with the same amount of help than they could if dependent entirely upon a winter crop.

The same argument will also apply in regard to harvesting, as the time of ripening is a little later. The price of a good article is but little less than full wheat. Now for the errors.

First, in general the ground is not properly prepared. It should be plowed in the fall. I raised the past season 25 bushels to the acre on ground thus prepared, without doing anything to it again but harrowing. I had plowed it again in the spring, I am confident I should have obtained 35 bushels. On land that was not fall plowed, I obtained but 20 bushels per acre.

Second the seed is not well prepared. It should be washed in brine, and then as strong a corrosive applied as the wheat will bear without injuring it, in order to free it from smut.

One of my neighbors, Mr. I. Haskell, pursued the following method with three different parcels.

First washed in water and then in strong ley. Second, washed in ley alone. Third, sowed without washing.

The result was, that the first had no smut to injure it the second had but little, but more than the first; the third was about one fourth smut.

The wheat spoken of above, was the red chaff ball, a very handsome wheat, more nearly resembling winter than any variety I have seen; but I think more liable to injury by smut than the Siberian (white chaff bearded) or the white chaff ball. There is another thing worthy of notice in relation to the parcels washed in ley—there was a marked difference in its favor over the unwashed through every stage of its growth, and it yielded more per acre. The wheat should not remain in the ley but a few minutes. If it be washed in brine and dried with lime, it should be left in bulk thirty six hours after the time is sifted on before sowing.

Error third, there is not sufficient quantity of seed sown to the acre. Two bushels is little enough if sown as early as possible in the spring, more is required if it be sown late.

Reason: Grain sown thin on our rich lands will spread or tiller, and while occupied in this operation it loses much valuable time. And when it does commence shooting upward, the season is so far advanced that it grows very rapidly; the straw, rank but weak, is consequently liable to rust, the heads will not be of a uniform size, those produced by the last formed shoots being smaller in consequence of the main shoots overtopping them, and taking a larger share of nourishment both from the root and atmosphere.

On the contrary, when grain is sown thick it occupies but little time in tillering, and before the season is so far advanced as to cause a rapid growth, it acquires a hardiness or firmness in all its qualities that it does not lose in the latter stage of its growth. From an experiment made last spring, I am inclined to believe that three bushels is safer than less. I sowed that quantity on one land through the middle of a field, and at harvest the advantage was clearly on the side of the side sown. The straw was not so tall as that on either side where two bushels to the acre had been sown, but it was bright and stood very thick on the ground, well headed, a plumb round berry, and ripened several days earlier than any other part of the field. And this last is a fact worthy of being taken into consideration. Every farmer of any experience knows that the earlier grain comes to maturity the less liable it is to rust. And there is another fact that probably all have observed, which is that if there be spots in the field but partially seeded, or from any cause the grain has been killed out, blight or rust will be found in those spots if it be found any where in the field.

This I think is good evidence in favor of thick seeding; for in these thinly seeded places the plant has room to spread or tiller, and is thus occupied while the other parts of the field are going on to maturity.

But to conclude; prepare your ground well, wash your seed in brine and lime it, or soak it in ley, and sow it early and plenty of it; and my word for it, you will make it a part of your crop ever afterwards. There is no fog or smoke about it, but all plain sailing.

THE SWEET POTATOE. In one of the numbers of the Miscellaneous, published about a year ago, I saw an article on the culture of Sweet Potatoes, from the pen of Mr. McKinley, of Oglethorpe county, which seemed to me to point out the best method of raising that article, and I resolved to test the plan by experiment.

Accordingly early in the spring I prepared my ground by deep and thorough ploughing, and continued at every suitable opportunity to plough it until the season should suit for transplanting my slips. This did not occur until about the 10th June—at which time I set them out.

The mode which I adopted was as follows: I first laid off my ground by running furrows with a long wide shovel four feet apart, then followed each furrow with a long scotch, and that by a long coultter. This done, a furrow on either side of the one laid off was run in the same way—first the shovel, then the coultter, then the coultter. The bed so prepared, I smoothed off with a hoe, leaving it flat on top, and but slightly elevated above the surrounding surface. In the centre of this, fifteen inches apart, I then planted my slips; they grew off remarkably well, scarcely one dying. The cultivation was such, as I gave my corn only there was was but two ploughings and two hoeings, and I was careful that not a vine should be covered up, or broken off.

The soil in which they were planted was light and sandy, not rich, and the yield one hundred and seventy bushels from 68-100 of an acre. The potatoes were Yams of the ordinary kind, and such as I had cultivated in the old way for several years, and were, on the average, doubly as large as I had ever raised before. The yield from the same quantity of land was nearly double.

They were dug soon after the first frost, when the vines were partially killed and the ground dry, when I found the soil in which they grew, as light and mellow as the day they were planted. I put them up in a house, prepared for the purpose under my dwelling, covering them with dry sand, and none have rotted except those that were injured in digging, and those only before they were housed.

I am so much pleased with my Success last year that I shall try the same plan again this year being careful as I then was, to select the largest potatoes for seed, believing that potatoes, as well as every other plant, must, degenerate as long as the smallest and most inferior seed is used in planting. [Prairie Farmer.]

SALT A PREVENTATIVE OF SMUT. To the Editor of the Southern Planter:

Sir: In perusing the pages of your excellent journal, I find salt recommended as a fertilizer; although my experience with this mineral is very limited, still such as it is, I have determined to give it to you.

A few years since my crop of wheat was so badly injured by the smut, that I determined I would not use it for seed, and I, therefore, purchased from a neighbor a few bushels that was clean and good. I found, however, that I had not near enough to finish my crop, and having heard that salt sowed with wheat would prevent the smut, I resolved to make the experiment.

Accordingly, I took my smutty wheat and washed it, and mixed with it, while it was yet wet, about a quart of salt to each half bushel; and with it finished sowing my crop.

When I harvested the crop, I found the wheat purchased of my neighbor much injured by the smut, but my salted wheat was entirely free from this disease, and so superior in quantity and quality, that I believe if I had let alone my neighbor's clean wheat, and sowed my whole crop of my own smutty wheat, thus prepared, I should have made one hundred bushels more than I did.

In the spring of 1842, I tried a similar experiment on a few bushels of smooth chaff spring wheat, which was much affected with the smut. I washed and mixed as above, about a quart to the half bushel, and sowed it by the side of the same wheat without this preparation. My salted wheat grew about six inches higher than the other, and yielded me twenty bushels to one seeded; whilst the other did not yield half that quantity.

Your obedient servant,

A. LEE.

ON RIPE BREAD.

Mr. Printer: I wonder you do not often tell the farmers and planters how much they would gain, by using light bread two or three days old, instead of fresh from the oven.

Doctor Mason, who studied in France and Edinburgh, and has been a good deal with the Yankees, told my husband, (John Dumpling), six years ago, that in England and the North, they never use bread till two days at least after it is baked; and he says, that is the reason why their women (if they don't lace tight, or dissipate too much,) have blooming cheeks for so many years longer than we have. John and I agreed to try it; and upon my word and honor, the Doctor told the truth. We both are cured of ailments we used to have, something like dyspepsia; and the little dumplings have rosier faces and healthier stomachs than any children in the neighborhood. I have no doubt, as Mr. M. says, that more than half the sorrow, weather-beaten looks of our Virginia ladies, who generally seem ten years older than they are, is owing to the unwholesome, hot bread they eat three times a day.

When bread comes out of the oven, it is full of a bad sort of air—carbon, I think they call it, or carbonic acid gas. Put it in a clean cupbaid or press, in a clean room, and it parts with that gas, and takes in a wholesome sort, which they call oxygen, which they tell me is the purest and nourishingest part of the air that we breathe. When the impure gas has been so changed to the pure sort, the bread is ripe, and fit to eat. On a fair trial, any body will find ripe bread sweeter and better tasted than unripe.

It can't be eaten quite so fast; and less of it will satisfy the appetite, which is another reason why it is healthier—in addition to its being more digestible.

Still another reason in favor of ripe bread is, that you may always have it well risen; because you may wait for it to rise, half a day if necessary, which you cannot do, when the loaf is to be baked in a hurry for breakfast.

Ripe bread is known to go so much further than fresh, that (Doctor Mason says) in a great famine once, in London, the bakers were ordered not to sell any bread under three days old.

Your friend,
DOROTHY DUMPLING.

Louis, November, 1843.

Manuring Strawberries.—There appears an undue fear of manuring strawberries. I have read somewhere that all plants that throw out suckers or runners rapidly deteriorate the soil, and that a power of escape to new ground is given by the runners. If this is correct, it is a good reason for the good results I have often seen of manure. How rarely, except when strawberries are grown for profit, do we see room enough given.

Beds of strawberries are objectionable for this reason, and it is this cause rather than manure that leaves are more abundant than fruit. I have tried and proved this. Where strawberries are grown for profit, (that is, grown at all in the true sense,) they should be planted in rows—the large sorts not less than 30 inches in the row, and 15 inches from plant to plant, and no runners suffered to remain. By these means, with deep trenching and early planting, any sort worth cultivating may be grown large and abundantly.—[Amer. Agriculturalist.]

For the Neighbor.
Mr. Editor, Sir,

Publicity to the following announcement, will confer a favor on your humble servant.

JOSEPH YOUNG.

Some months since, I was walking on the margin of the river, and met Mr. William Nicawanger, whom I reminded of an old promise he had made me for some time, which he instantly renewed, by saying he "would fetch me some next week, if he was alive." This he twice repeated.

What may I expect sir, if you do not fetch it? I said.

"That I am dead!" Was his reply. Shall I publish you, said I, if you do not bring it?

"Yes Sir, if you please," said he. I told him I would. The time did not come.

I hasten therefore to inform you, that Mr. Wm. Nicawanger is dead! Good speed attend him on his tour to the next world; and, as he doubtless will suspend all the business of time burning and grocery keeping; it is hoped he may have a chance to pause and reflect upon the principles and worth of truth.

Will some of Mr. Nicawanger's friends who may be alive, have the goodness to inform the public who his Executors are, that his honest creditors may get their last dues.

OTTAWA INDIANS.

The following petition, addressed to the Legislature, by the Indians of LaPere Croche, is worthy of preservation in our columns. It has thirty-six Indian signatures, and purports to have been signed in public council at the Little Traverse Bay, on the 4th of December, 1843.

To the Hon. the Legislature of the State of Michigan, now convened at Detroit.

This petition of the Ottawa Indians, residing at LaPere Croche, on the north-west extremity of the Southern Peninsula humbly sheweth, That your petitioners are most anxious to enjoy the rights and privileges of American citizenship. That such should be our wish—our prayer—the object of our constant solicitude, and of trembling yet enduring hopefulness, is a natural and becoming tribute to the common feelings of humanity—to the love of home, and the love of country, which we share in common with our brethren.

The red men are strangers—not in a strange land where the bright streams of memory mingle with the dark waters of their sorrows—but strangers in their own land—the homes of their childhood, the burial ground of their race.

Your petitioners are few in number—the small remnant of a once powerful nation, occupying a sequestered bay, that opens into Lake Michigan on the east.—Their manners, informed by civilization, and ameliorated by Christianity, disqualify them for the rude and unskilled habits of their natural condition. They have erected comfortable dwellings, in imitation of the white man, and are maintaining their families by cultivating the soil. The spell of home is strong upon them.—They love the forests and the streams where they were born; the earth which sleeps upon the bodies of their sires; and the music of the great lake upon their shores.

In the strong spirit of their hopes, they pray their brethren to join with them in supplicating their common Father to extend his wings over their little band, and gather them also among his children.

They ask it of your justice; for you have the homes which once were theirs, and have grown rich with the heritage of their fathers. They implore it of your mercy; for their old men are now feeble, and their women and children tremble to go forth in a strange land among the enemies of their tribe.

They entreat it by the ties of their common humanity—by the pledges of their helplessness by their sorrowful past and their foreboding future.

They believe that their Great Father will listen to your voices and suffer them to live and die among the spirits of their kindred. And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.—Detroit Adc.

New Antiseptic.—It is stated from Vienna that the Abbe Baldicconi, of the Museum of Natural History of that city, has composed a solution of sal ammoniac and corrosive sublimate, which has the effect of giving to articles immersed in it the hardness of stone, without injury to their natural color. Even the flesh of animals thus treated acquires this hardness, and gives out a metallic sound when struck.

Possibly this must be the same art possessed by the late Signor Staccato of Tuscany, mentioned by Dr. Mott and other tourists as a marvellous and almost incredible process by which he could petrify every animal substance, and had actually made a mosaic work centre table, composed of different pieces of various parts of the human body—the liver, heart, lungs, &c. Staccato died without divulging the chemical discovery, and probably the German Abbe may have hit upon the same process. Dr. Mott observes, (speaking of Staccato), "that this extraordinary man must have inherited the magic shield of Pegasus, which, with the snaky tresses of the Gorgon Medusa's head, enabled him to convert every thing he touched into stone."—Telegraph.

Destructive fire in Manchester.—The most extensive and destructive conflagration with which Manchester has been visited for many years past, took place on the 29th.

At the lowest computation, including both the buildings and the stocks which have been consumed, there cannot be a less amount of property destroyed than to the extent of 7100,000. Indeed we fear this sum will be much under the amount, for we have heard of three or four firms who are said to be insured to nearly that amount.

Love your Enemies.—A pious old gentleman, while delivering a parental lecture to his son, who had contracted intemperate habits, remarked, that ardent spirits was a great enemy to mankind. "Well Father," replied the son, "do you not know that the scriptures say we must love our enemies?"

North Carolina Gold. The Raleigh Star says that in the gold mine near Lincolnton, several large lumps have recently been found, one weighing 267 dwts., and several others weighing as follows: 190, 151, 107, 87, 60 dwts. A new mine has been discovered in Randolph County, which promises an extraordinary yield of the precious metal.

You find if you don't behave, yourself. I'll give you a good whipping.

"Well, ma, I wish you would; for you have never given me any licking" yet that I called good!

The "Big Gun" which exploded on board the steamship Princeton was fifteen feet long. She weighed ten tons, her bore was twelve inches, and the ball discharged from it weighed two hundred and thirty pounds.

THE FIVE DOLLAR BILL.

BY PROFESSOR INGRAM.

Sir, if you please, boss would like you to pay this little bill to-day, said the tenth time, a half grown boy in a dirty jacket to a lawyer in his office.

The attorney at length turned round and stared the boy full in the face, as if he had been some newly discovered specimen of zoology. He gave a long whistle, thrust his index finger first into one pocket, and then into another of his black cloth vest, and then gave another long whistle, and completed his stare at the boy's face.

Ho, la, hum! that bill eh? and the legal gentleman, extending the tips of his fingers towards the well worn bit of paper, and daintily opening it, looked at its contents. (Hum! for capping and heel-tapping, six shillings—for foxing, ten and sixpence, and other sundries, eh? repeated the man of the briefs.)

Yes, sir, this is the nineteenth time I have come for it, and I intend to knock off at twenty, and call it half a day.

You're an impudent boy.

I always impudent to lawyers, coz I can't help it—it's catchin'.

You've got your eye teeth cut, I see.

That's what boss sent me for instead of the 'prentices as was getting their cut. I cut him at nine months' old with a hand saw. Boss says if you don't pay that bill he'll sue you!

Sue me! I'm a lawyer!

No matter for that. Lawyer or no lawyer, boss declares he'll do it—so fork the money over!

Declares he will sue me!

As sure as there's any other lawyer in Vindexy.

That wouldn't be bad.

Wouldn't it?

Silence! you vagabond! I suppose I must pay this, muttered the attorney to himself. It's not my practice to pay these small bills. What is a lawyer's profession good for, if he can't get clear of paying his own bills? He'll sue me!

'Tis just five dollars! It comes hard, and he don't want the money! His boy could have earned it, in the time he has been sending him to me to dun for it. So your master will sue for it if it don't pay!

He says he will do it, and charge you a new pair of shoes for me.

Harkee. I can't pay to-day; and so, if your boss will sue, just be so kind as to ask him to employ me as his attorney.

Loaf!

Yes, I'll issue the writ, have it served, and then you see I shall put the costs into my own pocket instead of seeing them go into another lawyer's. So you see if I have to pay the bill, I'll make the costs Capital ideal!

The boy scratched his head awhile to comprehend this 'capital idea,' and then shook his head doubtfully. I can't know about this; it looks tricky. I'll ask boss, though, if as how you won't pay it no how without being sued.

I'd rather be sued, if he'll employ me, boy.

But who's to pay the costs—the boss?

The lawyer looked all at once very serious, and gave another of those long whistles peculiar to him.

Well, I am a sensible man, truly. My anxiety to get the costs of suit blinded me to the fact that they were to come out of my own pockets before they could be safely put into the other pocket! Ah, well, my boy, I suppose I must pay—Here is a five dollar bill. It is receipted—it is so dry and greasy I can't see!

It was nice and clean when boss gin it me, and the writing shined like Knapp's blackin'—it's torn so of a dunnie 'so much.

Well, here's your money, said the man of law, taking a solitary five dollar note from his watch box; now tell your master, Mr. Last, that if he has any more accounts he wants sued, I'll attend to 'em with the greatest pleasure.

Thank ee, sir, answered the boy, pocketing his five, but you is the only regular 'dunnie' customer boss has, and now you've paid up, he han't none but cash folks. Good day to you.

Now, there goes a five dollar note that will do that fellow no good. I am in want of it, but he is not. It is a five thrown away. It would not have left my pocket but that I was sure his patience was worn out, and costs would come off. I like to take costs, but I don't think that a lawyer has any thing to do with paying them.

As Peter Chancery, Esq. did not believe in his own mind that paying his debt to Mr. Last was to be any benefit to him, and was of opinion that it was money thrown away, let us follow the fate of this five dollar bill through the day.

He has paid, said the boy placing the five dollar bill in his master's hand.

Well, I'm glad of it, answered Mr. Last, surveying the bank note through his glasses, and it's a current bill, too. Now run and pay Mr. Furnace the five dollars I borrowed on yesterday, and said I would pay him to-morrow. But I'll pay it now.

Ah! my lad, just in time, said Mr. Furnace, as the boy delivered his errand and the note. I was just wondering where I could get five dollars to pay a bill which is due to-day. Here, John, he called to one of his apprentices, put on your hat and take this note to Captain O'Brien, and tell him I come within one of disappointing him, when some money came in I didn't expect.

Captain O'Brien was on board his schooner at the next wharf, and with him was a seaman with his hat in his hand, looking very gloomy as he spoke with him.

I am sorry, my man, I can't pay you—but I have raked and scraped the last dollar I can get above water to pay my insurance money to day, and have not a copper left in my pocket to jingle, but keys and old nails.

But I am very much in need, sir; my wife is sick and my family is in need of a good many things just now, and I got several articles at the store expecting to get money of you to take 'em up as I went along home. We han't in the house no flour nor any—

Well, my lad, I'm sorry. You must come to-morrow. I can't help you unless I sell my coat off my back, or pawn the schooner's keel. No body pays me.

The sailor who had come to get an advance of wages, turned away sorrowfully, when the apprentice boy came up and said, in his hearing!

Here, sir, is five dollars Mr. Furnace owes you. He says when he told you he couldn't pay your bill to-day, he did not expect some money that came in after you left the shop.

Ah, that's a fine boy! Here, Jack, take this five dollar note and come on Saturday and get the balance of your wages. The seaman with a joyful bound took the note, and touching his hat, sprung with a light heart on shore, and hastened to the store where he had already selected the comforts and necessities his family stood so much in need of.

As he entered, a poor woman was trying to prevail upon the store keeper to settle a demand for making his shirts. (You had better take it out of the store, Mrs. Cornway, he said to her, really, I have not taken in half the amount of your bill to-day, and don't expect to. I have to charge every thing, and no money comes in.)

I can't do without it, answered the woman earnestly; my daughter is very ill, and in want of every comfort; I am in want of fire-wood, and indeed, I want many things which I have depended on this money to get. I have worked night and day to get your shirts done.

I am sorry, Mrs. Cornway, said the store keeper, looking into his money drawer. I have not five shillings here, and your bill is five dollars of nine pence. The poor woman thought of her invalid child and wrung her hands. A sailor was here a while ago, and selected five dollars worth of articles here on the counter, and went away to get his wages to pay for them, but I question if he comes back. If he does and pays for them, you shall have your money, madam. At this instant Jack made his appearance in the door.

Well, shipmate, he cried, in a tone much more elevated than when he was discovered speaking with the captain; well, my hearty, hand over my freight; I've got the document, so give us possession; and displaying his five dollar note, he laid hold of the purchases.

The store keeper examining and seeing that the note was good, bade him take them with him, and then seeing as he took another and last look at the note he handed it to the poor widow, who with a joyful smile, received it from him and hastened from the store. In a low and humble tenement, near the water, was a family of poor children, whose appearance exhibited the utmost destitution; on a cot bed lay a poor woman, ill and emaciated. The door opened, and a man in coarse patched garments entered with a wood saw and approached the bed.

Are you any better, dear? he asked, in a rough voice, but in the kindest tones.

No—have you found work? If you could get me a little nourishing food, I could regain strength.

The man gazed upon her pale face a moment, and again looking up his saw and cross, went out. He did not go far before a woman met him, and said she wished him to follow her and saw wood for her. His heart bounded with hope and gratitude, and he went after her to her dwelling, an abode little better than his own for its poverty; yet wearing an air of comfort. He sawed the wood, split, and piled it for which he received six shillings, with which he hastened to a store for necessities for his sick wife, and then hurried home to gladden her heart with the delicacies he had provided. Till now he had received no work for four days, and his family had been starving, and from this day his wife got better, and was at length restored to her family and to health, from a state of weakness which another day's continuance would have probably proved fatal.

These six shillings which did her so much good, was paid her husband by the woman from the five dollars she had received from the store keeper, and which the sailor had paid him. The poor woman's daughter was also revived and ultimately restored to health, and was lately married to a young man who had been three years absent, and returned true to his troth. But for the five dollars which had been so instrumental in her recovery, he might have returned to be told that she whose memory had so long been the polar star of his heart, had perished.

So much good did the five dollar note do, which Peter Chancery, Esq. so reluctantly paid to Mr. Last's apprentice boy, although 'little credit is due to the legal gentleman for the results that followed. It is thus that Providence often makes bad men instruments of good to others. Let this little story lead those who think a 'small bill' can stand because it is a small bill, remember how much good a five dollar bill has done in one day—and in paying one bill they may be paying a series of twenty bills, and dispensing good to hundreds around them.

Feeding Poultry.—Professor Gregory, of Aberdeen, in a letter to a friend, observes:—“As I suppose you keep poultry, I may tell you that it has been ascertained, that if you mix with their food a sufficient quantity of egg shells or chalk, which they eat greedily, they will lay, caceras paribus, twice or thrice as many eggs as before. A well fed fowl is disposed to lay a vast number of eggs, but cannot do so without the materials for the shells, however nourishing in other respects her food may be; indeed, a fowl fed on food and water, free from carbonate of lime, and not finding any in the soil or in the shape of mortar, which they often eat off the walls, would lay no eggs at all, with the best will in the world.”

Receipt for making Bread.—For making superior loaf bread, not breakfast and supper cakes, buckwheat cakes, &c. No bread can excel that made by this receipt.

Half a pint of sour milk; half a tea spoonful of saleratus, well powdered; a piece of butter as large as a walnut; a pinch of salt, and three-fourths of a quart of flour; put the saleratus, butter, and salt into the sour milk, then add the flour, roll out the dough to a proper thickness.

These quantities will produce one dozen superior biscuits. The dough may be baked as soon as made, but it does not injure by standing two or three hours before baking it.

Cure of Hydrophobia.—We find the following statement of a cure for hydrophobia in a communication from a physician in the N. O. Tropic. He says:—“Any person receiving the virus will sooner or later, and always before any symptoms of madness occur, by little pustules rising on the under part of the tongue, generally in six or nine days, but sometimes later. The pustules contain the hydrophobic poison, they are to be opened with a sharp pointed instrument, and the matter spit out; they are too tough to break of themselves, and if not opened and discharged, the matter will be absorbed, and its re-absorption which causes the dreadful disease. This, then, is the grand thing you have to do: examine the tongue of the bitten person two or three times a day, and as soon as any pustules are discovered, open them and make the person spit out the matter, washing the mouth afterwards with salt and water.”

A Cure for Hydrophobia.—We learn from the Scholastic, (N. Y.) Patriot, that a mad dog recently bit several individuals in that vicinity, and some of them soon after, evinced symptoms of the disease.

Fixed copper was speedily administered—about one third of a dose, given at intervals of eight hours. This has been repeated from time to time. The effect is that the patients are evidently recovering. The dog bit several brutes, and a cow, a hog, and three dogs have died of the disease. The remedy, copper alone, has proved a complete antidote in other cases of this terrible disease.

A Punctual Customer.—Colonel McMahon, of the Memphis Inquirer, tells the following excellent story of a raw son of the Emerald Isle:—“May it please your honor,” said a stout looking son of the Emerald Isle, one morning not long ago, at the door of the mayor's office, “May it please y'r honor, here's them three dollars I'm owing y'r worship.” The mayor did not remember having any claim against the man, and requested him to explain.

Och, thin, and ain't three dollars the price for breakin' the corporation law over the face and eyes of a dirty spalpeen, when you pitch into him, y'r honor, you know?” The mayor understood the case at once.

There had been a fight, and the principal offender, fearing a warrant, had determined to evade the tax of constable fees, &c. About this time the recorder stepped in, and having received the money, began to make the entry in his book. A thought seemed to strike our combatant.

“Suppose, y'r honor, I make it five, would y'r honor, give me the privilege?” “It will save trouble, you know!”

What you mean by ‘privilege’?”

The lave to pitch into the spalpeen again, if he don't kape himself assy, y'r honor, jist! We left the mayor explaining why ‘privileges’ of that kind could not be granted, and went to our breakfast.

Calamitous Railroad Accident, at Madison, Ind.—A gentleman, who resides at Madison, Indiana, and who may be relied on, has furnished us with the following facts in relation to one of the most disastrous railroad accidents which has occurred for many years.

On Thursday afternoon the 23th inst., at 4, p. m. when the passenger cars arrived at Madison, at the head of the inclined plane, they had a wood car, heavily loaded with wood, attached. It is usual, in descending the plane, to detach the wood and freight cars, and bring them just to the head of the plane, to wait till the passengers had gone down. In this instance the way was slippery, and when the wood car was brought to the head of the plane, and the passenger car descending, the former accidentally got under head way, and running with great velocity struck the passenger car, and dashed into pieces; leaving four persons killed, and five very badly wounded!!!

The following are the names of the persons killed and wounded, viz: Mr. Bundrant, of Madison, killed; Mr. Ebecks, of Bloomington College, killed; Mr. Brunson, of Wheeling, (Va.) killed; Mr. Delaney, of Brownstown, (La.) killed; Mr. Roberts, of Madison, limb broken; Miss Craig, of Madison, limb broken, Mr. Crane of Brownstown, limb broken.

The dead were instantly killed, and the others have all some limbs broken.

Miss Craig was amputated yesterday afternoon. Our informant states that it was wonderful how any person escaped; yet a few did. Among them were two children.

The car was dashed into fragments and a gentleman who was a passenger says he found himself planted in a deep mud hole, out of which he rose on the dead bodies of two of his fellow passengers.

Mr. Henson, of Wheeling, had a flat boat there in which he had brought down some electrical machines. He had had gone to the head of the plane to see the locomotive come in, and got in the car to return to town. [Cin Chron.]

Rail Road from Boston to Canada.—A great convention was held at Keene, N. H. on Thursday week last, the object of which is to extend the Northern railroad communication, now leading from Boston, through Vermont to Montreal.

Punishment of Avarice.—Some hundred years ago, there was a great scarcity of corn in Egypt; the people were daily perishing for want, yet some avaricious merchants hoarded up their stock until it became worth its weight in gold.

Among these was an old miser named Amin, who had filled one of Joseph's Granaries at the last plentiful harvest.

Day by day, as the famine wasted his fellow citizens, he sat upon the steps of his corn store, speculating on their sufferings and calculating how he could make the utmost usury out of God's bounty.

At length there was no more corn elsewhere; famishing crowds surrounded his storehouse and besought him, as a charity, to give them a little food for all their wealth.

Gold was piled around him, the miser's soul was satisfied, with the prospect of boundless riches. Slowly he unlocked his iron doors, when lo! the rebels, blood and terror streaked, from his treasury.

Heaven had sent the worm into his corn and instead of piles of yellow wheat, he gazed on festering masses of rotteness and corruption. Starving as the people were they raised a shout of triumph at the manifest judgment, but Amin heard it not; he had perished in his hour of evil pride. [Dial. Magazine.]

Extract from a Private Journal kept by a Country Acquaintance.—Thursday, he'd corn all day, went to roost with the chickens, tired a wagon wheel, entertaining serious thoughts of either joining church or enlisting into the troops.

Friday—was called out of my nest by the old man, before the last bed bug had retired to his post, turned a double swarth in the meadow, brought a churning of butter, killed the white cat, mended mother's mop and read a chapter in the bible, all before breakfast. Horn blew for dinner at twelve precisely, found nothing on the table but corned beef and cabbage, made dinner of bread and cheese, cucumbers and cukes, father frothed about my weather, thought it best to pray for rain directly but concluded to give Providence three days grace, and if he didn't motion up then, to pray on the patent principle.

Saturday—nothing worth mentioning happened excepting that it didn't rain, the cattle broke into the corn, Jowler caught a shunk and grandfather died.

Sunday—rose rather late, fed the hogs, attended family prayer, put on my dry goods, and went to meeting, came up a tearing shower about noon, and wet father's hay, and the way he swore was a sin to professing christians.

How to choose a wife.—Lay a broomstick in her way, if she steps over it don't take her—if she takes it up and puts it carefully away, brush end up, take her if you can get her.

A Woman's smile is the best charity lecture a man can receive. It opens one's purse, and makes you bless the receiver in the bargain. Women for ever! for begging, if they want you to go to a ball, a party, or get up a fair, and would laugh you out of a dollar, they are sure to get it. Is a missionary scheme on foot, a church to decorate, a ball room to fit up, beware of woman's smile; if you mean to give nothing, run as if the plague were invading the country, or you are a gone case.

A Fortune Refused.—The grand father of the printer, Duche, was a protestant refugee, from France, and crossed the Atlantic with William Penn. During the voyage, Penn borrowed the sum of twenty pounds of the Frenchman, and when they arrived in Philadelphia, offered him as payment, a square in his city of Philadelphia, meaning thereby to show his friendship. Duche, however, very courteously refused, saying he would rather have the money. “Blockhead,” (said Penn), “thou shalt have the money; but cannot thou see that this will be a great city in a little time?”—Duche, afterwards acknowledged, that he had proven himself a blockhead; when he saw the square he had refused, as an equivalent for the twenty pounds, sold in a short time for as many thousands.

ADVICE TO A DAUGHTER.

Let me counsel you never to utter an expression, or do an act, which even looks like soliciting any gentleman's attention. Remember that every expression of civility, to be of any value, must be perfectly voluntary; and any wish on your part, whether directly or indirectly expressed, to make yourself a favorite, and be certain to awaken the disgust of all who know it. I would not recommend to you anything, like a prudish or affected reserve; but even this is not so unfortunate an extreme, as an excessive forwardness. While you so modestly accept any attentions which propriety warrants, let there be no attempt at artful insinuation on one hand, or at taking a man's heart by storm on the other. Do not ambitious to be considered a belle. Indeed, I had rather you would be almost any thing else, which does not involve gross moral obliquity, than this. It is the fate of most belles that they become foolishly vain, think of nothing, and care for nothing beyond personal display; and not unfrequently sacrifice themselves in a mad bargain, which involves their destinies for life. The more solid and enduring esteem you enjoy the better, and you ought to gain whatever of this you can by honorable means, but to be admired, caressed and flattered, for mere accidental qualities, which involve nothing of intellectual or moral worth, ought to render any girl who is the subject of it an object of pity. You are at liberty to enjoy the good opinion of every gentleman of your acquaintance, but it would be worse than folly in you to be ambitious of a blind admiration.

I will only add, that you ought to be on your guard against the influence of flattery. Rely on the man who flatters you; whatever you may profess, is not your friend. It was a much kinder of you, and a real mark of friendship, to admonish you tenderly, yet honestly, of your faults. If you yield a link to flattery, you have placed yourself on dangerous ground; if you continue to yield, you are not improbably undone. [Rev. W. E. Sprague.]

Can't Frighten 'em.—Father Miller has been preaching the speedy destruction of the world at Washington to members of Congress, but as yet he has not frightened them into a disposition to adjourn and go home to their families. They'll run all risk of his doctrine being true as long as $8 a day can be obtained.

“I'm getting fat,” as the loafer said, when he was stealing lard.

“In man we're OPOT, and NV XL NC.” So says the New York Sunday Mercury.

Whats in a Name.—The two places in which from their names, we would expect the greatest civil commotion are free land and Madrid.

Mr. Pettit, a Locofoco member of Congress from Indiana, has made the worst discovery that the precepts of christianity are deleterious to the Army.

On the 10th ult., in the house of representatives, he moved to abolish the office of chaplain in the army and navy, giving as a reason that “these offices were incompatible with the Christian religion. They were adapted to the old Jewish dispensation, and not to the religion of the Saviour. The influence of Christians was deleterious to the army.

They preached peace and destroyed the order of war. They would lead to the establishment of a Government religion. It would be better to print sermons to read, than to employ chaplains.”

Mr. Pettit said he did not expect that his amendment would be carried, but he would be recreant to every duty he owed his feelings and his constituents not to move the amendment.

Marry a man for his good sense, amiable temper, his sound morals, his habits of industry and economy, and you will then have a good husband.

It is supposed that Congress will adjourn about the 27th of May.

The last definition of ‘Home Protection’ is a closet in your parlour suitable to hide away in from your creditors.

We see it stated in the New York Sun, that a gentleman of known literary attainments, is engaged in writing the life of James Gordon Bennett. It is to be illustrated with wood engravings. Unquestionably it will be a rich affair.

Kendall, in his narrative, says that the air is so dry and the climate so fine and healthy at San Antonio, that if a man wishes to die there, he has to go somewhere else.

A Mistake.—A fellow went one night to take a dog that did not belong to him, and did not discover his mistake until a big sheep caught him by the leg.

Death.—A young married man named George Johnson, expired on Wednesday last at the St. Louis Hospital, from wounds received at a German ball on last Christmas eve. Johnson, in company with several others, were attacked for some breach of decorum; in the which followed he received several stabs with a knife, and has lingered in the hospital, from the effect of his wounds, up to the day above mentioned.

Use of the Fork.—It is curious and singular that nations should be distinguished by so trifling a circumstance as the use of the fork at table. An Englishman is remarkable for placing his fork at the left side of his plate; the Frenchman is recognised at table for using his fork alone, without the knife; a German, by placing it perpendicularly in his plate; and a Russian by using it as a tooth-pick. [Liverpool Alb.]

Peter the Great's Opinion of Lawyers.—When Peter the Great was sojourning in England for the purpose of making himself acquainted with the various arts and sciences in that nation, in pursuance of his plan he attended at Westminster Hall during a trial conducted by some of the most eminent counsel of the day. At the conclusion he was asked what he thought of the system of jurisprudence.

“When I left Russia,” he replied, “there were three lawyers in St. Petersburg; as soon as I return, I'll hang two of them.”

A Pretty Question.—“Why don't you get married?” said a young lady, the other day, to a rather elderly bachelor friend. “I have been trying for the last ten years, to find some one who would be silly enough to have me,” was the reply. “I guess you haven't been up our way,” was the insinuating rejoinder.

Taking the Habit.—The United States Catholic Magazine states that at the convent of the Visitation, Georgetown, D. C. in February, the religious habit was given to Miss Julia Pearce, (Sister Mary Eulalia), Miss Georgiana Pearce (Sister Mary Michael), both of Boston; Miss Eliza Travers, (Sister Mary Agatha), of Washington, and Mrs Keating (Sister Mary Joseph), of Philadelphia.

Lucky Hit.—An old building, about to be pulled down in the Bowery, says the New York Express, was sold for $30 to two trishmen on condition they would remove it. They went to work at it, and in tearing open some of the walls, found a jug, which on examination proved to be a money jug, containing it is said $5,000 in old coin. This is a good prize.

Mention is made of twins in Essex, Massachusetts, one of whom was born in 1843, the other in 1841.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEIGHBOR,
SIR:

On the morning of the 4th of April at 8 o'clock, I arrived at the city of Nauvoo; I was taken to the house of my wife's brother, and, after passing the visit ceremonies, I was conducted to the residence of General Joseph Smith, who was then in the Council Hall. Waiting a short time I was honored with an introduction to the man. The introduction was formal and made by Mr. [redacted] with whom I became acquainted on my passage to this place. He responded to the introduction with expressions that would do honor to any station in life—and command in expressions of dispute, his merit of the abuse and ill treatment from individuals claiming to be Americans. From this interview I walked to the newly erected Masonic Hall. This building is a display of architecture which will do honor to the cause, and pourtray the designs of an institution that should ever be ranked with none but the virtuous, the religious, and the sustainers of truth and charity. From this interesting scene, I was, after receiving introductions to some of the workmen then present, conducted to the notorious Temple—its ground work occupies ten rooms within the basement of a large space, all with doors from within, or the iron of the Chamber where stands the baptismal font, fixed on twelve oxen, so perfectly cut out of timber as to cause me to look with surprise, resembling the living animal. A chamber is in this huge wall without door or window—the wall is about three feet thick.

The day having passed I returned to the house of my friend where I reposed the morning of the 5th opened with some pleasurable portions of atmosphere, and the mind being refreshed with the sweetening prospect of, and the delightful interviews, (which circumstances of a predisposed character had pictured conter verities) with individuals whose acquaintance would, in my humble opinion, do honor to any American; whose absolute practices of charity, benevolence and virtue, will in the histories of future investigation stand foremost, whose experience in the range of persecution, tyranny and oppression, from the bitter and worthy hands of Missouri despotism; and the sanctioned approbation of the then Gubernative existence. At about 8 o'clock I was invited to visit an institution in the city, which I accepted, and whose erudite precepts walked into my reflections with remembrance. At 10 o'clock I attended near the Temple, where the word of God was proclaimed by Mr. A. Lyman, and others, and at the close of whose addresses Joseph Smith in a plain and familiar style satisfactorily closed. The text was 104th verse of 119th Psalm (Through thy precepts I get understanding, &c.) At 2 o'clock I attended the dedication of the Masonic Hall; I was here honored with a position, that perhaps from some would meet a look of castigative expression, but, considering the exhibition as I do, one of the character only belonging to the individuals, whose independence and firmness have associated with them, through all the trials and forms of men that educated prejudice had heaped upon them for many years and sadly left innocent purity and adorned virtue, spectacles of their brutality. Between four and six hundred men (500 positive count) were here assembled from every quarter, and in their various grades were regaled; a superior band of music, and a stand of colors borne by the proper officers. The prophet and I were in this procession, arm in arm. Hyrum Smith, on this occasion was the W. M. When entered into the Hall a grander display of genius, of eloquence, of union, of harmony, and mystic grandeur was never in my recollection displayed. The dedicatory address was delivered by a brother in the order (Erastus Snow, of Nauvoo) such an one would do honor to the most practical and learned man of our country; after whom, at the solicitation of the Prophet, I addressed the audience, unprepared and unexpected; but, to the universal approbation of the audience, from whom I was honored with a vote of thanks, and eulogial expressions from Gen. Joseph Smith and others. The ceremonies were mingled with music, which, added to the splendid and affirmative excitement of the occasion. On this occasion, I was much delighted and instructed, and I had a fair opportunity of judging for myself in regard to the moral and religious habits, exercises, and objects of those abused people called MORMONS, to which, I am in truth, bound to assert, that the horrible charges made against them are zealously the adoptions of devilish deities—That they are the people who have for Jesus' sake, borne the burthen of persecution, and faced the fiery pile, unwilling for the sake of a momentary enjoyment to renounce or abandon gospel truth—This night meets my mind as it in the enjoyment of real confirmed happiness and through which I did, only to inspect, occasionally raise in the unsuspected scenes of the past day from the happiest sleep. The morning of the 6th and the appointed day of Conference opened to my mind the most agreeable sensations, and while reflecting on the various occurrences, which had so happily, and with so little expense been to any mind rehearsed and opened in honesty. I could but rehearse to myself in happiest togo:

O that I thus could always feel
Lord more and more thy love reveal,
Then my glad tongue shall loud proclaim
The grace and glory of thy name.

At 8 o'clock this morning Gen. Smith sent his coach to the house where I was, inviting me, with my wife, to visit him, and his companion. Obediently we complied and had the most happy interview, from whence he escorted us again to our home in the carriage, and from thence to the place appointed for the assemblage of the Conference on my arrival there. I beheld the people gathering from every direction. The service was opened by a choir of music, that would give fame to the most fashionable city or circles in the United States, and when prayer was opened on the occasion from the place I occupied, which was on the speaker's stand, at the side of Gen. Smith, and between his two aged and respectable uncles, John and Asa Smith, I pictured myself as having soared from among the clouds of ordinary beings, and casting my eye over the multitude, I beheld on my left, between four and seven thousand females, of all ages and statuses, whose features could in the most solemn tones of a breathed utterance on my part declare that the CHASTENING CREATOR was present, and that man could be clad in virtue at such an interview. On my right I turned my eyes and this vast congregation sat in silent exercise of prayer. I would suppose about 10,000 persons whose major heads were bald and whitening for the grave, a silence existed that would almost affect the anticipations of eternity's range. The audience were addressed by Sidney Rigdon, whose topic for discussion, and historic portraiture, was, as he said, his own made text without searching into that old book for Paul's assertions or any other whose names apostolically clothes its pages for reference. "The Church of Jesus Christ" when from the commencement of the exercises of the Latter-Day Saints, which I understood to have been fourteen years ago, proclaiming that this was the day, when he recognized himself fourteen years old, and this day he closed his guardian. The discourse being a history of the rise, progress and tenets of the church, associated with the tales of horror, of persecution, of privation and unequalled opposition, and the breathings of testimonial assents by the veterans who with him had associated and proclaimed the words of truth, believe me, when I say, that 15,000 hearers on this occasion, in my opinion would not number the multitude. Tears and smiles had their places in the narrative, and here were depicted truths of which I had often heard, and circumstances of which I had read, (as written by the opposers of the Latter-Day Saints). The Prophet this evening sent his coach for me and my wife, by which we were conveyed to his house, where we passed the evening in the most interesting and edifying lectures, and developments of intelligence. A room dressed with the most fashionable and comfortable furniture was provided for our occupation, and when the reposing hour arrived, we were permitted in the hands of a Supreme to pass into the arms of Morpheus, the realities of that enjoyment, which the Sabbath required. The morning of the 7th (Sabbath) opened with new beauties: The heavens it seemed, this morning declared the glory of God, needless of comment. I now from this circumstance reach, with my heart's desire, the ground, (in company with Mr. Smith and his family) where the services are to be continued, when the Rev. Elder Sidney Rigdon continued his history of the church, there were assembled 20,000 persons, where the tidings of Revelation to the world, and the beacons of Heaven were released, where estranged aspirants for truth could receive a welcome, and where the scriptures were opened, defining points that have so long been withheld from man, and from the PERITENT.

The portrayed Mormon church, by Elder Rigdon, was to me a feast, to any curious hearer a store of knowledge, and to the enquirer for salvation, the way to the only true way, as the scriptures emphatically declare to the unprejudiced; about 12 o'clock intermission was proclaimed for two hours. During this intermission, with my wife, accompanied Mr. Smith to his residence. I was on this occasion, gratified in witnessing the baptismal ordinance with that part of my family which to me is nearest in this life, at the hands of Rev. Joseph Smith. At the river side thousands were in order and decorum, standing to witness the ordinances of baptism. I knew not positively the number that were this day, and in the space of one hour, immersed by the many Elders commissioned to baptize. At 2 o'clock we returned to the ground, were invited by Mr. Smith to ascend the scaffold where the great man of the west hailed and welcomed glad tidings. Joseph Smith here and on this occasion, in tones of truth and taste, elegantly portrayed the designs of heaven and carried the mind through time, declaring his good will, his love and sympathies for the world in its present educated character. After some additional remarks from the stand, the day having been so profitably spent in expounding the gospel, and placing the misrepresented character of the order of Latter-Day Saints in their true character, the meeting was dismissed till Monday Sin. My wife and I repaired to the house of her brother, where we feasted on the remembrance of the happy exercises of the day. Slept a good sleep through the night. When morning again with the beauty of a painted Blyssum opened with the rising sun—apparently proclaiming that God was to be here to day. The place appointed for service I attended, and although a crowd of not less than twenty thousand persons were present on the ground, yet, a deathly silence, after the closing exercise of music prevailed. The Prophet then rose in all the solemnities of his commissioned exercise and rehearsed his proclamation—which was associated with interest of the most exalted character; his bodily strength having failed, and his lungs refusing that utterance which its beauties required, he gave the stand to Mr. Adams, who, he said was in his place, now clad and authorized to expound the interesting subject. Three hours were by Mr. Adams occupied in this rich festival.

The many disputed points of long existing sectarians, the re-proclamation of God's word, and command to a fallen race of men in its true, unpolished, and remedial tone, character, and efficacy &c. &c. "Repent every one of you, and be baptized for the remission of sins."

"Except ye be born again of the water and fire, ye shall in no wise inherit the kingdom of heaven."

Four clerks were engaged in noting these masterly sermons, and those who may feel an interest in their perusal, will least mentally, as if on the richest luxuries of imagination. They will be published. The conference dismissed with the close of his wonderful many Garbriel trumpeted and music toned voice, pronouncing upon this vast and almost unheard of audience, a blessing, in the name of Jesus Christ, by and with the authority of the prophet Joseph Smith and his commissioned authority from Heaven's King. This evening the prophet Joseph Smith, sent his coach for my wife and I to ride with him and his wife this evening, being more lovely than the season could expect. The access of free and familiar associative discussion, and to reason and interrogate on the faith and tenets of the order of Latter Day Saints was here, and on this occasion proffered, whereupon I partook of the feasting liberty. To me it was a feast indeed! I first opened with one of the popular objections that prevail with, and among the learned Sectarians of our Western country.

First, that the Mormon Elders, when from Nauvoo, and under the excited desires for the promotion of and success of the order, will while prompted with the zeal, and high toned breathings of a supernatural spirit assert that Mormons speak in unknown tongues, and claim the gift of interpretation, which assertions only command the disputation of reasoning and learned minds, and forbid that hearing approach that would be if clad in gospel truth. To which Mr. Smith here satisfactorily explained, that by the misrepresentations of this kind of untruth by Elders who so ignorantly and unauthoritatively assumed the course of proclaiming, that mystery abode in the hands of the Prophet, &c. That these were the causes in a certain degree that had commanded the persecutions that had so bitterly been heaped upon innocent and unoffending persons.

Secondly, that by some means the word was spread abroad, that the Mormons in Nauvoo, all were pledged to be in common, men and women, and that their stores were as if of one family.

Mr. Smith here satisfactorily remedied, and proved that this matter only existed at the instance of Dr. John C. Bennett, and a few other individuals, who in the estimation of the prudent classes, and a professing Latter Day Saint population, stand inferior to hell's king, or the devil.

That the charge as published was false, and could by thousands be established.

I here unfolded the list of accusations which now existed, and was being imbedded by the uninformed, and even making heavy inroads to the occupancy of many of our apparently educated minds, said he, I am indeed aware of the charges that you have unfolded, and for your satisfaction and all who feel an interest in the cause, you are only referred to the book of God, to the Bible, in its antiquated type in the Hebrew, and whose translation for party convenience and the like, and the sectional orthodox justification, have been curtailed, enlarged, transposed, and transformed are the varying causes. Take it in its purity and my tenets are those commandments, and obedience thereto, is the Rock whereon I build my hope, and have established so effectually, through the extensive climes, and foreign lands of a hearing people, the everlasting truths. That the Temple of God was to be erected on this continent, that the United States of America North and South America was the Zion, the field was here too large for the occupancy of the few that were present, and that in the Baptismal font, were to be baptized the heads of the church, from whence the branches north, south, east, and west would spread. From this little beginning the Word of Truth was, and had been through, and in every nation teaching the way to Zion. The way to possess claims to holy eternity and unite in the choirs of heaven. On this pleasant interview he made references to the causes of the present sectarian tenets and deviation from the very word of God; he unfolded (I had liked to have said, and if I do, I know not that I err) the oldest book in existence of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, whose leaves seen in a character of decay and as having been the figure whereon the spirit of God was first displayed. He there selected the verses, where words were omitted in translation, and additions made to carry out the speculations that exist in the churches of the Sectarians. After passing several hours in this interesting exercise, I was taken to my lodging and the morning of the 9th (Tuesday) was appointed for my visit again to his house with my wife, when the antiquated relics of Plates and Mummies were to be presented for my curious gratification and erudition. But lest I should become tiresome by undertaking give a sketch of too much at once, I will leave the subject for the present and prepare for my departure home.

I am satisfied that Nauvoo is a place of knowledge and that wisdom will be justified of her children.

SISSIMUS.

Nauvoo, April, 10th 1844.

For the Neighbor.
Friends and Fellow Citizens:

Those statements you have before you are facts; I say to you before God and man, as to the Prophet Joseph Smith and his people, they are very different characters from what they are represented to be, as to Smith he has every appearance of a good hearted, honest man, and his people are very industrious and mind their own business. As to the city of Nauvoo, from the time it has been built, it has made more improvements than any other city or town in the western country, which is a proof of the industry of this city. I spent several days in this place last summer to satisfy myself, and to tell my friends after leaving the city that they have a right to serve God as they think best. The constitution of the United States guarantees to every man this privilege. Nauvoo is certainly one of the most quiet cities that I have been through in all my travels. In spending the few days last summer I found out one loafer in the city whose name was Jackson. As to the ladies of this place they have every appearance of being as intelligent as in any other place that can be found. As to the report of Gen. Smith's spiritual wives—if I understand the name of spiritual wife—it is all false. I have been lodging at Smith's house some time and if there was any thing of the kind I must have seen something of it going on. I have seen none in the Warsaw Signal stating difficulties between Joseph Smith and his wife, not long since. I was at his house when this thing was said to have taken place. I saw Mrs. Smith start to St. Louis and when she returned home, and they had every appearance of love and friendship. I will say to you the statement is all false and without grounds. This I will certify on oath.

JEREMIAH SMITH, Sen.,
Wapiti co., Iowa Territory.

I have read Gen. Smith's views on government matters as good as I ever saw. I think he would come as near suiting all parties as is necessary. I think you must all be told of the kind of ship that we have had for some years back. If you will read his circular impartially you must agree with me, and if you do, why not support Smith for President, you must all agree that he has wrought miracles in the world, a man standing up under such circumstances must undoubtedly make a good President. I will leave these few remarks with you for your consideration.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT.

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

Outrages.—It becomes our duty to chronicle some of the proceedings of a band of men who infect our city, and occasionally disturb the peace thereof when opportunity offers itself, but while our magistrates continue to enforce the laws they must eventually succeed in establishing law and order.

On Friday morning last the 28th ult. information was given to Mr. Green that Augustine Spencer had committed an assault on the person of Alderman Spencer who immediately took him into custody, and on his refusing to go to the Mayor's office Mr. Green called upon R. D. Foster, C. L. Higbee, and C. A. Foster to assist him, but they swore they would not and said they would see the mayor and the city d—d, and then they would not. Spencer was however conveyed to the mayor's office and fined $100.00. The mayor then ordered the three above named to be arrested for refusing to assist the officer when called upon. They all resisted and C. A. Foster immediately drew a double-barrelled pistol and presented it to the mayor's breast, who had come to the assistance of the officers, but it was instantly wrenched from his grasp. Higbee joined with Foster in declaring that the would thank God for the opportunity of shooting the mayor. They were fined $100.00 each. They all appealed to the municipal court.

These individuals have lately become very notorious. R. D. Foster is the magistrate who was fined a few weeks ago for gambling; Higbee a respectable limb of the law who was fined for insulting the city officers; and C. A. Foster is a candidate for fame, lately fined for disturbing a religious congregation.

NAUVOO THEATRE.

An establishment for theatrical representations has recently been fitted up in our city. The public have been highly entertained at witnessing the three first evening's performances;—Pizarro on the Death of Rollo, was performed "to the life." The celebrated Mr. Lyne, of the Eastern Theatres, maintained the character of ROLLA with credit to himself, which was abundantly evinced by the overwhelming applause of the audience. Mr. G. J. Adams appeared as Pizarro and acquitted himself with great honor. The remaining parts were performed elegantly, particularly those of LADY ALVINA and COXA. The ladies who appeared in these characters have won the universal applause of the public.

Theresa, or, the Orphan of Geneva, is truly a thrilling and elegant melodrama in this drama, Mr. Lyne appeared as CARWIN, G. J. Adams as FORTAINE, and J. HATCH JR. as COUNT DE MORVILLE. Mr. Lyne, in the personification of Carwin, merited, and abundantly received, the applause of those present. The gentleman who appeared as Count de Morville, for a new performer, acquitted himself with great credit, and displayed talents which, when they become matured, might insure him a creditable name upon the list of theatrical characters. The part of Countine did not fall behind in point of interest and ability. The lady who maintained the splendid and highly interesting character of Theresa, surpassed, in point of ability and theatrical tact, our highest expectations. The Countess was also ably personified. The scenery presented in the several Acts of this drama, were truly grand and imposing. Every thing connected with this establishment seems to be got up with a refined taste, and no expense has been spared to render their performance interesting. As it is the determination of the managers to present the public with nothing that is not strictly moral, we hope their enterprise will meet with a proper appreciation, while those who patronize them will reap great benefit if they will profit by the sublime contemplations which such performances never fail to inspire in the meditative mind.

On Friday evening, 3d inst., will be presented to the public, Douglass and Theresa; on Saturday 4d inst. Theresa and Idiot Witness or a tale of Blood; and on Monday evening, 6th inst. Damao and Pythias and Idiot Witness or a tale of Blood. The performance advertised for Thursday evening will be postponed until Friday evening.

From the Neighbor Extra, of last week.

Since our paper went to press there has been another meeting held, at which it was

Resolved, That the State Convention to be held in this city be postponed till Friday the 17th day of May; and that each county in the State be requested to send one or two delegates to said Convention, to whom the hospitalities of the citizens of the city will be tendered while here.

ANOTHER STEAMBOAT GONE.

The new steamer Weston, on her first trip from Cincinnati to St. Louis, was sunk on the night of the 20th ult., in the Mississippi river. She came in collision with the Allaquippa, at the Devil's Back Bone, about one hundred miles below St. Louis. The Allaquippa struck her quartering near the capstan, and penetrated almost to her boilers, literally cutting her in two. In this situation Capt. Smith of the Allaquippa, was advised by some of his passengers to back out, which if he had, the Weston would have gone entirely under water; but he ordered his engineer, though one of his guards was under the water, to push for the shore, he succeeded in carrying her about one hundred yards, when she parted company and sank to the cabin floor. As far as could be ascertained, only two children were drowned of the 250 or 300 passengers on board. The passengers of the Allaquippa held a meeting on board, at which Capt. Smith was absolved from all blame in the unfortunate occurrence. The Weston is a total loss. And it is a singular coincidence, that Captain Littleton a short time since had the misfortune to loose, somewhat in the Missouri river, the first steamerboat Weston by fire, while on her first trip, and now he has lost his second boat of the same name while making her first trip.

Steamboat Burnt.—The steamerboat Rowena, loaded with 500 bales of cotton, and having sixty-seven cabin passengers on board, took fire at Mobile on the night of the 20th ult., while lying at the wharf. As soon as the fire was discovered, she was cut loose and in drifting from the wharf ran afoul of the New Era, and both drifted into the stream. The New Era was on fire several times. Every thing on board the Rowena was totally consumed—cotton, baggage and all. It was not known whether there were any persons lost or not. Several negroes saved themselves by jumping into the water.

Another.—The Steamboat Hamburg was on her passage from Augusta to Savannah, (Geo.) on the night of the 22d ult., with two boats in tow loaded with cotton. One of the boats, soon after leaving Augusta, was discovered to be on fire, and notwithstanding every effort to arrest its progress, the boat and cargo, valued at $15,000, were consumed.

To the Editor of the Neighbor.

Sir,—When I first took a survey of the political field in which so many big stalks were planted, I must confess that I was a little astonished to see the name of General Joseph Smith registered there. But when I saw the Broad Axe of political demagoguery levelled at the roots of the tree of Liberty planted by our revolutionary sires, under whose branches every person from every clime has a right to seek shelter, I do not so much wonder at his condescension. He takes a stand in the field, because the iron yoke of mobocracy is placed upon the necks of the sons and daughters of the veterans of '76, by political demagogues who know no other principle than speculation fraud, and mobocracy. He does it because the land which was purchased by the blood of our Fathers is polluted with a mass of Whigo-Demo-Loco-Foco Mobocratic principles which at no distant period will become the dissolving influence of the Union he does it because he is not willing to yield up his religious, political, or domestic rights, to the sovereign state of Missouri or sell his birthright for an unhallowed mass of Martyrism. Your cause is just but government has no power to redress you. He does it because he is obedient to the tattoo of '76, and like a second Washington, he arms himself with the principles of Freedom, virtue, political economy, and religious rights, and with these weapons he combats the powers of political demagoguery until there shall be neither root nor branch left, to contaminate the free born sons of these United States. He steps into the field because the spirits of our Fathers are languishing in sorrow because the land which they bequeathed to their posterity has become the theatre of the most Mobocratic principles of any portion of the Globe, and a parallel of outrageous acts cannot be produced in the history of the world now under these circumstances ye free born sons of liberty, gird on the armour of united zeal, fortitude and faith, and with these weapons thrash the powers of political vice; hoist the broad flag of General Smith's views, put shoulder to the wheel of his political economy, propel it by the power of union, until the United States are cleansed from Mobocratic principles, and the influence of Matty. Calhoun and Tom Benton, shall wither like the gourd that covered the head of Jonah, or blown to the four winds, like chaff from the summers threshing floor.

And that the white house at Washington, may once rejoice at the reception of a President who holds the broad principles of our saviour in one hand and constitutional rights in the other, and that the inhabitants of the United States may know that wisdom and virtue has taken the place of vice and immorality.

Now understanding as we do that the great tree of liberty which was planted by our fathers, is in a withering state, and has not power to shelter all who come under its branches, and the letters on the broad folds of "E Pluribus Unum" are almost obliterated, I am decidedly of the opinion that the views of General Smith relative to political economy carried into effect; is the only remedy, to restore the Union to its former grandeur, or give strength to the columbian eagle to soar aloft above all other nations in the known world.

A. RIPLEY.

Of the talking machine now being exhibited in New York, a country papersays—
"We know several married men to whom a talking machine is no novelty."

Arrest of Golder.—The Cincinnati Commercial says—Corporal John M. Golder, of the U. S. Army, was arrested and put in jail in this city yesterday by A. A. Pruden. He is the person charged with shooting a man and his wife near Jefferson Barracks, Mo' some three or four weeks since. They were Germans. This is not the first murder Golder has committed it is said. He will be taken to Saint Louis on the first boat.

Paddy for Ever.—An Irish preacher once broke off the thread of his discourse, and said to his hearers—"My dear and beloved friends, let me tell you, that I am now just half through with my sermon, but seeing your impatience, I will say, that the remaining half is not more than a quarter as long as that you have heard."

Important Improvement in the Manufacture of Iron.—A discovery has lately been made by Mr. Simeon Broadnadow, of New York, in the manufacture of iron, by means of which the iron Ore is by only one process converted into good wrought iron, without being first made into pig iron, and at a less expense than the pig iron can be made.

Extraordinary Births.—We have been informed, says the Middletown (Md) Enterprise, by a gentleman of standing, that Mrs. Barger, wife of Mr. A. Barger, living near Patraville in this county, in the latter part of February last, was delivered of four fine healthy children all one birth and from last accounts all are doing well. This is the same woman who gave birth to three children about eighteen months ago, and was first noticed in the Frederick Examiner. The Middletown Valley well deserves the name of having a fruitful soil—seven children, in eighteen months!

The Chinese War.—The war in China has been very disastrous to that nation. Late advices say it has cost them 20,000 lives and one hundred millions of dollars.

China.—An arrival from Canton brings intelligence that a destructive fire had occurred in that city, which destroyed 1400 dwellings.

Law and equity are two things which God hath joined together, but which man has put asunder.

Polly Bodine.—The New York True Sun says that this woman still remains in her old quarters at Richmond, Staten Island. She is healthy, fat and cheerful, and by way of availing away the time until her trial, amuses herself with writing humorous verses, which occasionally find their way beyond the walls of the prison, and are said to evince considerable talent. The Grand Jury of Richmond county will sit next month, when a true bill will of course be found against her. She has withdrawn all her charges against Walter. The only occasion on which she evinces any feeling in regard to her situation is upon interviews with her children, when it is said she appears to be much affected.

A Doctor's Bill.—Not long since, a rather penurious gentleman took it into his head to dispute the bill of his Doctor on the ground that the items were not made out. The Doctor being somewhat of a wag, and a little malignant withal, sent in five pages of foolscap, of which the following may serve as a specimen:

Timothy Snooks Esq.
To John Crennell, Surgeon, &c.
Jan. 11 To attending you at your own house, at your own request, driving a bay horse before a yellow gig, with a negro waiter beside me, distance five miles. $2 05
To listening half an hour to the details of your symptoms, in a low, grunting voice. 0 60
To asking you to put out your tongue. 0 12
To feeling your pulse through a very dirty flannel wristband. 2 50
To enquiring whether you had slept well the previous night. 0 43
To replying in the negative to your question, whether oyster sauce and apple dumplings were good for you. 0 06
To saying yes, when you enquired whether you were bilious. 1 12
To feeling your pulse and looking at your tongue twice more. 3 05
To thinking what was the matter with you. 0 25
To telling you that you had a cold, caught by being out late, in a heated state. 1 06
To recommending you to put your feet in hot water, and keep sober. 0 26 $11 50

A School master in Ohio advertises that he will keep a Sunday school, twice a week—Tuesdays and Saturdays. He can't be a Yankee.

Tongue watching.—To him that well considers it, idle speaking is precisely the beginning of all hollowness, halfness, infidelity, (want of faithfulness); the general atmosphere in which rank weeds of every kind attain the mastery over noble fruitman's life, and utterly choke them out; one of the most crying maladies of these days, and to be testified against, and in all ways to the uttermost withstood. Wise, of a wisdom far beyond our shallow depth, what was that old precept, "watch thy tongue; out of it are the issues of life!" "Man is properly an incarnated word"—the word he speaks is the man himself. Were eyes put into our head that we might see; or only that we might fancy and plausibly pretend that we had seen? Was the tongue suspended there, that it might tell truly what we had seen, and make men the soul's brother of man; or only that it might utter vain sounds, jargon, soul confusing, and so divide man, as by enchanted walls of darkness, from union with man? Thou who wearest that cunning, heaven-made organ, a tongue, think well of this. Speak not, I passionately entreat thee, till thy thoughts have silently matured itself, till thou have other than mad and mad-making noises to emit; hold thy tongue, (thou hast a holding) till some meaning lie behind to set it wagging.

Consider the significance of silence; it is boundless, never by meditating to be exhausted, unspeakably profitable to thee.

Cease that chaotic hubbub wherein thy own soul runs to waste, to confused accident dissection and stupor; out of silence comes thy strength. "Speech is silver, silence is golden; speech is human, silence is divine." Fool! thinkest thou that because no Bowwell is there with ass-kiss and black lead to write thy jargon, it therefore dies and is harmless?

Nothing dies, nothing can die. No idle word thou speakest but is a seed cast into time, and grows through all eternity! The recording angel, consider it well is no fable, but the truest of truths; the paper tablets thou canst burn; of the of the "Iron leaf" there is no burning.

Truly if we can permit God Almighty to note down our conversation, thinking it good enough for Him—any poor Bowwell need not scruple to work his will of it.—T. Carlyle.

THE JEWS.
The present physical, moral, and social condition of the Jews must be a miracle. We can come to no other conclusion. Had they continued from the Christian era down to the present hour in some such national state in which we find the Chinese, walked off from the rest of the human family, and by their selfishness as a nation, and their repulsion of alien elements, preventing every assault from without, in the shape of hostile invasion, and from an overpowering national pride forbidding the introduction of new and foreign customs, we should not see so much miracle interwoven with their existence. But this is not their state—far from it. They are neither united nor an independent nation, nor a parasitic province. They are peeled and scattered into fragments; but broken globules of quicksilver, instinct with a cohesive power, ever claiming affinity and, ever ready to amalgamate. Geography, arms, genius, politics, and foreign help do not explain their existence; time and climate and customs equally fail to unravel it. None of these are, or can be, springs of their perpetuity. They have spread over every part of the habitable globe; have lived under the reign of every dynasty; they have used every tongue, and lived in every latitude. The snows of Lapland have chilled, and the suns of Africa have scorched them. They have drank of the Tiber, the Thames, the Jordan, the Mississippi. In every country, in every latitude and longitude, we find a Jew.

It is not so with any other race. Empires the most illustrious have fallen, and buried men that constructed them; but the Jew has lived among the ruins, a living monument of indestructibility. Persecution has unheated the sword and lighted the faggot; Papal superstition and Moslem barbarism have smitten them with unpeppable ferocity; penal retort and deep prejudice have visited on them the most ungenerous debasement; and, notwithstanding all, they survive.

Like their own bush on Mount Horeb, Israel has continued in flames, but unconsumed. They are the aristocracy of scripture—let off torments—princes in degradation. A Babylonian, a Teban, a Spartan, an Athenian, a Roman, are names known to history; only their shadows alone haunt the world and flicker its habits. A Jew walks every street, and dwells in every capital, traverses every exchange, and relieves the monotony of the nations of the earth. The race has inherited the heirloom of immortality, incapable of extinction or amalgamation. Like steamships from a common head, and composed of water's peculiar nature, they have flowed along every stream without blending with it or receiving its flavor, and traversed the surface of the globe, amid the lapse of many centuries distinct—alone. The Jewish race at this day is, perhaps, the most striking seal of the sacred oracles. There is no possibility of accounting for their perpetual isolation, their depressed but distinct being, on any ground save those revealed in the record of truth.—Fraser's Magazine.

ARRIVAL OF THE MONTREAL.
The Packet ship Montreal, Tinker, arrived this morning from London, from whence she sailed on the 5th of March. Capt. T. has kindly sent us the London Times of the 5th, being a little later than those the steamer. The London Papers announce the death of Mr. Sergeant Bompas, an eminent lawyer, whose name is familiar with us from his appearance in almost every criminal case of magnitude. The House of Commons was discussing on the 4th, the army estimates, with the usual prompt rejection of all endeavours to reduce them. The force proposed was 120,677 regular troops, 10,000 enrolled pensioners, 8,811 artillery and engineers, 6,000 marines on shore and 9,900 Irish police, in all 193,488.

Mr. Sharman Crawford moved a resolution declaring the maintenance of so large a standing army, unconstitutional, and dangerous to the liberties of the people, but only eight voted for it, against it 87.

In the house of Lords a somewhat curious movement was made by Lord Brougham, the account of which we copy entire:

Slavery in America.—Lord Brougham then said, he begged leave to make a few remarks upon a very painful subject, in respect to which he had within the last few days received many applications with a view to his presenting a petition.

Nothing could be more dreadful than any interference whatever in either house of Parliament with any matter or thing purely of domestic policy in any foreign country, and purely belonging to the administration of the municipal law of that country; although it might be ever so revolting a law to our feelings, that would be no reason for our interference, because we had nothing to do except with ourselves and our own law; we had no claim, no mission to interfere with any foreign country in any respect whatsoever, while that country confined itself to its own laws and its own subjects.

That was the reason why he had refused to take any step whatever to bring the subject before their Lordships's house. But he admitted that it was a serious matter, a case that greatly and gravely interested him. A man had been condemned to death in a criminal court of the American State of Louisiana, having sentence passed upon him by a learned judge, as if he had committed murder with the most appropriate language to so solemn a sentence with the most serious warning to make use of the time yet spared to the condemned person, and with the most accustomed reference to the sacred truths of religion, as if he had actually and purposely, and wilfully committed murder.

That was the case which had attracted his notice, in consequence of the applications which had been made to him. To all of which applications his answer was, that he would give no opinion upon it, for neither the Parliament, nor the nation, nor the government, could interfere with the municipal laws of any other country. He was bound to suppose, that the American law, the American law, the Louisiana law, he meant, was justly administered, and that by the law of his country, the unfortunate person had forfeited his life, because he had no right to accuse any judge in Louisiana of mal administration of the law, or of perversion of the law; but by the law he had condemned that man to die for aiding the escape of a slave! (hear hear.)

That law was the law of Louisiana; it was not our law. God forbid it should be! (hear hear.) The Americans might think our laws very bad, and we might think theirs bad; but he had no right, or duty, or claim whatever to say one word either against their law or those who administered that law. Yet he might humbly and respectfully to the Legislature and executive government of Louisiana express his fervent hope that advantage might be taken of the long interval which must elapse the 27th of April, the day on which the unfortunate man was condemned to die, for the purpose of extending mercy to that criminal. He (Lord B.) spoke of him as a criminal because the laws of his country had so dealt with him; but he trusted that humane and merciful consideration of the Louisiana government might yet extend their mercies to the condemned man. He hoped he had said enough to vindicate the course he had taken upon this occasion.

His lordship need not have put himself to so much trouble, the man was pardoned long ago. But his lordship might have taken the trouble to possess himself of the facts in the case. It was not in Louisiana, but in South Carolina that the conviction took place, and the law under which it took place is an old law of 1754, when South Carolina was a British colony, but by some oversight has been allowed to remain upon the statute-book public attention never having been directed to it. It will doubtless be repealed.

ALL IS PEACE AT NAUVOO AMONG THE SAINTS.

But, Mr. Taylor, I wish you to give the following outrage an insertion in the Neighbor, that the public mind may be deceived and the disgrace and shame fall on those who have justly deserved it and merited the people's rebuke! On Friday morning the 26th inst. I was informed by Mr. O. P. Rockwell that one Mr. Augustin Spencer, had committed an assault on the person of Alderman Orson Spencer, and the Mayor of the city had sent for A. Spencer and found him in Mr. Marr's Law Office; made him a prisoner and informed him he must go with me to the Mayor's Office, when he said he would not go. I then called upon R. D. Foster, C. L. Higbee and C. A. Foster, to assist me in taking said Spencer to the Mayor's Office; but they swore they would not, and used many threatening oaths, and aspersions, saying they would see the Mayor and the city damned and then they would not, but soon followed me and Mr. A. Spencer to the office door, when the Mayor ordered me to arrest those three men for refusing to assist me in the discharge of any duty, and when attempting to arrest them they all resisted and with horrid imprecations threatened to shoot. I called for help and there not being sufficient, the Mayor laid hold on the two Fosters at the same time. At that instant C. A. Foster drew a double barrel pistol on Mr. Smith; but it was instantly wrested from his hand, and afterwards he declared he would have shot the Mayor if we had let his pistol alone, and also he would thank God for the privilege of riding the world of a tyrant! C. L. Higbee responded to Foster's threats, and swore that he would do it! However, the three were arrested and brought before the Mayor, whereupon O. P. Rockwell, Joseph Colledge, J. P. Green and C. Tufts testified to the amount of the above statements, upon which evidence the Court assessed a fine of one hundred dollars to each of the above named aggressors, (who appealed to the Municipal Court.)

I wish the public to know who it is that makes insurrections, and disturbs the peace and quiet of the people of the city of Nauvo, and in order to do this I need only to tell the world that this R. D. Foster is a county magistrate and the same R. D. Foster that was fined for gambling a few weeks since, and that this C. L. Higbee is a lawyer and notary public of Hancock county and the same C. L. Higbee that was fined for insulting the city officers (the Martial and a Constable) when in the discharge of their official duties, a few weeks since.

When the wicked rule the people mourn; but righteousness exalteth any nation.—Solomon.

J. P. GREENE, City Marshal.
Nauvo, April 29th 1844.

N. H. We wish it to be distinctly understood that neither of the three above named individuals are members of the Church of Latter-Day Saints, but we believe C. A. Foster is a Methodist.

THE DISASTER ON BOARD THE "PRINCETON."

The morning sun shone brightly
In an unclouded sky,
And lovely forms and faces fair
Were passing gaily by.
And words of gladness and of joy,
Rose on the zephyrs mild,
From aged sires, and dancing youth,
From matrons, maid and child.
Hail country of our Nation's joy!
Land of our benefactor's birth!
High rose the patriotic song,
And high the shout of gleeful mirth.
Soon to the smiling river,
A joyous band was borne,
And fraught with beauty and with grace,
The fated bark moved on.
Then passed the merry toast around,
Where grained the board beneath its cheer,
Then rang the merry burst of joy,
Like music falling on the ear.
O! there were eyes that sparkled bright,
Among that gay and happy throng,
And hearts that bounded high and light,
Mid wit and mirth, and joyous song.

A wail upon the waters;
A loud and piercing cry
Is mingled with a booming sound
That echoes through the sky!
A shower of human blood is now
High on the pennons spread,
And o'er the shattered deck is strewn
The dying and the dead.
Than rose the loud and bitter wail,
The cry of agony.
As when a woman vents her grief
O'er sights which rend the heart to see.

Amidst that stricken band,
Whose sighs and tears were blest,
Two blooming maids, in anguish tones,
A father's fate lament:
And mingle with the cries that pierce
The hot sulphurous air,
The shrieks of soulless, boundless grief,
And harrowing despair,
But there is one who feels the point
Of sorrow's spear more keen than they,
Who sinks beneath a heavier weight
Of deep, heart-rending agony.

She sits upon the deck,
In silent, tearful woe,
Her bosom rent with pangs of grief
Which none but she can know,
Dishevelled from her marble brow,
Her silken hair is flung,
But the last kind drop of soothing grief
Is from her fountain wrung,
"It can not be, it can not be,
My husband's life of bliss is o'er,"
Alas! the sad reality!
He to her side returns no more. R. F.

ALMOST A ROW IF NOT QUITE.

A scene that promised at the commencement to be a very capital burlesque of the popular lecture system of the day but which degenerated into a turbulent display of practical jokes, took place at one of the halls of the Marlboro' Chapel on Monday night. It appears that a strapping greenhorn, fresh from the country, and, standing six feet high in his stockings, who calls himself John Dennett, had joined the Mormon Society in this city, according to his own showing, on account of his own peculiar privileges respecting a community of wives which the Prophet (as is said by unbelievers) allow the saints, and having availed himself of the said privileges pretty freely he was forthwith expelled by the Mormons, who repudiated any such practices. Fired with the injustice of this expulsion, Dennett determined on annihilating the whole sect, by a course of public lectures, 'showing up' the Mormons. He was willing to acknowledge his own sin and repent of it—this was all a man could do, he said—but he had no notion of allowing the Mormons to make 'fish of one man and flesh of another'—those who lived in glass houses, he thought, should not throw stones.

While in this frame of mind, determined on immortalizing himself and supping full of vengeance, he was it upon by some of the mad wags of the city, always on the qui vive for any thing that promises sport, and encouraged to persevere in his undertaking. By their aid, a hall was procured, and a programme of performances under their supervision prepared, in which was introduced an original song furnished by them to be sung by the lecturer, 'with other entertainments'.

The eventful evening arrived, the hall was crowded, a chairman chosen who was a legitimate object of 'spoke fun at,' and the entertainments of the evening 'opened rich.' The lecturer proceeded to kneed up the dough of his ideas into a very delectable cake of nonsense, enriched by the plums and spice thrown in at intervals by the laughing audience. But this state of things was soon interrupted by a portion of those present, whose love of practical jokes exceeded their appreciation of the ludicrous; and, in consequence, the lecture desk became a pillory in which the lecturer, seceder from Mormonism was martyred for about half an hour. Paper bags of flour were thrown with unerring precision at the poor victim's head, rotten eggs followed torpedoes and lighted Chinese fire-crackers came in their turn, until the forlorn of the evening, who stood his ground for a time like a hero, begged to be heard and entirely disregarding the missiles thrown at him, at last lost patience; and, 'accounted as he was' made for the door—(tho' which he passed like a streak of greased lightning with a whole army of thunderbolts at his heels. John Gilpin's famous race was nothing to it, and we doubt if Dennett is done running yet.

The whole affair was a practical exemplification of the fable of 'the Boys and the Frog'—and the sport was anything but creditable to the humanity of those engaged in it. We are astonished that a hall so respectably located should have been let for such a purpose, though we cannot suppose that such a scene was anticipated either by those who have charge of the premises or those who hired them for the occasion. Mr. Dennett, we presume will not very speedily appear again on this stage as a lecturer.

The following communication from Mr. Dennett announcing the above meeting, we publish verbatim et literatim, not feeling disposed to mar any of the beauties of so excellent a production:

With regard to the peace recently published in the Bee concerning a fellow by the name of Dennett was represented by his opponents to be a hard egg it is supposed by him that they are as—equally as hard about the worst of it is they are not willing to own it. On Monday evening next march 25 at half past 7 O'clock malbro chappe No—1, 12-1-2ets Mr. Dennett will sing an original song about mormonism in the tune of rory O more composed for the occasion. ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW.</

Heaves.—Do you know any efficient cure for heaves in horses? If not, perhaps you may consider what follows as worth noticing. I have a valuable horse, one of a pair which threatened, more than a year ago, to become utterly useless in consequence of this complaint. At the expiration of the last grass season, I was induced to try top stalks of corn instead of hay, and the result has been that the animal is entirely relieved. Permitted to add, that I have for years been in the practice of giving my horses each an ounce of fine salt every other day, and have good reason for believing that their health is greatly promoted by it. —[A. B. Cult.]

Benivolence is the light and joy of a good mind. It is better to give than receive.

Daguerotype.—A woman's heart is the only true "plaid" for a man's likeness. An instant gives the impression, and an age of sorrow and change effaces it not.

The organ for the new Trinity Church, New York, is to be built by Mr. Eben for $10,000.

A letter closed with the white of an egg cannot be opened by the steam of boiling water like the common wafers.

Extraordinary Coincidence.—The Louisville Times says: "We read of the death of one William Long, and his wife, on the same day. The account states that they were born the same hour, by the same midwife, christened at the same time, loved at the same time, married of course at the same time, never knew a day's sickness till the day before their death, and on the day they died they were just one hundred years old. They died in one bed and were buried in one grave."

The Tyrant of Fashion.—Fashion rules the world, and a most tyrannical mistress she is, compelling people to submit to the most inconvenient things imaginable for fashion's sake. She pinches our feet with tight shoes, or chokes us with a tight neck-bankerchief, or squeezes the breath out of our body by tight lacing; she makes people sit up by night when they ought to be in bed and keeps them in bed in the morning when they ought to be up and doing. She makes it vulgar to wait upon one's self, and get to be idle and useless. She makes people visit when they have rather stay at home—eat when they are not hungry, and drink when they are not thirsty.

She invades our pleasure, and interrupts our business. She compels the people to dress gaily, whether upon their own property or that of others; whether agreeably to the word of God or the dictates of pride.

One philosopher is worth a thousand grammarians. Good sense and reason ought to be the umpire of all rules, both ancient and modern.

Never Satisfied.—There are people in this world who are continually speaking of the ill luck that attends them. One of these discontented beings was passing along the street the other day. Something glistened on the sidewalk, and he stopped to pick it up. It was a nicotene. "Hang it!" he exclaimed, in a tone of perpetual disappointment, "if any body else had found it, it would have been half a dollar."

Write in my Album.—A beautiful and accomplished young lady gave her album to a dry old bachelor, with the above request, with which he complied in the following felicitous manner: "Through all the varied scenes of life, Of sorrow, pain, and woe, The little picture, through the woods, Up to their eyes in snow."

A Good One.—A gentleman in his capriciousness at the table to answer a call for some apple pie, owing to the knife slipping on the bottom of the dish, feigned his knuckles buried in the crust. A wag, who was seated just opposite to him, very gravely observed, while he held his plate, "Sir, may I trouble you for a bit while your hand's in?"

Quack.—A little girl, on seeing the doctor take her sick brother from the warm bath and apply a warm flat-iron to his feet, was at a loss to understand the last operation. Her first earnest question was: "Well, doctor, you have washed him—now I suppose you are going to iron him!"

Conciseness.—Louis XIV., who loved a conciseness style, one day met a priest on the road, whom he asked hastily: "Whence come you? Where are you going? What do you want?" The other as instantly replied: "From Bruges. To Paris. A benediction." "You shall have it," said the king.

Temperance.—If we attend to nature, we shall find she has marked out a line of conduct, which is to give to her what she wants, and not to be luxuriously injured the habit and then take physic to injure it more.

Wisdom.—Wisdom is better without an inheritance, than an inheritance without wisdom.

"Come Simon, get up, it is after sunrise."

"What o'clock, missus? what if he be after sunrise?" "Nonsense! if sun rise two hours fore day, then Simon must get up, cause sun rise, eh? don't come dat gamo ober dis nigger, no how!"

Magnificent Undertaking.—Governor Yates at last. For some months past, many enquiries have been made, and without success, to ascertain the object of the movements toward improvement now going on at Hoboken, a short distance above the ferry landing.

Although the intention has been to keep the whole affair entirely concealed, we are gratified at receiving permission to make it known in general terms, to our numerous readers.

Government has, for once, undertaken thoroughly to test a new invention, without waiting for private enterprise to reduce it to an every day affair. If nothing seems to prevent, the citizens of New York will soon be presented with a means of defence for their harbor, which, being complete within itself, will render almost useless the present lines of forts.

One of the steam batteries, of which we gave a description at the time of its invention, is to be built; and for that purpose, a basin, or coffer dam is now being constructed at Hoboken, the interior of which is to be 300 by 130 feet.

In this basin is to be built a ball and bomb proof steam floating battery, about 200 feet long, propelled on the screw principle, and capable of being governed with all the ease of a steam boat, while its great speed will not be the least of its great qualities. It is its peculiar construction, more than strength of build, which will render it impervious alike to cannon ball and bomb shell; the rapidity of its movements will enable the commander to take advantage of any desirable position in action.

The armament will be heavy, but the light draught of water will enable it to approach any desirable point without difficulty, or danger. When finished, the coffer dam will be dug away, and this thing of life will move out of its dock, not showing the least means whereby it moves, and without a single person being seen about it, while in reality, a powerful steam engine is at work within, and hundreds of persons are safely concealed there, ready to deal out death and destruction upon an enemy along side or miles off. The cost of perfecting this fearful engine of war will probably exceed $1,000,000.

The whole undertaking has been planned by our distinguished fellow citizen, Robert L. Stevens, under whose immediate superintendence it is being carried out. Mr. Corwin, the celebrated dock builder, is intrusted with the construction of the dams and piers. Machine shops of brick will be constructed alongside of the dam, where all the requisite machinery for the vessel will be perfected, and placed on board by means of a circular railway, surrounding the dam. The vessel will be completed in two or three years; and, in the meantime, it is intended that the mode of constructing this powerful engine of death shall be kept strictly private.

New Pick Lock.—We have seen an implement with which the gentry arrested at the Exchange on Tuesday night opened doors while the keys were in them. It resembled somewhat a small pair of forceps, with the exception, that when the ends were brought together by pressing the handles, there was a socket in the end, somewhat too small for the insertion of the end of an ordinary key.

By nearly closing the instrument, by passing it in the key hole, until it entered the end of the key, and grasping it hard by pressing the handles, the key could be turned, and the door unlocked as easily as though you had the handle of the key itself in your hand.

These implements are so generally used by rogues at the North, that at most of the hotels each door has an inside bolt, with the words "Don't your door!" written under it. When the key is taken out, why they bring their skeleton keys to bear, and open the door as easily as with the instrument above described.

The rogues are becoming so "adroit" of late, that it is time that the laws with regard to them were made more severe.

Want of Faith.—The defect of our times is a want of Faith. We live in an age of reality; present palpable reality. Every thing is to be paid for on demand; and every thing is to be accounted for and answered by return of post. The golden currency of enthusiasm has been called in. There is no reverence for any features of truth behind the veil.

Our temper resembles that of the Pundit who enquired of Henry Martin whether, by embracing the Christian religion, he should behold the Deity in human shape. "This eagerness to perceive every object without delay and impediment is a characteristic of minds which have not been accustomed to gaze at the luminary of truth; and might be rebuked by a Hebrew legend which we have read."

You teach, said the Emperor Trajan to a famous Rabbi, that your God is every where, and boast that he resides among your nation. I should like to see him.

God's presence is indeed every where, the Rabbi replied; but he cannot be seen, for no mortal eye can look upon his splendor!

The Emperor had the obstinacy of power, and persisted in his demand.

Well, answered the Rabbi, suppose we begin by endeavouring to gaze at one of his ambassadors.

Trying as assiduously; and the Rabbi leading him into the open air, for it was the noon of day, bade him raise his eyes to the sun then shining down upon the world in its meridian glory.

The Emperor made the attempt, but relinquished it. "I cannot," he said to the Rabbi, "behold the sun."

It is a beautiful and touching parable, and teaches humility not only in religion, but in literature and in life. —[Fraser's.]

Gallantry among Soldiers.—One of the British regiments in Canada, the 71st, recently ordered to the West Indies, have been so long in Canada, that a number of soldiers had formed matrimonial alliances without leave, and, of course, much airm was created among their families when the order came. To the surprise and admiration of every body, two hundred men stepped from the ranks of the regiment, and offered themselves as substitutes for their married comrades.

By this truly generous and soldier-like conduct, the separation and consequent misery of families were prevented, and all permanent volunteers for Canada, and old soldiers who were permitted for good general conduct to remain in the colony prior to discharge, or who were found unfit for tropical service, were replaced. (Montreal Gazette.)

The Opium Trade.—The last advices from China state that the Emperor has not abated his hostility to the use of this pernicious drug. But native informants allege that he has been so sickened with the results of the war, which grew out of his interference with the opium trade, that the local Mandarins have orders to shut their eyes to the daily infractions of the law.

This will explain the immunity granted to the opium vessels at Shanghai, and the open manner in which opium is landed, sold and smoked at Canton, by and in the presence of the Imperial officers. It is only from dread of the English, and the fear of another war, that prevents the Emperor from enforcing obedience to the law, prohibiting under severe penalties the traffic in opium.

Insurrection at Port au Prince.—By the arrival of brig Gen. Marion, Captain Sheppard, eleven days from Port au Prince, we learn that an insurrection had broken out, and that Gen. Riviere, the President, was at Azak, thirty miles from St. Domingo, with one division of his army, consisting of 15,000 men. Several schooners had been sent to supply him with arms and ammunition.

The insurgents force is estimated at from 8 to 10,000. The President's son, Don Heriberto, who has commanded one of the Regiments stationed at St. Domingo, with all the force who sided with him, were berthed on private, and the Colonel arrived at Port au Prince, via Jaenel.

A Colonel Pimental took possession of a town bordering on the Spanish post in the name of the insurgents. The town was mostly inhabited by mahogany cutters, who were not at home.

On hearing of the march of the President they assembled by night, and took the Colonel prisoner, with his papers, and sent him to head quarters. Amongst these papers was one pretending to be a negotiation between the insurgents and the French General, through the French Consul lately offering to supply money and arms, with the aid of 10,000 men, if necessary, on condition that they were to receive the Island of Simani, at the east of a naval depot, and have the original French part of the Island restored to them.

A difficulty took place between some of the officers of H. B. M. sloop Eurydice, and the Haytian officers. They went on shore to bathe, and after bathing amused themselves with knocking coconuts from the trees, sailor-like, when a crowd approached and drove them to their boats at that point of the bayonet. The next morning this was repeated, they then went on board and having armed themselves, went ashore and captured the whole guard, took them into town, and delivered them up to the authorities. The matter had not been settled when the G. M. left.

From Matanzas.—Captain Clarke, of the schooner Pontuxet, arrived at New York from Matanzas, 23d March, reports that the dissatisfaction among the slaves is more general than was at first supposed.

It is said that there are about 3000 slaves in iron in the different forts at Matanzas. Numbers are daily tried, and if convicted, are immediately shot.

A regiment of troops had just arrived from Havana, for the purpose of scouring the country. Business on some of the plantations, is at a complete stand.

Ancestry.—Never look for ancestors or your titles in the imperfect records of antiquity; look into your own virtues and the history of those who lived to be benefactors of society. —[Zimmerman.]

What kind of tea do old maids prefer? Beau le, of course. —[Hutell.]

He that doeth the best he can, is as worthy as he that can do the best.

Always think what you say, though you may not always say what you think.

A Happy Town.—Richmond, Ia., is one of the most beautiful and prosperous towns in the west. There is not a retail grocery in the city, and the Washingtonian Society numbers 8,000. God grant that there may speedily be many such "Richmonds" in the field!

Horrid.—An Irish woman was burned to death at the house of a man named Berridge, about six miles from Detroit on the Pontiac road, last week. The Detroit Advertiser says she had a whiskey quarrel with the wife of Berridge, who when found, was lying on the fire, almost wholly consumed, and Mrs. Berridge asleep on a bed in the same room!

In an article in Fraser's Magazine, entitled "Courtship and Loosening," the following passage occurs, which is very rare, and worthy the attention of the ladies: "I certainly blame no lady who has been accustomed to the ordinary elegance of life for refusing to marry a poor man; but must beg my sweet friends to recollect that though a man without money is poor, a man with nothing but money is poorer still."

Substitute for Glass in Hot Beds.—We notice in Hovey's Magazine of Horticulture, an extract from a German publication, giving a substitute for glass in hot beds. Take fine white cotton cloth and cover the frames. To render it transparent and impervious it is covered with the following preparations, viz: four ounces of pulverized white chalk, two ounces of slaked lime, four ounces of boiled linseed oil. Mix these well, and add four ounces of the whites of eggs, and as much of the yolk, and the mass is made liquid by beating. The application is similar to varnishing any other article. This is certainly much cheaper, and safer than glass. —Tennessee Agricultural.

A New York correspondent of the Boston Courier says there is quite an excitement in at Brooklyn, about a little girl, nine years old, on whose forehead a blood red cross is said to appear after seasons of meditation and prayer, sometimes twice a day and sometimes four or five times a day. It is bright and conspicuous at first and then gradually fades away. As the age of miracles is past, there is room to infer that a rubeuscent in the shape of an acrid finement of some sort, is applied in the shape mentioned to the child's forehead, for the purpose of exciting astonishment and wonder. People will do such things.

An English paper gives an account of a tea party of sixty old women, who were the mothers of eight hundred and eighty-nine children! They must have had something to talk about at that tea-party we should think.

Foreigners.—The New York papers state that between four and five thousand persons born in foreign lands were naturalized in that city during the last fortnight.

Col. Benton arrived in this city last night on the mail-boat. We learn that he has not recovered from the injuries which he received on the Princeton, and that he is going to his farm in Kentucky for recreation. —Louisville Journal.

A Good Note.—which we copy for the amusement of those who annoy the readers of our paper by sending to borrow it. A Mr. S. sat reading the Argus at home in the morning, before leaving for his store when the boy of a neighbor called, with a usual errand upon his tongue, which he delivered in the usual way: "Mr. S. pappy wants to borrow your Argus a few minutes this morning." "Tell your pappy, minutes this morning." "Tell your pappy, I am using it, but drawing a four pence from his pocket, and handing it to the boy, whose change which I am not using just now, with which you can buy one. Tell him he needn't put himself out of the way about returning it to-day. I will send for it when I want it the same as I frequently have to do for my paper." Mr. S. has been allowed the use of his own newspaper since, without annoyance from that neighbor. —Portland Argus.

A Long Word.—A physician's advertisement in the St. Louis Republican, of voluminous length, is headed "One word to this climate."

A MOTHER'S LOVE. There is no divine holiness in the love of a mother, that no mother how the tie that binds to the child was formed, the loom as I were, consecrated and sacred, and the part is forgotten, and the world and its harsh verities swept away when that love alone is visible and the God who watches over the little one, sheds its smile over the human deputy, in whose endearment there breathes his own. —Burton.

An excellent rule for living happy in society, is never to concern one's self with the affairs of others, unless they desire it. Under pretence of being useful, people often show more curiosity than kindness.

A TRUE PHILOSOPHER.

I cannot part with these good people (the Dutch Berrys) without mentioning that the only real philosopher I ever met with in my life was one of them. He was, indeed, pre-eminent among his neighbors, who gave him the name of "the philosopher;" and I cannot resist relating the method in which they put his pretensions to that title to the proof. Having a self-housed in his "store," the produce of the year, he paid a visit to Cape Town on some business, and while there was attacked with a dangerous illness, which detained him some time. As soon as his health permitted, he set out on his return home. On the very day before, he reduced to ashes his barns, his crops, his windows, and their contents; all were destroyed, he was ruined. Knowing him to be on his road home, a group of friends waited his arrival at the entrance of the village, some to communicate the sad news, but many professedly to see what the philosopher would do to say. He heard their security was undisturbed, his countenance altered not; not a complaint escaped him; but, on the contrary, a thanksgiving to Almighty God for the preservation of the lives of his family! "I wish," said I to him the day when we were talking over this misfortune, "if you would give me your receipt for preserving equally under such circumstances." "It is a very simple one," he replied, "when I heard what was gone, I ran over in my mind the many things the great and good God had left me, and so I thanked him for them." —Bayne's Ramble in the East, &c.

An Important Discovery.—A means of instantly stopping a horse when he runs away, has been discovered in France. It is simple. A sudden transition from light to total darkness is the principle. It is conveyed by means of a spring connected with the reins, to cover the horse's eyes. This was done in an instance where the animal was at the top of his speed and the result was that he instantly stopped. The light being suddenly excluded, horses no more rush forward, says the discoverer, without seeing their way, than would a man afflicted with blindness.

A little match-girl, aged about fourteen years, picked up a pocket book in Philadelphia, containing 1000 dollars in bank notes, which had been dropped, but a few minutes before by a merchant named Vickers, from Columbus, Ohio. The girl saw Mr. Vickers some distance off and ran after him, who, upon receiving the book, generously presented her with fifty dollars.

If a cent had been put at compound interest at the commencement of the Christian Era, it would have amounted at the end of the year 1827 to a sum greater than could be obtained in six nations of globes, each equal to our earth in magnitude, and all of solid gold, while the simple interest for the same time would have amounted to a fraction over one dollar. How very lucky that nobody thought of making the investment.

From the Massachusetts Ploughman STEPHEN BRINLEY'S FARM.

Not more than thirty miles from the city of Boston you may have noticed a pretty location—a sloping surface inclining to the south-east—the highest point covered with pines, firs, and evergreens. At the foot of the slope, on the slope, on the South, a gentle brook meanders over the washed pebbles, or when more full and generous, it distributes its favors over the green herbage and makes rich a long lawn that yields without culture the winter supplies for a sleek herd of Red Devons and a few cosset sheep.

Mr. Brinley's farm consists of one hundred acres. Eighty of cleared land, ten of wood, and ten of timber land. The twenty acres of forest lie north of his buildings and protect them as well as his fields from the northerly winds. His dwelling-house is not so large as to go without repose, and his barns large enough to hold his fodder and to shelter his stock.

The highway runs nearly east and west and his house is set square with it instead of ranging with a north and south line. As the house stands on the north side of the highway it faces southerly, and you are not tempted in a cold day, to go round to the back side to enter it.

No evergreens are planted on the south side to screen it from the sun in winter—none are admitted there but such trees as are called deciduous, or so named in English to doff their caps as soon as they are found to intercept light and warmth which is wanted in the building in short days. But a belt of trees is flourishing on the west and north sides of the building, bidding defiance to wind and snow, and looking as fresh, through the whole winter, as in June.

The barn and out-houses stand easterly from the dwelling-house and on the same side of the way, leaving the south and southwest breezes a free passage, and full authority to waft the noxious vapors from the sitting rooms, in warm weather, such as accompanies breezes from this quarter. When the winds are north or north-east the effluvia is seldom offensive.

The principal barn has a deep cellar under the whole, but as it stands up well on the sloping land no water stands underneath. The cow-yard is south of the barn and lower than the cellar, sloping enough to shed off all excess of wet. It is a pit on the eastern side where materials are thrown to become impregnated. Thus no ice is made in the yard to endanger the cattle's bones, and no mire-pits are formed to catch and hold fast the shoes of the unwary footman.

A cheap shed runs the whole length of the west side of the yard, and another forms the east side.

The barn cellar is stoned on three sides leaving an opening south. All the cattle lie loose under the barn and stalls; and when one or more requires different feed or treatment they are put in single pens.

Racks are made round, that the cattle may eat on either side without fear, as they will gather around a small stack of hay, not being exposed to be cornered and hooked, but free to fly off in a tangent when a superior node at them.

The cattle have learned their places and there is no more danger from knocking than when they are yarded in summer, the master cattle leaving their favorite stands and keeping them the principal part of the eating hours. Some hay is wasted, as cows hay always will be, in any mode of feeding; but as the yard is never very wet and as straw and the poor kinds of fodder soon accumulate about the circular racks, very little hay that is valuable will be lost, and the poor kinds will be eaten much better, when exposed, or in open racks, than when placed in a close manger before cattle that must either starve or eat in a fixed position—the head confined and the knees worn bare on a hard floor.

The cellar is warmer in cold weather than the sheds, and in the coldest nights the master cattle choose the warmest part of the cellar, that is, the north end, to lie down in, and it sometimes happens that the underlings will choose to lie close beside them and you will find a dozen head lying in a small compass. But in mode, preferring the open sheds to breathe a free air.

Mr. Brinley finds his cattle will eat coarse fodder better when they run loose than when they are tied to a stanchion; that they lie more comfortable, much cleaner; and that the labor of tending them is not half so great; that the milk is cleaner, and that the manure is much more valuable. For every drop of the urine of the cattle is absorbed by the loam that is carted into the yard and under the barn in autumn. The solid part too is trod down and mixed with the loam instead of freezing and thawing as it will when thrown out at the windows in the usual manner.

The whole cellar is not occupied by the cattle, for the bay for the hay takes 15 feet of it and runs down six feet below the floor. This bay 15 by 40 feet holds six tons below the floor, and as six tons more will fill it only six feet above the floor 12 tons can be pitched into this one bay without a man or a bay to take it away from the cart.

One man goes up from the field with a load of hay and pitches it off without assistance, leaving the others to rake and prepare for the next load. This makes a great saving of labor in the very busiest part of the day, and when there is the greatest danger of loss from showers. The hay in the bay may be levelled down in the morning when all hands are near by, and no lost steps are taken. Under the barn carts can be driven without obstruction, going in on one side and turning about as occasion requires, to carry in loam or to carry out manure. A pump stands a couple of rods from the barn and a trough conducts the water to the trough which stands in the warmest part of the cellar, seldom freezes.

Mr. B. having 50 acres of cleared land, ten of which is natural mowing, and sometimes flooded, he keeps forty more in tillage and mowing. He has two acres of orcharding which he keeps constantly broken up and no cattle or horses are allowed to run in it.

There remains nearly thirty acres of pasture land, most of which he can plough. On these thirty acres he summers 15 cows or cattle of some kind and he keeps half as many hogs as cows. The refuse of his dairy furnishes the principal part of the food for his young hogs, and he fattens his pork with Indian and buckwheat meal, potatoes, &c. He plants two acres of corn and one of potatoes, never planting the same plant more than once before laying it again to grass.

Four acres of his lightest soil are devoted to buckwheat. And as such land is not ploughed till the last of June a green crop of weeds, &c. is always turned under, and he finds he may have an annual harvest of buckwheat with once ploughing and without manuring. But he occasionally sows buckwheat in May and ploughs in the first crop to enrich the land, and then he has time enough to sow again for a harvest.

This course leaves him about 30 acres of upland mowing from which he sometimes gets 60 tons of hay, besides about 12 tons of stock hay on his low ground. Now as he breaks up but about three acres each year his English mowing land would yield him but little if it must rest till its turn came to be planted—it would not come more than once in ten years, and in that time it would be so clogged with grass roots and bound out, as we call it, that it would not yield half a ton to the acre.

To remedy this evil he adopts that branch of the new system which consists in turning over the green sward in August and sowing grass seed at once on the furrow. This saves the exhaustion which is caused by grain crops—saves the expensive operation of tillage—and secures large annual harvests of that most important article in a cold country, the most indispensable item in New England husbandry, a good hay harvest.

Mr. Brinley's cattle look sleek and handsome. If they are not all Devons the have the Devon color and appearance. No filth is found adhering to their sides and flanks, and they may be approached most readily in the yard without subjecting the inspector to a sight of filth and slime.

Mr. B. fattens ten hogs, which weigh, on the average, 4,000 lbs. This, at 6 cents, $6 per hundred—gives 6 times $40.—His cows—fifteen—eat him $340 each—$600. He sometimes sells from 15 to 25 tons of hay in a year—and this at $15 per ton—the average price of hay for 30 years past, gives not less than $300 more.

Mr. Brinley keeps a couple of horses and with these he does the principal part of the labor on his farm; though he occasionally keeps a yoke of oxen, and he sometimes fattens the ox for market. Sometimes he purchases cattle from the country in autumn, keeps them through the year and sells them for beef and keeps a less number of cows.

His four acres of buckwheat give him 80 to 100 bushels of grain, and his two acres of corn yield him, on an average, 120 bushels; and he has his own rye and oats on the three acres of ground that were planted the preceding year. Occasionally he raises wheat instead of rye, for his own use; and generally he makes it a rule to buy nothing which he can raise on his own farm—so that whether prices are high or low he is not affected except in regard to the surplus which he has for sale.

From his orchard he realizes a profit. Sometimes he sells 200 barrels; and whether apples are plenty or scarce the net income is not so much varied as the quantity of fruit. He thinks he averages not much less than $100, for his apples. These four items give him on the average from 12 to $1300 worth for sale. Then his family is supported besides from the same farm, and supplied not only with all kinds of necessaries but with numerous luxuries. These are, honey from his bees, peaches, pears, quinces, currants, raspberries, strawberries, cherries, in their season, and grapes of various kinds that give him a great supply from the first of September to the first of November.

Then he has a pair of horses to travel with either in a wagon or in a family carriage and he has always leisure enough excepting only in July when his hay harvest presses. This whole farm is carried on by the labor of one hired man through ten months of the year—one more in July and a lad of a dozen years of age; and the owner is not under the necessity of laboring more than half the time. There is no crowd of work except in hay time.

In winter he needs but little help, for when at home he chooses to feed his own cattle by throwing their hay into the racks; and one of his horses pumps all the water for his stock by means of a fixed horse power, the cost of which was less than $20. The same horse, at the same time, and in the same gear, may turn a grindstone, an auger, a churn and a washing machine. The churning and the washing are done on Monday morning.

For the Neighbor.

MR. EDITOR:—

Dear Sir, I hope you will not consider me an intruder to again offer a few thoughts on the subject of politics connected with other matters. I had long since become so much disgusted with the party strife that prevailed in the political world, division, hatred, envy, and low cunning of political demagogues, that I had determined never to enter again into the political arena; but sir, circumstances alter cases. The wonderful change that has taken place in the form of our government, or rather the great want of moral integrity and firmness, on the part of the chief magistrate to administer the laws, made it the duty of all citizens of this Republic, to institute an enquiry for this cause. It does not require more than prophetic discernment to clearly discover the fact, that our government is threatened with dissolution on every side. The constitution is good, framed by honest men, patriots; and has been strictly adhered to, until within the last seven years.

When I reflect upon the violation since that time, of our venerated constitution, I am reminded of the Frenchman with his horse. After he had loaded his horse as much as he could well stand under, being still desirous to carry more, he says to his horse, "if you can bear that you can bear this." And on he piled an additional weight. "Now if you bear that too, you can bear a seyerer." So pile upon pile went on, until snap went the horse's back; and the poor animal that had rendered such important services was now rendered useless, by the avarice of an ignorant master. Truly sir, this is a fair sample of the situation of our present American constitution. Violation after violation has been tolerated and winked at by our chief rulers, until the God of Heaven will not bear with such vile pretenders longer. Some men you know, are wonderful sticklers for the constitution where their own personal interest would not be advanced by other views. There are some also, who are determined if they cannot be head, they will not be at all. Striking instances, is now presented in our midst; and demonstrative evidences of the fact, is presented before our eyes every day.

Andrew Jackson was considered by all republicans I believe, to be the standard of democracy, uncompromisingly the "defender of a man's rights." But he saw the pending storm that lowered, and hovered over his beloved country, and when he retired from the arduous duties of Chief Magistrate, the choice what he considered the least evil, of the multiplied disasters that was presented.

Martin had about this time found out that he was a "beast or quadruped," and pledged himself to eternal fidelity. Although he had ever been doing from point to point, yet he was considered by far, preferable to "that old con," not Gen. Harrison. However we soon see Matty whisking and frisking round and round, and established a wretched precedent. When the delegates of fifteen thousand free American citizens, represented their sufferings, and the wrong they had received from the citizens of one of the states of this confederacy contrary to law and justice, he said "Gentlemen your cause is good but I can do nothing for you."

That august body the Congress of the United States was memorialized but in vain. The orphan's cry, the widow's moan, was a subject of minor importance with them; when the most trifling subject would occupy that whole body for weeks together. It is due to European Monarchs to say, that had the grievances of their subjects been made known in such manner, the mobbers would have lost their heads. America is known a far off, as the land of "Equal Rights and religious toleration." Yet our constitution would admit of the robbing, mobbing, ravishing, murdering, and driving, fifteen thousand defenceless citizens, and soon we saw what followed. "If it could bear that," it could bear well, to join sword and purse. The most abominable usurpation; Sub Treasury, and Standing Army of immense magnitude; all subject to the entire control of the President. So now if we vote for the aspiring magician, we vote for a sub-treasury, and a standing army. And if we vote for Henry Clay, in casting our vote we say by that act that we approve of the fifty million manacle of speculation, and other measures fully as prejudicial to the welfare of our country's prosperity. I will show you, sir, that Martin Van Buren has apostatized and denied the faith, it indeed he ever was a democrat. Democracy consists in carrying out certain principles laid down by the constitution, to defend all citizens against oppression, murder, rape, robbery, &c. &c. Andrew Jackson left us when he retired from public life, "A great people prosperous and happy, in the full enjoyment of liberty and peace, honored and respected by every nation of the world." Sir every man who is acquainted with Andrew Jackson's straight forward course in administering the laws of this government, well knows that we as a people never would have suffered such wrongs under his administration, as we have under Van Buren, while yet we were imploring him for redress. And now we may expect nothing else but the extermination of two or three hundred thousand free born American citizens, if he is re-elected. I said sir, he had found out that there was a beast or quadruped, I had reference to the story of the bat and mole. Esop of ancient history informs us also, that the first Anglo-Saxon king was enticed by the voice of a stud horse, and truly this is worthy of comparison with the administration of beast politics, and the exercise of beast religion. I mean sir, that politics, and that religion, in a free government that sanctions the shedding of innocent blood. The election of this imperial officer, took place about the time of the establishment of the Popedom in Europe; a powerful reformation however has taken place since, in the United Kingdoms, and comes quietly an abhorrence and detestation of blood-shedding religion. An English tea-totalist came here last year, and endeavored to establish a society. One of our brethren responded to his call on the citizens and said, "surely the gentleman does not understand the nature of our laws, and the equality of our rights, or he never would have expected to establish societies of such contracted privileges here in a land of liberty. Here comes a damper. He rose and replied, "If the murdering and driving free American citizens, on account of their religious principles, as has been the case with you, and that under executive sanction; if this is equal rights; democracy! God deliver us from such democracy! such tyrants in Old England would have lost their heads. Under those circumstances who would not exclaim thrice happy England! Sir, the reason I have taken the liberty to say, "beast politics and beast religion," is that our government has stigmatized herself, has become a proverb among other nations, "Ah sir, it has been the bloody reign of Van Buren." If he denies it, I ask why he sanctions it, why he has again entered into a covenant with death? To exterminate hundreds of thousands of American citizens, because forsooth it is well pleasing to "that father Lucifer."

I will recollect that my friend Major Peyton of Tennessee, declared in a public speech at Gainesborough, that Van Buren had associated himself with Catholic usurpers; that he might gain their votes. I therefore declare that I consider him an "apostate," has denied the faith, and endeavored to establish himself a monarch, with absolute authority; in possession of the purse and sword of this great nation. Then weal for the favored few of the favored party, and woe to the many of the devoted people; farewell liberty and peace. Behold and see, ye noble sons of our veteran fathers of '76, who divorced themselves from monarchy. Yet Van Buren has cunningly sought to bind on the shackles of despotism, with a triple cord, and that he might fairly conceal his purposes until fully consummated, entered on the duties of his office as President, with solemn protestations of fidelity. Sealed on his sacred cushion attended by a train of moral servants, to the seas of Columbia he declared,

"For myself I desire to declare that the principles that will govern me, in the high duty to which my country calls me, is a strict adherence to the spirit and letter of the constitution, as it was designed by those who framed it." We present an aggregate of humankind prosperity surely not elsewhere to be found. Half a century teeming with extraordinary events, has elsewhere produced astonishing results; has passed along but, on our institution has left no injurious marks. From a small community, we have risen to a people powerful in numbers, and in strength, but with our numbers has gone hand in hand, the progress of just principles. The privileges both civil and religious, of the humblest individual, are still sacredly protected at home. Neither masses of the people, nor sections of the country, have been swerved from their devotion to the bond of union, and the principles it has made sacred. It will ever be thus! How ardently he has endeavored to cover up his designs to entwine around the sons of liberty, those same cords of despotism, and principles of Monarchy, from which our fathers had previously liberated themselves at so great a price; "I repose with unwavering reliance on the patriotism, intelligence, and kindness of a people, who never yet deserted a public servant honestly laboring in their cause." But republican America ever vigilant, soon discovered that all those declarations were sheer hypocrisy. Tennessee, my native state for one, had before encountered deceptions and soon discovered the cheat. I must here give a short account of the early history of that state for the purpose of elucidating the idea more clearly. In this reminiscence, I shall only stir up the pure minds of your readers, by way of your remembrance, but twice is not too often, to tell a good story, which by the bye, is a matter of fact; particularly if it is rehearsed on suitable occasions. That portion of the state now called East Tennessee, then known as the "State of Franklin," and since, I learn is contemplated to be considered the non-slave holding state of Franklin. There were sub-treasurers it seems, in those days of his infancy, and they suffered them, in consequence of this provision of the law. This circumstance cured that people of sub-treasury fever. The law was such, that in their poverty they enacted, that the Governor, chief Justice, and some other of the principal officers, were to be paid for their services, in deer skins, while other inferior officers were to be paid off in less change. Racoon skins were therefore, the established currency to pay off the inferior officers well sir, you know, that the large fish always live on the minnows. Yet all at that day professed to be good Democrats, and good Whigs; though all is not good that shines, but often when it is brought to the test a spurious amalgam is detected. A little leaveneth the whole lump. All considered that the taxes might safely remain in the hands of the collectors, (sub-treasurers) until wanting for disbursement. The taxes were therefore fairly collected in skins and peltry, as printed out by the law; but the collectors as report says, procured the requisite number of Opossum skins for a paltry sum, then went to work cut the tails off the Opossum skins, and sewed them on to the Opossum skins, paid off the unsuspecting treasurer, and then sold the Opossum skins to the haters.

A complete Swartwout and Price capor. This I presume the circumstance which give rise to the long story of Doctor Duncan, of Ohio, respecting "that old con"; but he has given it an improper coloring, as I before stated. He did not tell us the fact, that the President's conscience alone is concerned in the execution of the law. Assuming the attitude of a Sovereign! Exercising the whole legislative, and executive power of the Government. The people will, and he vetoes, for Tyler, follows in the wake. One man is the government.

Freedom from the restraint of civil laws! Some in the days of yore, have commanded the lives and fortunes of their subjects by the thousand with arbitrary power; and although the President to a certain extent, exercises the same power and authority; yet we are told that he is the only true friend to his country; and by the grace of God, defender of the faith, and the laws; but not the lives and property of the people. But for the sake of popularity, can be made the favored instrument in the hands of Satan's engines of extending his executive influence to exterminate sins of God; those very persons whom with others, he has sworn to protect. One more sentence, I will insert from his inaugural.

"His thoughtful framers of our Constitution legislated for our country as they found it."

One more sentence, I will insert from his inaugural.

"His thoughtful framers of our Constitution legislated for our country as they found it."

So the thoughtful people have legislated on his administration, as they found it; weighed him in the balance of justice, and found him wanting. He is married in the hands of his voters! So they will have to throw him into the wheel again, and make something else of him besides "President!" For the present we will pass on, and take a view of the other matters as connected with the present interest ing crisis in our country's history, and the pending canvass.

When the Numidian King was carried captive to Rome, and saw the corruptions of her citizens; he returned from the city with contempt and said, "give me wealth and I will buy up the whole Republic!"

The word Politics, was originally used to convey an understanding of some pleasing sensation to the mind, but now completely a combination of ideas.

Religious—persecuting—politics!

Power—getting—politics; and money—making politics. We have some of those wonderful Politicians in Nauvoo, as well as elsewhere. It is said there was silence in heaven once for the space of half an hour. I presume to say, that there was not a creature, there that like a young crow, was more gab than brains; body, feathers, and all. But to return.

A grateful country writhing under the goadings and lashings of a profligate self-willed administration, have turned their eyes on the Prophet of the last days, as the only individual who can possibly re-establish union, and save the country from utter ruin. I for one hail the announcement of his name with joy, as the harbinger of peace, and safety. He fills to the latter the democratic test. "Honest and capable."

Truly, General Smith, and those cons need with him by ties stronger than death; do all labor more or less under severe pecuniary embarrassments.

Therefore it might be expected by many that we could not effect any thing, as all the offices of distinction is now procured with gold! but all who depend on gold for exaltation, should go and learn a prophetic lesson from the Bible. When Simon the Sorcerer, saw that through the laying on of the Apostle's hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money; but Peter said, "thy money perish with thee because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money; thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter." The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof. He rules the storm and controuls the boisterous winds; and we go forth in the name of the mighty God of Israel.

As say some, Henry Clay is justly entitled to the preference, he has been a public servant, and stood by the country's interest.

I say nay, I will offer two reasons, and the third will I not withhold, why Henry Clay has not the preference. He has some twenty years been standing in direct opposition, if my memory serves me right, to him whom "all Asia and the world, south Carolina and Louisiana, acknowledge to be the standard of Democracy."

We will soon examine a few items in the last farrowed Address of Andrew Jackson to his confiding countrymen.

My father was a regular soldier during the last war, conducted by Jackson as commander in chief, which you have before learned. During his service at N. Orleans, he was detailed from his country's service by Col. Butler, Adjutant General of the Southern Army, for his clerk, and in that capacity served General Jackson, being one of his household.

There he was fully instructed in, and taught the true principles of democracy; and although I never saw my father afterwards. Yet I was taught the true principles of democracy by my surviving friends; and early contracted a love of country, and a zealous disposition to advance with my might each of her interests. I have always supported Jackson's pretensions to office, but never for Van Buren, only when his name was associated with Jackson.

So it may be said of Tennessee, from her earliest pioneers, to that of her last grown-up youth. In examining his history we see him crossing the Alleghany, a beardless stranger, with knapsack and rifle, no power or patronage to recommend him to the friendship of burlesque fathers, only, a congenial spirit. They received him with open arms, and thus conferred upon him every office known to their constitution and laws that he desired. Their sons have stood by him in every crisis, in every struggle, in every peril. Retrospect the high way of his fame, and sure there will be the bones of a Tennesseean found mouldering on every field of his glory; and sir, he is, and ever will be grateful for those preferences. With the affection of a father, in his last blessing to his beloved children, he bids adieu, and consoles us on the happy and prosperous condition of this country, while frankly and candidly he bequeaths his valuable instructions and advice; declaring us to be a happy and prosperous people; then adds:

"Our Constitution is no longer a doubtful experiment; but at the end of nearly half a century, we find it has preserved unimpaired the liberties of the people, secured the rights of property, and our country has improved and is flourishing beyond any former example in the history of nations."

Actuated by a sincere desire to do justice to every nation, and to preserve the blessings of peace, our intercourse with them has been conducted on the part of this government, in the spirit of frankness.

"Difficulties of old standing have been surmounted by friendly discussion, and the mutual desire to be just and the claims of our citizens which had been long withheld, have at length been acknowledged and adjusted."

"In the union of these states, there is a sure foundation for the hopes of freedom, and for the happiness of the people. At every hazard, and by every sacrifice this Union must be preserved."

If the Union is once severed, the line of separation will grow wider and wider, and the controversies which are now debated, and settled in the halls of legislation, will then be tried in fields of battle, and be determined by the sword.

Neither should you deceive yourselves with the hope, that the first line of separation would be the permanent one.

"The first line of separation would not last for a single century; new fragments would be torn off, and new leaders would spring up, and this great and glorious republic, would be broken into a multitude of petty states; without commerce, without credit, jealous of one another, armed for mutual aggressions, and loaded with taxes to pay armies, leaders, &c."

"No citizen whatever, who loves his country would in any case whatever resort to forcible resistance unless he clearly saw the time had come, when a free man should prefer death to submission, for if such a struggle is once begun, and the citizens of one section of the country are arrayed in arms against those of another in doubtful conflict, let the battle result as it may, there will be an end of the Union and with it an end to the hopes of freedom."

"No free government can stand without virtue in the people, and a lofty spirit of patriotism."

"Justice full and ample justice, to every portion of the United States, should be the ruling principle of every free man, and should guide the deliberations of every public body, whether it be state or national."

"It would cease to be a government, and unworthy of the name if it had not power to enforce its own laws, within its own sphere of action."

Here sir, is democracy; then who will say that Van Buren has not departed the faith?

"But Sir we have a man who will carry out the principles of democracy to the very letter. He is that the God of Heaven designs to save this nation from destruction, and preserve the constitution."

The best men have always been the most persecuted. Remove the cause of this Union and the government will be broken up in an instant.

Ambitious aspirants wish to put down the rule and authority that God has established, taking the dignity and honor to themselves, to be divided among them but soon this bloody minds of men would be stirred, but England could not brook the double sway of Hal and Shakespeare."

So America cannot, will not bear the sway of petty tyrants.

All the world who are acquainted with General Smith, can bear testimony to the fact, that his humanity, is only equalled by his courage. At any one, I heard a good man say that he deserved to have his head placed under the guillotine.

So it was said of Andrew Jackson in Congress 1834: that for such deeds as he had done, the subjects of a King, would have chopped his head off. Indeed it is lamentably true that men who are accounted men of honor, and have an elevated standing in society, decide like Solomon's fool, and disseminate the seeds of discord and falsehood among persons who would otherwise be friendly disposed.

And although the Constitution of our Republic guarantees to every man the right to worship Almighty God, according to the dictates of his own conscience; and we have so many denominations of professed Christians who are protected by law, as was the case, when Jesus made his first advent into the world, yet mirabile dictu, so soon as the Lord God has sent a servant to prune his vineyard for the last time; Bani is invoked, and his priests under the most solemn pretensions of sanctity, let loose their battery a perfect sluice of persecution and falsehood, good God good devil. At all hazards we must put down this sect of the Nazirinos, for our craft depends all our gain, so wonderfully religious cannot by any means permit a Mormon to stay in their houses, or give them a bit of bread to alleviate hunger, in the midst of plenty, so that our brethren, have passed days together without a morsel to eat, or a shelter to cover them from the storm, among shouting Christians; though they travel from house to house. The only comfort they get, from the self righteous sects of the day, is to have every abominable falsehood stated about them by Christian Priests.

Every sentiment of honor and principle of justice must be extinct in the bosom of that man, who under shadow of truth, and particularly of sanctity, would be guilty of disseminating a report, to affect the private, political, or religious character, of any individual, who is unknown to them, only from lying rumors.

Our form of Government purports to be such as to protect sacred every individual's person and character. And evidently that species of government is best, and its citizens most virtuous who looks on an injury done to an individual, as an injury done to the whole family, our common country. Of what value sir would be a good name, if its possessor is to be assailed and condemned without an opportunity of being heard?

Our doctrine is "principles," and it is shown this doctrine is disregarded, or annihilated, which is nearly the case at present, then a dissolution of our political fabric, will speedily follow. It is truly to be regretted that men are so void of principles as to give credit to every liar that goes the rounds with a budget of slander to peddle out. Some men declare that they do believe this, that, and the other, merely because some hireling priest has made the statement. This sir is just the way they believe the bible.

Satan was so much determined to rule in heaven, that he instigated rebellion there. This is not the sectarian heaven, as a matter of course, for this is within "the bounds of time and space." The case is plain that men do not believe half they say they do, but make a pretext of certain-falsities, in order to justify themselves in a course of abuse to others; let it down for certain that when I see, or hear of a man or set of men mobbing, or mistreating others on account of their religion or politics, that this very same posse is descended from the torments of 776, for our fathers on this account framed the constitution, and many died in the contest maintaining it. But says the irreligious libertine, we must put down every thing that is calculated to enlighten and instruct the people. Even if they have no better excuse than the murderer who shot the Indian. Though the case is just as plain. The Indian was climbing a tree and was then shot by a white man. His companion enquired of the white man why he shot his friend; the reply was I took him for a bear. Well said the Indian, white man, shoot Indian upon a tree with red leggings on for a bear. Well I'm done. So sir, if there is any democracy, or any of the principles of our Whig fathers of '76 in this course I'm done.

Not so, but a desire to uproot this government, spread devastation, and drench this happy land in blood. Both fowl and beast. Slay the Prophets and Saints, under the feigned, empty name Democracy. Such democracy remains in the bosom of the Jackdaw, who became tired of his old associates, and took it into his head to be cock of the walk. On a time there was to be a meeting of all the principal grandees of the feathered tribe; and the conceited jackdaw took it into his head to be quite superior to those his equals, that he was accustomed to associate with. Accordingly he obtained a suit from a peacock in a neighbouring farm yard. Soon he divested himself of his own familiar dress drew on his borrowed one, and away to the grand gala he went.

Prompted to the highest pitch by pride and ambition, with the fondest hopes of petulant exultation, imagination soaring high, soon he appeared in the grand auto-de-fe in shining attire. He strutted side by side of the presiding officer, like some I have seen never satisfied unless they are side by side with those in the uppermost seats. Things all went on well until the new-made creature became so much excited, that in an ecstasy he began the old chatter. When his counterfeited was detected; and out he was hissed with thumps and kicks. He after awhile returned to his old companion, but they would have nothing to do with him at all; so he wandered a vagabond that neither house or party regarded, more than a Jew does a pig. A fair sample of things in our midst.

You know, sir, that magic has many mysteries connected with it. There is a power after awhile to be exercised sufficient to bring fire down from heaven, in the presence of men to deceive them.

Alas! a as I who can but see it now? The magicians of Egypt could do great things, but the rod of Moses did more. A clergyman lecturing his audience, was strenuously impressing on them to follow after the good old way of the Fathers. A man present, eyed him closely as he proceeded, and said, I like thee grand fathers Peter and Paul best. Still he continued his discourse, and said, brethren, I tell you these new things will not do. The scriptures are a mystery, and he that does not believe they are, does not believe them at all. God is without body, parts, or passions, and he dwells away beyond the bounds of time and space, on the tip top of the topless throne! Ho massa, says an old negro, present, why, he no misty! I tant no God 'all, he dwells no whar, nor can't be home. So now sir, you see that an untutored African could offer better reasons than the hireling priesthood of the age. Surely then, the learned priests may lay down their spectacles, when we through the power of God, declare the truth to them.

For now I speak, and Jesus reigns; We'll praise the Lord in higher strains. There is however one difficulty in the present age of learning and refinement. They are so imaginary, they receive a great many revelations from some source or other; so that they know a great deal more about our doctrine, and us as a people, than we know ourselves.

Religionists and politicians alike know all about us; we are imposters and a set of moral slaves; ready to be used by our leader, for any the vilest purposes. This is the statement of the priests in particular. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Truly their hearts are so full of adultery, murder and robbery, that they see nothing in any other light. They know it before they have learned any thing about it from those who are enquired, therefore it must be a revelation sent from the devil. "The wise decide before they hear! No Sir a man said it was a fool who decided a matter before he heard it.

Solomon was blessed above all men, with wisdom, knowledge and understanding, and that he might be capable in righteousness to judge of a matter, when he first heard the evidence. The wise men of the present age decide, but never want to hear the evidence. A reverend self-styled orthodox clergyman, exalting himself above his equals, was contending in a very zealous manner with a Campbellite lady, on the necessity of being born again. The lady denied any thing like a spiritual birth, of which we could have a certain knowledge, but finally agreed, that it was necessary to be born of water. Her little son, sat listening with the greatest attention to the argument. Soon he began to cry, the fond mother enquired what was the matter, my son? After some hesitation the little urchin replied, Ma, I don't want to be born again, for who knows, but I might then be a gal.

It is just so with all the learned of the age, they cannot agree to be born again, for if they did, they might have to yield obedience to the requirements of heaven; and some body would then be sure to persecute, mock and revile them.

Why is Campbellism, so much like the carved head, that the wolfes saw in the cook shop?

Because it has so pretty an outside, while within it has neither brains, soul, or spirit.

Why was John Calvin, so much worse than a butcher?

Because he burnt Michael Servetus, at the Calvinistic religious stake!

Why were Calvin's followers in New England determined to shed the blood of all who dared dissent from their dogmas?

Because Calvin breathed into them the breath of life, and brought them into existence.

Why are all the world disposed to persecute the saints?

It is only those who are influenced, by a spirit contrary to the principles of justice and honor.

The great excellence of some noted men consists in defamation and detracting from the real worth or character of others; and then they single out the best man on earth. Being themselves "whited sepulchres," full of rottenness and blackness; dyed in the world like the loafer, have the means always at hand to black their boots; need only to rub them against their own character.

I promised to give my reasons why Henry Clay is not to have any preference above others as to a claim for the Presidency.

First, for some twenty years he has been battling in opposition to him, who was acknowledged the "Standard of democracy." Second, it seems that he positively refuses to make his principle of politics public, and I think Whigs should learn a useful lesson from the experience of 1840 in electing John Tyler. And thirdly, the greatest objection is, that if he is elected, some three to five hundred thousand free born American citizens, must drag out a miserable existence under persecution and tyranny; or pull up stakes and go to Oregon, and there set up a government of their own, by his Majesty's royal permission.

The devil offered Jesus a great expanse of country, "all the glories of the world," if he would fall down and worship him, when indeed the dusky inhabitant of hell had not a foot to give.

So now, sir, we plainly see that there is but one alternative left the people of the United States, to save their country from utter destruction. That is to elect a man to the first office in their gift. The Presidency of the United States, who ever has been true to his trust, under the most trying circumstances, that mortal man ever encountered in this generation, on American soil. In perils and dangers, in prosperity and adversity, with undeviating perseverance, is onward in his course, steady and firm. Such a man is our worthy countryman, Gen. Smith. And sir, without fear of contradiction on the score of truth, with every confidence, I can say, that all honorable men resemble Joseph Smith; therefore it is necessary, it is due to justice and humanity, for every man who considers himself to be an honorable, and honest man to search diligently, and enquire carefully into the character of Gen. Smith, before they attempt to cast any aspersions on his character. As a friend to justice I would advise all men to imitate him in two things, at least. "Let all the ends they aim at be the good of their country." And be sure never to cower down under oppression, and tyranny, to fall in any great undertaking.

Those of his enemies who have been longest and best acquainted with him and his history, already believe that he will be President; for say they, "I never know him fail of any thing he ever undertook; the Lord surely is with him." These are truly wonderful concessions for those who do not believe in a God at all. Thus you see sir, that they indirectly acknowledge, that he is more worthy than all the other candidates together. Thus it has quite unexpectedly been the case, with honorable men who have only been guided by vague rumor, when they saw and heard for themselves, they have been perfectly satisfied. Of the many thousands of visitors that come to this place every year, very few go away with the same impressions on their minds, as they come with. They behold in the Prophet every virtue and accomplishment desirable to render a whole world of mankind comfortable and happy. He is cheerful and lively; brave and affectionate. Tendency and kindness seem to pervade every heart around him. He has no horns or hoofs, as the quadruped that, by his key-up voice, granted the palm, and gave the preference to the first Anglo-Saxon king. Eats, sleeps and wears the same kind of apparel, eats the same kind of food as other great men. Loves his friends and pities his enemies. And finally I can of a truth say, humanity and philanthropy are the predominant characteristics of this great man whom the Lord delights to honor. Come all the world, come every honest man, see and hear for yourselves. Then you will find a greater man than him whom the Queen of Sheba visited to hear his wisdom.

To all who love their country in truth I would say, the maxim of the old story's wife would be profitably observed. At one extreme dark period of the Revolution, after many of the half-starved soldiers, had become disheartened and retired from the service. Gen. Marston's and Col. Harry's noble, daring souls being yet unsubdued, choosing death rather than dishonorable submission, gathered up their effects and the two set out alone for the interior of the country, on the almost hopeless undertaking as a last struggle to reinforce their little Spartan band of Continentals, that they might renew the conflict. One night after dark, while the rain was falling in torrents, they arrived at an inn. They called and soon a lighted taper, hove in view. As soon as the old man holding it discovered their regimentals, he began to make excuses and objected to taking them in. After many words he was just going to turn them off, when his angelic wife and daughter stepped out and said he could take them in, and should do so; and reminded him that the war had not yet terminated, nor was it known what would be the issue, for Washington was yet in the field, and it was well to have a friend at court. The Presidential contest is terminated, Joseph Smith is yet in the field; if elected he will keep his pledge, which is to administer the laws in justice to all concerned. What the people wills he will sanction; then all honest men will have a friend at court. To elect Van Buren is to sanction the Sub-treasury and standing army. To elect Clay would be for America to humble herself. But to elect Gen. Smith would be to re-establish union, extend our commerce and again become a happy people.

With the highest regard, yours, A. YOUNG.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT.

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

THE STATE CONVENTION.

Our friends must not forget the 17th inst. This is the time set apart for holding our State Convention, in this city, for nominating electors, for this State. Let the friends of Gen. Smith not be derelict in the performance of their duty. Many important questions, involving the election of Gen. Smith, are expected to be laid before the people upon that occasion, highly necessary to be understood. Come to the rescue. Rally around the standard of freedom which Gen. Smith has raised, battle for liberty side by side with this patriot enter the political campaign, determined by all honorable means, to throw off the great burthen of corruption under which our beloved country groans, and victory will be the reward of our exertions. Every friend to the triumph of Gen. Smith should be vigilant;—vigilance is the price of liberty;—and use every exertion to secure his success. Delay not a moment—the time is short—what remains to be done must be done quickly.

RIOTS IN CONGRESS.

From our recent accounts from Congress, it seems that some of the members of that honorable body are prepared for any and every thing but legislating for the good of the country. Clamor, ungovernable ebullitions of passion, boisterous debates on threadbare and isolated topics, brigadoons and blackguardism, to aggroess their minds, while things that are of vital interest to the welfare of our country, are thrown aside as things of nought. The eschequetry of our nation's dignity has been stained by two recent riots in the highest deliberative council of the American Republic. Upon both occasions, fights, profane swearing and language the most ridiculous and abusive, was freely indulged in, and a general melee desecrated the halls of the Capitol.

Here follows a couple of extracts from the New York Herald, of the 27th ult. "CONGRESS—RIOT IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES."

Our accounts from Washington are of the most painful and disgraceful character. It seems that on Tuesday morning, in a debate involving the opinions of Mr. Clay on the tariff, a quarrel took place between two of the members, which increased in a few seconds to a regular row, or miniature riot, in which blows and bad language were exchanged with great liberality, within the bar of the House, and during one of its regular sittings.

Such conduct, on any pretence whatever, is utterly disgraceful to the House of Representatives—to the present Congress—to the nation at large—to the very age and time of day. It can only be paralleled in the British House of Commons, or in a less enlightened—less moral—less intelligent than the present in all that confers dignity on human nature.

A full account from various sources, of these disgraceful scenes, will be found under the proper head of this day's paper.

In the meantime, what is to be done to reclaim the character of the House of Representatives, and blot out the black spot on its reputation? Something should be done stronger than soap and water—why should not such brawlers and rioters be formally expelled by the orderly and reputable?—sent back to their constituents, labelled "broken crockery"? The business of the nation can never be well done, or even done at all, in the midst of such disgraceful scenes—scenes that would dishonor the Five Points. Indeed, up to this time, Congress has done little or nothing. They have spent nearly five months without a single efficient act. Is this to continue for ever? The representatives of the rottery of the Five Points, now in session at the States Prison at Sing Sing, are more industrious, orderly and useful, than the representatives of the honesty and virtue of the nation, now assembled in the stately capital at Washington. The world is turned upside down.

"PUBLIC OUTRAGE IN THE LEGISLATIVE HALLS OF CONGRESS."

The legislative halls of Congress have been again desecrated by a brawl and fight among the members. The whole proceeding was as disgraceful as the enormities of our free systems of government could desire. According to the statement of the proceedings in the public journals, it appears the subject of debate in the house was the tariff bill. Mr. White, who had the floor observed, in reply to Mr. Rathbun, in relation to what Mr. Rathbun said he could prove, that if he could prove a bargain between Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay, in the year 1825, he would prove a "damned lie." Mr. Rathbun said, "do you intend to apply the lie to me personally?" To which Mr. White replied, "I do God damn you." By the time these words were out of his mouth, each aimed a blow at the other. The members surrounded the combatants, and cried, "let them fight it out." A man by the name of Moore, from Kentucky, interfered, and attempted to turn out of doors, the Sergeant-at-arms, who was endeavoring to separate the combatants. In the melee he fired his pistol, and wounded severely one of the police in the thigh. The wounded man was taken away, and the fight terminated, and peace was again gradually restored. But this was not all. As an appropriate force to this melodrama, the two honorable personages, who had called each other liars, and struck each other with their clenched hands, made speeches to the House, confessed their folly, shook hands, and swore brothers ever after—all of which was duly sanctioned by the House, and then the business of legislation went on as usual.

How does the patriot and well wisher of his country view such transactions, occurring with those who have the paternal watchcare and oversight of our national institutions? Only think of it—a fight in the Senate Chamber! How it will go to foreign nations and be hurled as a fire-brand against republican moderation! Lords of regal patronage!—artists of kingly dynasties!—look to the American Congress for examples of dignity and patterns of deliberation! Such transactions are not only detrimental to our exalted character abroad, but they are disgusting and loathsome in the estimation of every lover of good order at home.

O, fallen, fallen Senate! O, degenerated people! How have you departed from the examples of the greatest and best of men—our national Father, our beloved Washington! O, people, if there is one spark of patriotism warming your bosoms, if there remains, with faithful memory, a single recollection of the character and goodness of that illustrious man, let them stimulate you to use your every exertion to prevent such blots of corruption from sulling the future history of Congress. Something must be done to check the growing turbulence and riotous disposition that pervades our land. If not, the evil which now, by efficient measures might be subdued, will grow into a monster to undermine the fair fabric of liberty, and consummate the ultimate overthrow of our national happiness. This monster is stalking abroad unchecked and untrammelled, levelling everything in its power that is magnificent and benevolent and crushing beneath its despicable wheel every aspiration of patriotism and every unfettered germ of freedom. The sacred temples of religion, our courts of justice, and the harmony of the social compact, have been profaned and outraged by the ungovernable turpitude, the ferocious barbarism and licentiousness of such hardened and reckless desperadoes. The great scramble for office by political jugglers, the hardness and presumptuousness of demagogues, is the great fountain of evil which threatens this nation with a speedy annihilation of our liberties. But there is virtue enough in the people to save the country if they will awake to energy and vigilance and not be lulled to sleep by these political hot-purs, whose lips chant the melodies of liberty, but whose hearts foster and nurse the seed of certain dissolution. They prate about patriotism and love of country; but the ends of ambition must be obtained though it should be over the ruins of our free institutions. They would "burn a neighbor's house to boil their own eggs." As fast as such persons come into office the voice of the virtuous people should hurry these minions from their mushroom power, and cause them to be supplanted by good and wise men who will watch over the welfare of the people with a careful eye. Let good men be the inevitable choice of the people and our country still is safe. Let the word go abroad—let the cry echo from hill to hill, top to valley to valley—from the palace to the cottage—throughout the length & breadth of this nation—seat Gen. Joseph Smith in the presidential chair, and our once blooming republic will again thrive and flourish as in the days of its primeval glory, when a Washington broke the chains of slavery from her neck and raised her to a full-fruition of national immortality. Look to him, ye virtuous and patriotic, rally around his standard as the best standard of liberty; fight under his banner, for the salvation of a country whose freedom is jeopardized and whose liberty is endangered. Do this, and his brilliant talents, the genius of his expanded mind, and the patriotic motives that inspire him, will raise such an impregnable bulwark of defence around our threatened liberties as to secure them from the innovations of corrupt men and transmit their blessings for the enjoyment of posterity.

Far the Neighbor.

To the friends and voters of Hancock County, Elder William Smith, (late representative) wishes to say to the friends and voters of Hancock County, that, in consequence of the sickness of his family, now in the hands of a doctor in the City of Philadelphia, he relinquishes the idea of offering himself as a candidate for a seat in the next Legislature of Illinois; but, as a matter of the highest consideration, would recommend his brother Hyrum Smith, as a suitable and capable person to fill that office, and worthy of the people's confidence and votes. O, sustain a democracy throughout the land, and ever go forth at Jehovah's command! And while the old farmer yet swings the scythe, Or follows the plough; Good Democrats tread, O tread on the tail of Old Cow Nodd!

We are sorry that our late representative the Hon. Wm. Smith is about to withdraw, for the present time from the political arena. His talents are known and appreciated, his conduct in the last session of the Legislature proved him to be a man of talent and of genius, a patriot and a statesman, and a man every way qualified to maintain the interests of the people he represented.

We know of no person that would be more qualified to fill his station than Gen. Hyrum Smith (his brother). We are not informed whether the general will accept of the office or no, if he will, we don't know of any gentleman in Hancock Co., who would be more competent. Gen. Smith is a man of sterling integrity, deep penetration and brilliant talents. He is well versed in politics and as unchangeable as the everlasting hills. He is a man of probity and virtue, and an unwavering patriot.

If Gen. Hyrum Smith will allow his name to be brought forth we go for him, and we know from the confidence and respect that is entertained of him as a gentleman and a patriot he will be elected. What say you General?

A new paper has been started in Bolleville, St. Clair Co., Ill., entitled The Politician. It advocates Gen. Smith's claims for the Presidency. All right—may success attend it. Hang the banner upon the outer wall.

STATE CONVENTION.

At a public meeting held in this city, Messrs. Reynolds Cahoon, Edward Hunter, and John Paylor, were appointed as a committee of arrangement to make provisions for the delegation from the different counties who may honor us with their presence.

We therefore respectfully invite gentlemen of the delegation who may visit us on that occasion to call upon us at the Recorder's office, at the Temple; where we shall be happy to wait upon them, and shall take pleasure in having the honor of their participation in the hospitalities of our city.

For the Neighbor.

Before taking my farewell of your beautiful and growing city, I avail myself of a few leisure moments in expressing some of my views and conclusions of the prophet Joe and the Mormons. In the first place allow me to say that the Mormons as a people have been most woefully misrepresented and abused, and in ninety-nine instances out of a hundred by persons who know nothing of their principles and doctrines. Before visiting this place my mind was very much prejudiced against the Mormons, from reports which I had listened to in travelling through the different states, and I presume if I had never taken occasion to inform myself of their religion and views my mind would have still remained in the same condition. There is not a city within my knowledge that can boast of a more enterprising and industrious people than can Nauvoo, her citizens are enlightened and possess many advantages in the arts and sciences of the day which other cities (of longer standing) cannot boast, in a word Nauvoo bids fair to soon out rival any city in the West.

General Smith is a man who understands the political history of his country, as well as the religious history of the world, as perfect as any politician or religiousist I have ever met with.

He advances ideas which, if could be carried into effect would greatly benefit the nation in point of commerce and finance, and while he maintains, and philosophically shows that our country is approaching a fearful crisis which if not arrested, will end in disgrace to the country, and cause our national banner to hug its mast in disgust and shame, clearly points out the remedy.

Shall the liberty which our fathers purchased at so dear a price be wrrenched from the hands of their children? Shall our national banner which floated so proudly in the breeze at the declaration of independence be disgraced and refuse to show its motto? Shall we, as American citizens fold our arms and look quietly on while the shackles of slavery are being fastened upon our hands, and while men only seek office for the purpose of exalting themselves into power, I say, shall we still rush blindly on and hasten on our own destruction by placing men in power who neither regard the interests of the people, nor the prayers of the oppressed? Every American citizen will shout at the top of his voice, NO.

Mr. Smith's views of the power and policy of the government manifest a republican spirit, and if carried out, would soon place the nation in a prosperous condition and brighten the prospects of those who now have to toil incessantly to support the profligate expenditures and luxurious equipage of the present rulers and representatives of our nation.

Joseph Smith is a man who is in every way calculated to make a free people happy. He is liberal in his sentiments and allows every man the free expression of his feeling on all subjects; he is sociable and easy in his manners; is confident and familiar on all exciting topics, expresses himself freely and plainly, on the different methods of administering the government, while he is not ashamed to let the world know his views, and criticise upon his opinions.

I am in no way connected with the Mormon Church, but am disposed to listen to reason in all cases. I have heretofore been a warm advocate of the measures of the Whig party, but considering General Smith's views and sentiments to be worthy the applause of every citizen of the United States, and especially the yeomanry of the country, I shall in every instance advocate his principles, and use my utmost influence in his favor.

I am, Sir Yours, in haste,
AN AMERICAN.

MUNICIPAL COURT.

CITY OF NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.
Third day, Regular Term, May 8, 1844.

On Habeas Corpus. Counsel for Smith, J. B. BACKENSTOS, Clerk.
This case came before the court upon a return to a writ of habeas corpus, which was issued by this court on the 6th of May, instant, upon petition of Joseph Smith, Senr. as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, }
City of Nauvoo, }
To the Honorable Municipal Court in and for the City of Nauvoo:—

The undersigned, your petitioner, must respectfully represent that he is an inhabitant of said city; your petitioner further represents that he is under arrest in said city, and is now in the custody of one John D. Parker, deputy sheriff of the county of Hancock, and State of Illinois; that the said Parker holds your petitioner by virtue of a writ of "capias ad respondendum," issued by the clerk of the circuit court, of the county of Hancock, and State of Illinois, at the instance of one Francis M. Higbee, of said county, requiring your petitioner to answer the said Francis M. Higbee, of a plea of the case; damage five thousand dollars. Your petitioner further represents that the proceedings against him are illegal; that the said warrant of arrest is informal, and not of that character which the law recognizes as valid; that the said writ is wanting and deficient in the plea therein contained; that the charge or complaint which your petitioner is therein required to answer, is not known to the law.

Your petitioner further avers that the said writ does not disclose in any way or manner whatever, any cause of action, which might be your petitioner's most respectfully submits for your consideration; together with a copy of the said warrant of arrest which is herewith attached.

Your petitioner further states that this proceeding has been instituted against him without any just or legal cause; and further that the said Francis M. Higbee, is actuated by no other motive than a desire to persecute and harass your petitioner, for the base purpose of gratifying feelings of revenge, which, without any cause, the said Francis M. Higbee has for a long time been fostering and cherishing.

Your petitioner further states that he is not guilty of the charge preferred against him, or of any act against him, by which the said Francis M. Higbee could have any charge, claim or demand, whatever against your petitioner.

Your petitioner further states, that he verily believes that another subject the said Francis M. Higbee had in instituting the proceeding, was, and is, to throw your petitioner into the hands of his enemies, that he might the better carry out a conspiracy which has for some time been brewing against the life of your petitioner.

Your petitioner further states that the suit which has been instituted against him has been instituted through malice, private pique, and corruption.

Your petitioner would therefore most respectfully ask your honorable body, to grant him the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus, that the whole matter may be thoroughly investigated, and such order made, as the law and justice demands in the premises, and your petitioner will ever pray.

To the Sheriff of said county:—GREETING.

We command you that you take Joseph Smith, if to be found within your county, and him safely keep, so that you have his body before the circuit court of said county of Hancock, on the first day of the next term thereof, to be holden at the court house in Carthage on the third Monday in the month of May, instant, to answer Francis M. J. B. BACKENSTOS, Clerk.

By D. E. HEAD, Deputy.

The sheriff is directed to hold the within named defendant to bail in the sum of five thousand dollars.

J. B. BACKENSTOS, Clerk.

What is the point to try? Those papers know no crime, this court knows no crime, there is no merits, no existence of anything, it is an ignis fatuus, a will-o'-wisp; to arrest somebody for doing nothing; to have the privilege of trying a law suit about nothing; the court never says Francis M. Higbee ever preferred any thing, if there can any merits be hatched up, we will try it.

J. Smith was satisfied that this thing can be brought to trial it appears I am a prisoner, and by the authority of the circuit court. I petitioned this court for a hearing I am a prisoner, and aver that it is a malicious prosecution, and a wicked conspiracy, got up by men for the purpose of harassing me, and deceiving me into their hands. I want to show that this man has joined a set of men, who have entered into a conspiracy to take away my life. After hearing the case, you have power to punish, imprisonment, or fine, or any thing you please, you have a right to punish the offender, if I am a criminal you have a right to punish me, and send me to the circuit court, but if I am as innocent as the angels of heaven, you have power to send the prosecutor to trial if crime is proved against him. They have no merits in their cause, I want to show up their conspiracy, that these men are working the basest corruption, they have lifted up their hands against innocence; you have power to hear the petitioner on his oath. I will show you a precedent. Look at the federal court of this district; the case was made out by affidavit, which I swore to before the court.

The habeas corpus is granted on the testimony of the petitioner, it is the law in Blackstone, that where no other matter is in existence, and the prisoner swears he is innocent, and his character for truth is supported by good testimony he must be discharged, and then go away as free as the pond eagle. If I have the privilege of testimony under oath, to the facts that they make slander of, then they cannot do any thing with it. Suppose that I am an eye witness to the crime of adultery, or any other crime, and know verily for myself, that the man is guilty of adultery, or other crime, and I speak of it, the man may sue me for damages although I know the man to be guilty, but if I swear to it in a court, he cannot hurt me. If I have the privilege of giving testimony under oath, they can never do any thing with me, but if you discharge me on the insufficiency of the writ; they can prosecute me again and again, but if you give me a fair hearing they cannot prosecute me again; I want the oath to go to the world; I must make statements of facts in order to defend myself. I must tell the story in its true light, under oath; then I can be forever set free; may I not have the privilege of being protected by law? The peace of myself, my family, my happiness, and the happiness of this city depend upon it.

The court allowed him to proceed with the case.

Mr. Stiles said, This is a malicious prosecution, and we have averred that it is malicious, and have a right to prove it. There is an insufficiency in the writ, the writ did not show any crime had been committed, and we can show that we are not guilty of any plea in the case; there is no charge or case against us; the whole matter is corrupt, and malicious and wicked.

JOSEPH SMITH sworn.—Said, I must commence when Francis M. Higbee was foaming against me, and the Municipal Court, in my house. Francis M. Higbee said he was grieved at me, and I was grieved at him. I was willing on my part to settle all difficulties, and he promised if I would go before the City Council and tell them he would drop every thing against me forever. I have never mentioned the name of Francis M. Higbee disrespectfully from that time to this; but have been entirely silent about him; if any one has said that I have spoken disrespectfully since then, they have lied; and he cannot have any cause whatever. I want to testify to this court of what occurred a long time before John C. Bennett left this city. I was called on to visit Francis M. Higbee; I went and found him on a bed on the floor.

[Here follows testimony which is too indelicate for the public eye or ear; and we would here remark, that so revolting, corrupt, and disgusting has been the conduct of most of this clique, that we feel to dread having any thing to do with the publication of their trials; we will not however offend the public eye, or ear with a repetition of the foulness of their crimes any more.]

Bennet said Higbee pointed out the spot where he had seduced a girl, and that he had seduced another. I did not believe it, I felt hurt, and labored with Higbee about it; he swore with uplifted hands, that he had lied about the matter. I went and told the girls' parents, when Higbee and Bennet made affidavits about me so as to bind the family. I brought Francis M. Higbee before Brigham Young, Hyrum Smith and others; Bennet was present, when they both acknowledged that they had done these things, and asked us to forgive them. I got vexed, my feelings had been hurt; Higbee has been guilty of adultery, communication, perjury, &c.; which I am able to prove by men who heard them confess it. I also preferred charges against Bennet, the same charges which I am now telling; and he got up and told them it was the truth, when he pleaded for his life, and begged to be forgiven; this was his own statement before sixty or seventy men; he said the charges were true against him and Higbee. I have been endeavoring to throw out shafts to defend myself, because they were corrupt, and I knew they were determined to ruin me; he has told the public that he was determined to prosecute me, because I slandered him, although I tell nothing but the truth. Since the retirement of our diffidencies, I have not mentioned his name disrespectfully; he wants to bind my hands in the circuit court, and make me pay heavy damages for telling the truth. In relation to the conspiracy, I have not heard Francis M. Higbee say he would take away my life; but Chauncy Higbee, Charles A. Foster and Dr. Foster said they would shoot me; and the only offense against me telling the truth. I did say that Dr. Foster did steal a raw hide, I have seen him steal a number of times; these are the things that they now want to ruin me for; for telling the truth. When riding in the stage, I have seen him put his hand in a woman's bosom, and he also lifted up her clothes. I know that they are wicked, malicious, adulterous, bad characters; I say it under oath; I can tell all the particulars from first to last.

BRIGHAM YOUNG, sworn, With regard to Francis M. Higbee, at the time that is spoken of, I stopped opposite Mr. Law's store, we had been conversing with Dr. Bennett, when I came into the room, Francis Higbee rather recoiled and wished to withdraw; he went out and sat upon a pile of wood. He said it is all true, I am sorry for it. I wish it had never happened. I understood, Bennet who related some of the circumstances, he cried and begged of us to forgive him, and said if he could be permitted to stay in the city as a private individual he should be happy; that was about what he said; it is true, I am sorry for it I wish it had never been so; as we came up, Dr. Bennett, Mr. Higbee, and Mr. Smith had been talking about it, I have not mentioned it before. I knew of the whole affair, it was on the 4th of July, or a few days after—it was shortly after I came from England. I was in the City Council when Mr. Higbee said all was settled.

Cross-examined.—I have heard Dr. Bennett say all these things were facts; he acknowledged that Higbee had him, and that he had doctored him, he acknowledged that, and a great deal more.

I will make one statement in our conversation with Dr. Bennett. I told Dr. Bennett that one charge was seducing young women, and leading young men into difficulty—he admitted it—if he had let young men and women alone it would have been better for him.

SIDNEY RIGDON, sworn, In relation to the matters before the court I am unacquainted with I was sick at the time but I have heard it talked of back and fro.

Cross-examined.—I recollect Joseph Smith came to me with a complaint against Higbee and Bennet, and made affidavit that it was true. I have the affidavit in my house. I went to see Higbee on last Saturday, I found him at Mr. Morrisons—he was waiting for a steam boat—I endeavored to prevail on him to relinquish his undertakings; he said I have no character in Nauvoo, for I have none to lose, I tried to convince him that he had a character and might be looked upon with respect, but he flatly contradicted me, and said he had none, and that was the reason why he persecuted Joseph Smith—as he had no character, he did not care what he did—he had nothing to lose by it—that is the substance of our conversation.

HYRUM SMITH sworn.—I recollect a settlement of difficulties between Francis M. Higbee and my brother Joseph, about which some of the court may recollect. I recollect Dr. Bennett asking forgiveness of the Lodge when there was about sixty present—Francis M. Higbee acknowledged that it was the truth, that he was sorry, and had been a thousand times; he acknowledged his connection with the woman on the hill; I did think he was with Dr. Bennett at the time, the statement of Dr. Bennett was, that he was guilty, he was sorry and asked forgiveness, he said he had seduced six or seven, he acknowledged it, and said if he was forgiven, he would not be guilty any more. Francis said he knew it was true, he was sorry and had been a hundred times; the very things that we had challenged him with, he acknowledged. I told Francis that it had better be settled, he said, Joseph had accused him—if his character was gone all was gone, he said he would settle it and they went into the room, he did not deny any charge, he said he was sorry, that he wanted it buried, and it was agreed to do so. Francis did not say any thing about his sickness, but Dr. Bennett made those observations to him that he had doctored him in the time of his sickness.

Cross-examined.—I asked Francis if he did not tell Dr. Bennett that he had seduced a girl, he replied, I told Dr. Bennett that I did seduce her, but I tell you I never did it; I told him for my own notion of things; I do not recollect of him saying that he had got a bad disorder with the French Girl; he said he should not have been seduced, if it had not been by Dr. Bennett, when charged with them, Francis said they were true; that they were alleged a hundred times; he said, "I will alter, I will save my character." I have never heard from brother Joseph any thing about his character; Joseph did not accuse him of any thing before the police; he said Francis had better take care. Francis was a little dissatisfied, but that difference was settled; I was present; he said he would not receive any thing again from abroad; he would not take any steps by hearsay, he would come to him and tell him, they were several present when this took place.

PORTER ROCKWELL sworn.—he recollects the conversation not very distinctly, but he did recollect that Francis M. Higbee acknowledged to Joseph Smith that he was guilty of the charges preferred against him.

Court adjourned for one hour and a half.

Court met.

MR. WHEELOCK, sworn.—With regard to this case I know nothing, but through a circumstance occurring at Nashville, Elder Bakke came to my house to preach, he preached and was upholding the authorities of the Church very much, he came over here and apostatized the same day; I then came over and went to see him, I asked him why he had changed his mind so quick; he said he had seen affidavits of the guilt of Mr. Smith, he told me Mr. Higbee was going about to the different conferences. I told him I thought he had better send some one else, his conduct was not the best and I knew of circumstances, that were not right. Once I was a mate on a Steam Boat, and Higbee was clerk; we had not much cabin; we had some legends on board; I and another had given up our room to some ladies for the night; it was my watch, and I went into the cabin for my Buffalo Robe, about one o'clock in the night, when I saw him leaning over the berth where one of the ladies slept; this was in the night—and he had no business there, nor gentleman had any right there; I gave up my berth to the ladies; I felt indignant at such conduct, his conduct towards the lady passengers was unbecoming, and particularly in one who professes to much virtue as he now does.

JOEL N. SMITH, sworn.—I have seen Francis M. Higbee go into rooms with females, but what their intentions were I did not know. I think he has done what which is not right. I should judge from conversation with him, that was the case; I presume he has a good many times; I might recollect twenty times, he has frequently told me things of that kind; it is a private case to be sure—he has told me, that he had commenced an action against Joseph Smith for seduction; I met Francis to day, I asked him about the fuss, when he said he had got Mr. Smith up for seduction; he said he should not come here—but did not say why. I recollect the time that he was sick when Dr. Bennett attended him, I went to see him nearly every day, I understood Mr. Higbee to say that he was prosecuting Mr. Smith for seduction; that he was up before the Municipal Court, he told me he supposed I was wanted to prove that he was a thief, whoremaster, and every thing else.

H. S. SNAPE, sworn.—I have several times had conversations with Higbee; I recollect that near two years ago there was a fuss about John C. Bennett's spiritual wife system before the High Court. I recollect a French woman coming up from Warsaw, and that Francis M. Higbee had medical assistance.

Dr. Bennett it ended him, Joseph Smith administered unto him but it was irksome; Higbee asserted that it was so, he did not contradict it, he promised to reform—he would do better, he would do so no more.

To The Editor of the Neighbor.

Sir,—By closely examining the Whig, and Democratic Journals of the day, I must confess that the face of my political judgment is entirely changed. I did suppose that the charge preferred by the Whigs against the Democrats, and also the charges preferred by the Democrats against the Whigs, were groundless; and based upon the principle of falsehood; but as charity covereth a multitude of sins, I am led to believe that their statements against each other are founded upon the principle of truth.

Now hear both sides of the question and then judge for yourself. Democrat vs. Whig. Mr. Duncan in a late speech made in the House of Representatives, says, "that if the same means are used at the ensuing election by the Whigs, to elect their candidate, that were used to elect Gen. Harrison, that candidate will take his exit to eternity in one month." He further says, "there is a providence that superintends this nation. He holds its destinies in His hand; His track is to be seen in every path; of the revolution that emancipated us, and he who cannot see His divine interposition throughout this administration is an infidel or a fool." He also predicts that "if the same means are used by the Federalists to secure the election of their candidate, at the approaching election, viz. drunken orgies, empty and profane songs, coon skins, hard cider carousals, and their kindred and criminal means, known as feasts, perjury, treason, falsehood, corruption, bribery, swindling, blasphemy, and the end to be effected by such means is to break down our free institutions, trample upon the constitution, and subvert human liberty; the end will be as has been, the workers of such iniquity will fall before the breath and vengeance of a just God, as grass before the scythe."

Now a popular opinion ranks this gentleman with the first men of the nation. I have no reason to dispute his testimony, and he, as an administrator of the law, and justice is in duty bound to rebuke such unconstitutional, unlimited, and unhallowed conduct. Whig vs. Democrat. The Hartford Weekly Journal says, "Look at Martin Van Buren, the leader of the Locco-Poco party, when he was a member of the New York convention for the purpose of revising the constitution of that state, he steadily opposed all extensions of the right of suffrage, and overruled so far as to oppose the amendment to allow old revolution soldiers to vote, because they did not possess two hundred dollars worth of property. That he was necessary to robbing the treasury, and that there was when he left the presidential chair, a national debt of thirty-four million five hundred thousand dollars, created by him for a tax paying community to liquidate; of being a warm advocate for the purpose of curtailing the wages of the laborer to six and a fourth cents, and a sheep's head and black, a day, and a coward because he dare not administer justice on any occasion where popular opinion is concerned." Now as popular opinion has ranked this editor with the talented men of the nation, I am bound to believe his statements to be founded upon the principle of truth, he is in the line of his duty while rebuking such unlimited corruption, and a gentleman of moral courage because he is not afraid to expose such unconstitutional abuses of the people's rights, therefore I am bound to believe, that both Whig and Democrat, has told the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

I understand by the scriptures that charity beareth all things, hopeth all things, becometh all things, and holds fast that which is good. Now we have proved by the Democrats that the Whigs, have rendered themselves unworthy of holding the reins of government by reason of bribery, and fraudulent corruption of every description.

And we have proved by the Whigs, that Martin Van Buren is a robber, a traitor, a coward, a traitor, and a friend to every country but his own.

We have believed all things according as the scriptures direct, and hope that neither Whig nor Democrat will succeed in their election to the presidential chair, the best thing then we can do is to hold fast to Gen. Joseph Smith for President of the United States; a man not so wise in his own eyes as in the opinion of others, whose religious and political talents, are composed of wisdom, truth, and the best political economy, and like the star of Bethlehem, has made its appearance in the West, to light up the withering lamp of 76, and tens of thousands of the sons and daughters of the old revolutionary heroes are flocking around the blaze of its glory; or like a Washington he wields his influence in favor of political rights, and against political demagogues, let the storms of popular clamor blow high or low, and at the ensuing election we will walk up to the ballot box like a chicken to its doeg, which will tell a tale that will make robbers flee to their Father in Kinderhook, political demagogues to their Father in Missouri, and mobbers to their Father in South Carolina, and mobbers to their Father in Missouri. Now let the names of Whig candidate, Democratic, Locco-Poco candidate, Federal candidate, Abolition candidate, Nullifying candidate, and Moderate candidate, fall like a hot potato, and insert the name of Gen. Joseph Smith candidate for President of the United States.

A REPLY.

We extract the following interesting communication from the Belleville Advocate.—Dr. Goforth is the same gentleman, who was delegated from St. Clair Co., to attend our State Convention.

Office of the Advocate.

Belleville, April 13, 1844.

Dr. W. G. Goforth, Sir,—Having learned that you have just returned from a visit to the city of Nauvoo, we should like, if it be not improper, to draw from your description of the ceremonies of the Latter Day Saints, the political views of Gen. Joseph Smith, in relation to the approaching presidential canvass, &c.

Respectfully yours,

R. K. FLEMING.

Mr. Editor—Responding to your polite request this morning, after addressing you with expressions of respectful deference, I tender you the following journal of my little visit North.

On the 2d of April I left Belleville, at six o'clock, in the morning, for St. Louis, arrived safe, took passage in the steamer Osprey, with my wife and youngest child, arrived at the wharf of the city of Nauvoo, Ill., at 8 o'clock, on the morning of the 5th. After visiting the house of a connection, I called on Gen. Joseph Smith—received, to him, a formal introduction, as given by a gentleman with whom I became acquainted on my passage thence.—But a fashionable and ceremonious interview here was offered; on account of the General's press of business, which, when transacted, in the space of two or three hours, was evidenced by the expression which ordinarily is exemplified by a great man. I returned to the place where my family were; and, after dinner, the General's coach, in the character of dignified distinction, was directed to convey me to his office, when and where I met him, had with him many important satisfactory gladdings through the vicissitudes of those days, and the days that are, waiting through the variety of persecutive exercises that against him, in his religious adaptations, had transpired; but, like a great man, he said that "Persecution is the favorite offspring of Satan, transformed into an angel of light. It is that bloody hypocritical monster, which carries a Bible, a Liturgy, and a bundle of Canons in one hand, with fire, fagot, and all the weapons invented by cruelty in the other, and with sanctified looks, distresses, seeks, or murders men, either because they love God, or because they cannot think alike." And closing this display of language, an expression was made to this intent,—"From the piety of the Martyrs, we may learn how to live, from their fortitude under persecution, how to suffer, and from their happy death, how to die." Thus, this interview rolled off.

On the Masonic Hall dedication occasion, 600 persons were at the formation of the procession characteristically regulated—a full band of music and a national salute. An address was delivered from the Stand by a Mr. Snow, that cannot, in this day, be excelled for pious language and Masonry.—A sentiment was asked for from me by Gen. Smith and his brother Hiram Smith. Taken as I was by surprise, a dreaded awkwardness overspread my feelings—fill, on rising to my feet, and casting my eyes over the vast audience, and seeing so many aged and respectable heads, Masonically I responded and expressed the sentiment first sprang in the excited ceremonies—for which a vote of thanks was tendered me at the audience.

The morning of the 6th opened with the joyous minglings of personal interviews—and the catered development of the falsehood that had spread abroad against the Mormons. In this day, attended their conference—the immense crowd of people who presented themselves on this occasion would not be less than 25,000 or 30,000. The sermon that was preached this day was by a Mr. Sidney Rigdon; his talents and Herculean display of eloquence on the subject of the Rise and Progress of the Church of Latter Day Saints, for the last fourteen years—where he dated his birth in gospel light, could not but be associated with the honest approbation of an unprejudiced mind.

Recollection on my part fails to bring up his superior in the grand sweep through the trying data of religious truth.

"True Religion plays not the tyrant, plants no faith in blood, Nor bears destruction on her chariot wheels. But stoops to polish, support and redress, And banters her grandeur on the public good." And decisively commands from my heart an expression, that springs up in the excited sympathies of the occasion.

"The numerous troops of pious martyrs prove That persecution cannot Christians move." The morning of the 7th continued and closed this narrative—during which time multitudes collected—and the good order that existed with the people evidenced the fact of educated prudence, and cultivated virtues.

This evening an opportunity offered for a political interview with Gen. Smith, when he took an occasion to express his disapprobation of Martin Van Burenism—and unwillingness to vote for, or influence a vote for Henry Clay. To the public his causes have been pictured in the strongest terms—and I am induced to believe that their refractive influences on the American heart should be indelible—and when reflection brings up the truth that Martin Van Buren's want of merciful feeling, and careless decisions when to him was referred the Mormon sufferings in Missouri, and the land theft—and the Babe murder, and all the horrors that can exist among an educated civilization—then bring our votes up. Americans cannot sustain a man that will not involuntarily protect national rights!

The name of Joseph Smith, of Nauvoo, is now before the people as a candidate for President of the United States. With this name is proclaimed Jeffersonianism. On this occasion the name of our worthy fellow-citizen Governor Reynolds was referred to in the most respectful and distinguished terms.

Jeffersonian Democracy, and free trade and sailors' rights, and protection of person and property. The interview on this occasion was satisfactory, and I don't know of hearing a sounder policy designed for public inspection and American prosperity.

The 8th, in all its Sabbath splendor and solemnities, opened up the re-heralding proclamations of doctrinal truth—and a Mr. Adams, in tones of vocal power, educated with the strains of rhetoric and masterly eloquence, on the stand, lays aside the dispute of the truth of the doctrines of the Latter Day Saints. 50,000 persons on the ground, in the character of an audience, with the silence of death, and the countenance of virtue—the congregated females on the left, and males on the right, wearing the solemn features of religion and expressions of virtue, would almost cause the confirmed sectarian to break hold, and fly to the saints, with their breathings, breathe, and in their blessings partake.

This evening closes the conference; decorum, harmony, and the lovely element of union is portrayed in their retiring gestures.

The morning of the 9th salutes us and the ordinary farewell ceremonies are commenced with the new acquaintances I made: Gen. Joseph Smith's attention to me and my family in this visit, commanded my acknowledgements, and the exercise of his responsive nobleness of soul.

On the morning of the 10th, a strong look out for the Osprey was commenced, and late in the afternoon she approached when my wife and I embarked, expressing for the people of Nauvoo our prayers, and receiving their expressions of reciprocity. In perfect safety, and in time satisfactory we arrive at our home.

Captain Anderson, and the other officers of the steam boat Osprey, are entitled to my grateful expressions for his very distinguishing attentions to myself and wife on this pleasant voyage—for during this trip I know not of having heard a profane utterance, of seeing the first card, or other game presented, or the first drop of alcohol drunk. For the provision of all necessary comforts, at the table and otherwise, as circumstances commanded, and his personal display of harmonious etiquette.

The eastern stage now presents a morning exercise for the 12th, when we, in a short period hail sweet home, and are well-comed to its environs by an anxious family.

I would here add, that it is the first time in my life, that I witnessed so long a trip and universal display of pleasure, and the expression of so many high-minded citizens on every occasion for my perpetual happiness.

Yours, respectfully, &c.
W. G. GOFORTH.

P. S. At the instance of Gen. Smith I hand you his Views of the Powers and Policy of the Government of the United States. G.

Foreign News.

(From the Montreal Times April 17.)

FIRST DAY.—Yesterday the election for this city commenced. Upon the previous day the whole of the laborers from the Lachine Canal, numbering in all about 1000 men, were brought into the city for the purpose of carrying Mr. Drummond's election by force; a large number of men were also brought in from other parts, and some from as great a distance as Malone, in the United States. The houses of several farmers in the neighborhood of Lachine were broken open upon the previous evening by bodies of armed ruffians, who demanded their fire-arms. A quantity of arms were also brought into the city from the canal, and an affidavit was sworn on Monday, to the effect that Mr. Tully, the city councilor, boasted that he had plenty of powder and ball prepared to use against Mr. Molson's friends. It has been stated by the opposite party that a body of men from Glengarry were brought in by Mr. Molson; this is a most infamous falsehood, neither from Glengarry or any other place was one man procured; and we defy the originators of this story to prove to the contrary. In the morning the polls were taken possession of by large bodies of canal men, who drove back every elector who came forward to render his vote in favor of Mr. Molson. Magistrates, merchants, and traders of the highest standing, endeavored again and again to enter the polling places, but were hustled and knocked down, and their clothes torn from them. At the Vigor Market the two parties came into collision several times; and soon after ten, about 150 of Mr. Molson's friends, marched down with a number of electors to protect them in giving their votes, but no sooner did they approach the Weight House, than they were received with volleys of stones, of which there are large heaps in the neighborhood, and a rush being made upon them by about 500 canal men armed with bludgeons, after a struggle for a few minutes, during which time many were injured on both sides, and one we understand mortally wounded by a pistol shot, they were driven back and the poll left in the hands of the ruffians. After some time, Mr. Dalziel, the Returning Officer, the Sheriffs, Col. Gage, and several other gentlemen, rode up and endeavored to obtain order; an arrangement was made for Mr. Molson's voters to go to the back part of the house, while Mr. Drummond's polled in the front; but no sooner had they left, than the old game was renewed, and Mr. Molson's friends were driven back. At length it was found necessary to obtain the assistance of the military power, and two companies of the 43rd were called out; but, owing to bad management, they were of no use. As soon as a vote was polled for Mr. Molson, the voter was literally stripped by the mob; the clothes being torn from his back, while the troops stood by without power to interfere. In other words it fared much the same, bands of canalmen intercepted and kept out the voters, and had proper steps been taken, the election would have been suspended until troops could have been stationed at every poll to keep back these armed ruffians who are brought in to direct the representation of the city. A more disgraceful scene than that of yesterday we never witnessed; the city was throughout the day in the possession of, and at the mercy of, a body of canalmen; the citizens were deprived of the liberty of exercising their franchise, by men having neither stake nor interest in the country; valuable lives have been endangered, and peaceable men seriously wounded; and even at the time we write, the city and the citizens are without protection. As early as Monday an application was made to Mr. Drummond, by Mr. Molson, to join him in a requisition to the Returning Officer to call out the troops to preserve order at the polling places, but although this requisition was backed by some of his supporters, Mr. Drummond refused to do so. The following was the state of the poll at the close:—Molson, 275; Drummond, 423.

(From the Montreal Gazette, April 18.)

SECOND DAY.—Early in the morning, requisitions were made to the military authorities from two quarters for troops; from the magistrates, for the purpose of preserving the general peace of the town, and from the Returning Officer, with the like purpose of preserving the general communications of the different districts with each other, menaced and interrupted by hordes of ruffians stationary in the avenues of the polling places, or patrolling in bands, and relieving guard with military punctuality. An attempt was made at renewing the polling, but the scenes of the preceding day were renewed with even more violence. It was a work of danger such as there was no inducement to encounter, for us to keep an eye on all the different polling places; and to combine all the accounts which have reached us up to this moment, into any thing like a consistent whole, is utterly impossible. But the history of one is, from all that we can learn, the history of all. At the polling place in the Hay Market, the avenues were all, from the opening, beset with crowds of the Drummondian canal laborers. These were organized under leaders, whose signs they obeyed, who recognized the parties who came up to poll; if of Molson's party, they hustled and obstructed; and, if they persevered, and even sometimes when they did not most brutally maltreated them. The military were then called out, and occupied the square in front of the polling place. The only effect was, to make the Drummondites withdraw to a wider circle. There was no protection except under the bayonets of the soldiers. Whoever approached the spot, and was hostile or suspected to be so—indeed, generally speaking, every one who looked like a gentleman, was assaulted, and his clothes destroyed by cutting instruments, and all access to the poll by Mr. Molson's friends effectually barred. As soon as this was known, Mr. Molson resigned under protest against the legality of the election, and withdrew his polling clerks and agents from the booths. From within an hour of the opening of the poll, it may be said that the struggle had ceased, though individual electors continued to offer themselves. Whenever this was the case, it was the signal for the renewal of the brutality. In the ward to which we have just referred, one elector, attempting to get up to the poll, was thrown down, his clothes literally torn from his back, and he would certainly have been murdered, but that the soldiery rescued him, though not without inflicting some severe bayonet wounds on his assailants. The absolute impossibility of clearing the polls without military execution, which must have been attended, not merely with the entire suspension of the election, but with the shedding of torrents of blood both of the innocent and the guilty, by indiscriminate firing, must have been evident to every one. The polls being deserted by Mr. Molson's friends, and open to all who chose to go up in Mr. Drummond's name, a great number of persons went up in the course of the day whose names were, of course, recorded without question in his favor. The following were the numbers declared by the Drummond party, at the shutting up of the polling places at five o'clock:—

	Provisional	Molson
Total	1,983	403
	463

Drummond's Majority 920

The returning officer will make his declaration of the result at noon on Friday. The matter, of course will not rest there.

IRELAND.

REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—The weekly meeting of the National Repeal Association, took place on Monday March 15th, in the Conciliation Hall, Dublin.

A letter was read from Lord French, who asserted that the fisheries of Ireland were in a declining state, and alluded to the distress existing in Galway, effects which he attributed to the union.

Two letters were read from Mr. O'Connell, in one of which he announced his intention to be in Dublin in a few days; and thus described the new Irish Registration Bill about to be brought in by Government.—"The bill to extinguish the country franchise in Ireland was announced by another name by Sir James Graham last night. It is, I understand, founded on the poor rate valuation as to amount but on the Charles clause as to principle. I have had this information from a quarter of such authority as to induce me to believe it. The account I have got of the bill will, if accurate, make it one of the most violent instruments to take away from the Catholic people of Ireland all control over the so-called Irish representatives. We shall have it in print before Easter. The greatest mischief of it, a mischief indicative of insanity in its contrivers, is, that it will render the poor rates infinitely more despotic than they are at present, which, indeed, might have been considered difficult. I do think this bill will convert some of the best men amongst the Irish Whigs in Repealers."

Mr. Smith O'Brien announced that the Repeal rent received for the week amounted to £2601 5s.

At the meeting on the 25th, Mr. E. W. Costello was in the chair.

Among the correspondences was a letter from Mr. O'Connell, which was ordered to be inserted on the minutes. Mr. O'Connell wrote under an erroneous impression that he was to attend the Liverpool meeting on Friday (as at first arranged) in aid of Thursday; his determination, therefore, was to attend the house on Thursday evening, when Lord Elliot was to bring in his Franchise Extermination Bill, &c., and he promised to leave Liverpool on Saturday, to attend the next meeting of the association. Mr. O'Connell, a respectable proselyte to his visit to England, and its effects, proceeds as follows:—"I cannot conclude without observing that, on the one hand, it is impossible for the Irish people ever again to confound the English nation with the English government; the first, the English nation, have shown themselves worthy of our confidence and gratitude—the government deserves our most unmitigated resentment: so, on the other hand, the powers of legislation are in the control of our enemies, whilst good wishes and kind words are all that remain to our friends."

MR. O'CONNELL'S ORATION.—A grand banquet in honor of the Liberator and his co-conspirators is to take place at Cork, on Easter Monday, April 8th, on which occasion W. S. O'Brien, Esq., will preside. It is expected to be a grand demonstration. A public entertainment to Mr. O'Connell, upon a splendid scale, is likely to take place at Dublin on Wednesday, April 10th.

MR. O'CONNELL.—Every arrangement has been made for the appeal to the House of Lords; and Sir Thomas Wilde, Mr. Kelly, and Mr. Sergeant Murphy are retained for the traversers. There was some little delay about allowing the usual licence for these Queen's Counsel to appear for Mr. O'Connell, but all this is now concluded.

O'CONNELL BANQUETS.—A number of public demonstrations in favor of Mr. O'Connell have taken place in England, and London having taken the lead, was followed by Liverpool, Birmingham, and Coventry, at each of which places Mr. O'Connell attended personally, to proclaim the gross injustice of the late trial. The following report of the Covent Garden banquet will give our readers a pretty accurate idea of the character of these meetings.

The Chairman, in proposing the health of the Queen, adverted to the wish of Sir R. Peel, that her Majesty might visit Ireland, as implying a foul libel against the Irish people, and said that the Queen was prevented from visiting Ireland by the same faction which, in 1839, prevented King William from partaking of the hospitality of the citizens of London, and that solely because Ministers did not dare to show their faces amongst a people whose origin, whose language, and whose religion they had so scandalously traduced and insulted. (Immense cheers.)

The Insurrection in St. Domingo.—We are indebted to the Charleston Courier for an Extra, with late news from Jacmel, received there on the 13th inst., by the brig Sea Eagle for Boston, put in to land passengers.

Before the Sea Eagle left Jacmel, all the disposable forces at and near that place, had proceeded against the rebels in the Spanish part of the Island. A detachment from the regular forces had taken possession of the Spanish town of Azua, 60 miles west of the city St. Domingo, without molestation; after which they were fired upon by the Spaniards, who in return were punished almost to annihilation.

Notwithstanding the great and well known strength of the fortification of the city, the Haytiens marched with perfect confidence in their ability to route the Spaniards; but a few hours previous to the departure of the Sea Eagle, the Elizabeth brought accounts from the city of the arrival at that place of a French frigate and a sloop of war. It was believed that these vessels were there for the object of sustaining the rebels, and that this was the "foreign aid" hinted at by the President in his proclamation at the outbreak of the rebellion.

General GoTrard, a gallant leader in 1833, and a very accomplished officer was in command at Jacmel, which place filled with women and children from the city) was in the absence of its National Guard, under the protection of the people from the mountains. Besides General G. several other distinguished individuals in the service, all eager for the fray, were kept from the scene of action by the orders of the President, consequent upon this order had been preserved throughout the important aggrandisement of Jacmel. All the ports in the Island from Jacmel to Monte Christo on the eastern and northern board, were according to the declaration of the President in a state of blockade.

The State Prison Bill.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Post says "From the prolonged debate on the bill now before the Senate for the employment of State Prison convicts in mining, and the opposition it receives, it would seem that there must be other interests than the rights of humanity or justice to the mechanical branches of labor from which the hostility arises. Surely local interests nor individual advantages ought for a moment to delay a measure promising benefits in a moral view to society since the very name of punishment by labor in mines carries with it a terror to the evil doer, and in a pecuniary point of view, at least induces belief that their support need not be as now, a burden to the community."

The Canals.—The Albany Argus states that from present indications there is every probability that for the first time, next season, iron canal boats will be extensively introduced on the Erie canal, which can carry 85 tons of freight with as much ease as wooden ones can 70 tons.

FOR PRESIDENT.

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT.

SIDNEY RIGDON, ESQ.,
OF PENNSYLVANIA.

STATE CONVENTION.

On Friday the 19th inst our State Convention was held according to appointment. Owing to the very heavy rains for the few preceding days, rendering the roads entirely impassable, we had not so large a representation from the different counties in the state as we anticipated. However a great number of gentlemen were present from other states, and great interest and feeling, soon began to manifest itself in the behalf of the cause we have espoused.

After the usual ceremonies were over the chairman and secretary chosen and the convention organized, the meeting was addressed by several gentlemen present, who unfolded in glowing colors the unhappy state of our country, the party feuds, the political intrigues, the corrupt cliques, and the manner in which our liberties were bartered away to gratify the ambition, and the pockets of a few political aspirants. The merits and demerits of the several candidates for the presidential chair were ably discussed, and the superior claims of Gen. Smith, to that high office, were set forth in incontrovertible arguments, forcible, clear, and lucid; and in language not to be misunderstood. A greater display of patriotism, eloquence, and talent we never witnessed on any similar occasion. The souls of the gentlemen who addressed the meeting, breathed the sentiments of their hearts, and they spoke in words that burned. We give below the speeches of two gentlemen present on the occasion, who are not Latter-day Saints. [The first is that of Dr. Goforth, the delegate from St. Clair Co. It will be perceived, that he was appointed chairman of the committee who were selected to draft resolutions.]

In 1832 when the convention was held in Kaskaskia Randolph Co. for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of nominating Gen. Jackson, for president, he was appointed chairman of that committee; the resolutions, then drafted were stigmatized by the whigs as the "Goforth Resolutions,"—they went forth and general Jackson was elected, all the difference we look for now is, that they will go forth a little quicker, and that Gen. Smith, will be elected the first trial.

The other is that of John Reid, Esq., an attorney who defended and cleared Gen. Joseph Smith, from some false and calumnious charges in his first persecutions in New York. The old gentleman being acquainted with Gen. Smith, from his youth, spoke very feelingly of the virtue, innocence, and good character and reputation of Joseph Smith, until he became a professor of religion, that then every device that wicked ingenuity and priestcraft could invent, was made use of in order to destroy him; but we must stop as his speech is given and will speak for itself, so far as words go, but not with that feeling, and pathos, and sympathy and power, that seemed to inspire the old man's bosom, while he spoke. We must confess that we were very much interested at the recital of those scenes that the prophet had to pass through in his young days, as we have frequently been called upon to witness, his inhuman, and unjust persecutions, since our acquaintance with him.

When Gen. Smith was called upon, he spoke with much talent and ability, and displayed a great knowledge of the political history of this nation, of the cause of the evils under which our nation groans, and also the remedy.

Gen. Smith and Sidney Rigdon, Esqrs. were cheered in the most enthusiastic manner after the delivering of their addresses.

The band assembled in the evening and several national airs were played, a song prepared for the occasion, was sung by Mr. Levi Hancock, and speeches delivered by a number of gentlemen, and to conclude, we had a general serenade on the departure of the nominees; a barrel of tar which had been prepared was set fire to, and the names of Gen. Smith, and Sidney Rigdon, free trade and sailor's rights, and Jeffersonian Democracy were repeated with universal acclamation, until the sound reverberated from hill-top to hill-top. Gen. Smith, was then escorted home by a number of gentlemen, accompanied by the band. Three cheers were given at the "Mansion" for the General and Sidney Rigdon, which closed the proceedings of the day.

MINUTES OF A CONVENTION HELD IN THE CITY OF NAUVOO, HANCOCK COUNTY, ILLINOIS, MAY 17TH, 1844.

Convention met according to appointment, and was organized by appointing Gen. Uriah Brown to the chair, and Dr. F. Merryweather secretary.

Dr. G. W. Goforth presented the following letter and took his seat in the Convention. "Several letters of the same character were presented by other gentlemen, but we have not room to insert them."

Muscatoh, St. Clair Co. Ill.

May 4th 1844.

Mr. W. G. Goforth,

Sir,

At various meetings held in this county, where I have had the honor of attending; and the interesting topic of the selection of a suitable person for the high station of President of the United States, being at this time the most important to Americans, and with the names that are now before the people Joseph Smith of Nauvoo, is recognised respectfully as a candidate, declarative in the principles of Jeffersonianism of Jefferson Democracy, Free trade and Sailors rights and the protection of person and property.

A Convention being about to be held in the City of Nauvoo, on the 17th of this month, (May,) your name has been on every occasion given, as a delegate to said convention, and through me the message to be imparted you, asking you to represent our expressions in the case.

Please say for us as Americans, that we will support Gen. Joseph Smith, in preference to any other man, that has given, or suffered his name to come before us as a candidate. And that at the great Baltimore Convention, to be held on the 13th of July, our delegation to said convention be authorised to proclaim for us, submission to the Nominee as may be by them brought before the people in case of a failure to nominate Joseph Smith, (our choice) and unite approbatively for his support.

Respectfully, Sir, This communication, and authority upward is forwarded you, as your voucher at said convention, with our hearty prayers for the success of him, whose special name is given in the important affair.

HENRY B. JACOBS.

Agent for the friends of Gen. J. Smith, whom he has so people represent. Mr. Clay's letter to General Joseph Smith was then read by Mr. Phelps, also General Joseph Smith's rejoinder, which was applauded by three cheers. We cannot give this correspondence without a great detraction of our paper, and the anxiety of the public to see the proceedings of the Convention diminish us to forego the pleasure of inserting it until our next.

It was moved and seconded that the following gentlemen be appointed a committee to draft resolutions for the adoption of this convention: Dr. G. W. Goforth, J. Taylor, W. W. Phelps, W. Smith, Lucian Foster.

It was moved and seconded that the correspondence of the central committee for government reform of New York, be read by W. W. Phelps, also General Joseph Smith's answer to the same.

New York, April 20th 1844.

Joseph Smith Esq. Sir,—The subscribers, the Central Committee of the National Reform Association, in accordance with a duty prescribed by their constitution, respectfully solicit an expression of your views, as a candidate for public office, on a subject that, as they think, vitally affects the rights and interests of their constituents.

We see this singular condition of affairs that, while wealth in our country is rapidly accumulating, while internal improvements of every description are fast increasing, and while machinery has multiplied the power of production to an immense extent, yet with all these national advantages, the compensation for useful labor is getting less and less.

We seek the cause of this anomaly, and we trace it to the monopoly of the land, which places labor at the mercy of capital. We therefore desire to abolish the monopoly, not by interfering with the conventional rights of persons now in possession of the land, but by arresting the further sale of all lands not yet appropriated as private property, and by allowing these lands hereafter to be freely occupied by those who may choose to settle on them.

We propose that the Public lands hereafter shall not be owned, but occupied only, the occupant having the right to sell or otherwise dispose of improvements to any one not in possession of other land; so that, by preventing any individual from becoming possessed of more than a limited quantity, every one may enjoy the right.

This measure, we think, would gradually establish an equilibrium between the agricultural and other useful occupations, that would ensure to all full employment and fair compensation for their labor, on the lands now held as private property, and to each individual on the public lands the right to work for himself on his own premises, or for another, at his option.

An answer, as soon as convenient, will much oblige

Your Fellow Citizens,

JOHN WINDT,
EGBERT S. MANNING,
JAMES MAXWELL,
LEWIS MASQUELIER,
DANIEL WITTER,
GEORGE H. EVANS,
ELLIS SMALLEY.

Nauvoo Ill. May 16th, 1844.

To John Windt, Egbert S. Manning, James Maxwell, Lewis Masquerier, Daniel Witter, George H. Evans, and Ellis Smalley, Esqrs.

Gentlemen.—Your communication of April 20th, soliciting my views relative to the public lands is before me; and I answer, that, as soon as the greater national evils could be remedied by the consolidated efforts of a virtuous people, and the judicious legislation of wise men, so that slavery could not occupy one-half of the United States, for speculation, competition, prodigality, and fleshly capital, and so that enormous salaries, stipends fees, perquisites, patronage and the wages of spiritual wickedness in "germine and lace," could not swallow up forty or fifty millions of public revenue, I would use all honorable means to bring the wages of mechanics and farmers up, and the salaries of public servants down; increase labor and money by a judicious tariff, and advise the people, who are the only sovereigns of the soil, to petition Congress to pass a uniform land law, that the air, the water, and the land of the "Asylum of the oppressed," might be free, to freemen!

With considerations of the highest regard for unadulterated freedom I have the honor to be your obt. servt. JOSEPH SMITH.

After which the meeting adjourned for one hour.

It was moved and seconded that the following gentlemen be constituted a committee to appoint electors for this state: Dr. G. W. Goforth, E. Robinson, L. N. Scott, Peter Hawes, and John Reed.

It was moved and seconded that the following gentlemen be constituted a central committee of correspondence, having power to increase their number: Dr. Willard Richards, Dr. J. M. Bernhisel, W. W. Phelps, and Lucian Foster.

The following delegates from the different states of the union were then received by vote:

It was moved seconded and carried by acclamation that General Joseph Smith, of Illinois be the choice of this Convention, for President of the United States.

The nine following Resolutions were then adopted, the fifth of which was carried by acclamation. 1 Resolved.—That from all the facts and appearances, that are now visible in the United States, that we believe much imbecility and fraud is practiced by the officers of government and that to remedy these evils, it is highly necessary that a virtuous people, should arise in the panoply of their might, and with one heart and one mind correct these abuses, by electing wise and honorable men to fill the various offices of Government.

2 Resolved.—That as union is power, the permanency and continuance of our political institutions depend upon the correction of the abuses.

3 Resolved.—That as all political parties of the present day have degraded themselves by adhering more or less to corrupt principles and practices by fomenting discord and division among the people being swallowed in the vortex of party spirit and sectional prejudices until they have become insensible to the welfare of the people and the general good of the country, and knowing that there are good men among all parties in whose bosoms burn the fire of pure patriotism, we invite them by the love of liberty, by the sacred honor of freemen by the patriotism of the illustrious fathers of our freedom by the glorious love of country and by the holy principles of '78 to come over and help us to reform the government.

4 Resolved.—That to redress all wrongs, the government of the United States with the President at its head, is as powerful in its sphere as Jehovah is in his.

5 Resolved.—That the better to carry out the principles of liberty and equal rights Jeffersonian Democracy free trade and Sailors rights and the protection of person and property we will support General Joseph Smith of Illinois for the Presidency of the United States at the ensuing election.

6 Resolved.—That we will support Sidney Rigdon Esq. of Pa. for the Vice Presidency.

7 Resolved.—That we will hold a National Convention at Baltimore on Saturday, the 13th day of July.

8 Resolved.—That we call upon the honest men of all parties in each state to send their delegates to said Convention.

9 Resolved.—That all honest Editors throughout the United States are requested to publish the above resolutions.

Resolved.—That those gentlemen who stand at the head of the list, who have gone to the several states, to take charge of our political interests, be requested to use every exertion to appoint electors in the several electoral districts of the states which they represent, and also to send delegates to the Baltimore Convention.

Resolved.—That Dr. Goforth and John Reid, Esq. be requested to furnish a copy of their speeches for publication.

Resolved.—That the electors be instructed to make stump speeches in their different districts.

Resolved.—That the thanks of this meeting be given to Mr. Hancock, for his kind and generous donation of a hall for the Convention.

It was moved and seconded, that Orson Hyde, H. C. Kimball, David S. Hollister, Orson Pratt, and Lyman Wright, Represent this Convention at the Convention to be held in Baltimore, on the 13th of July next.

Sidney Rigdon, Esq. then addressed the meeting, and was succeeded by the following gentlemen:

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH, W. W. PHELPS, DR. G. W. GOFORTH, JOHN TAYLOR, LYMAN WRIGHT, HYAUM SMITH, JOHN REID ESQ.

It was moved seconded, and carried, that the thanks of this meeting be given to the Chairman and Secretary.

The convention was addressed in an eloquent speech by Sidney Rigdon, Esq. showing the political dishonesty of both Henry Clay and Martin Van Buren, and stating his views, and the present condition of this country.

Dr. Goforth rose and addressed the Convention in the following eloquent strain:

Mr. Chairman and Fellow Citizens,—As an American—a citizen of St. Clair County and of the State of Illinois, with the deference ever acknowledged on occasions like this, I feel the spirit of obedience that was required of one of old, when he was bade to take off his shoes for he was walking on Holy ground and that this was a Holy Cause.

Influenced by the distinguished honors paid me on the 24th of April in the convention then here held, and the invitation to associate on this occasion—I feel that on occasions of this importance it commands the rallying exultations of more than a Bonaparte or a Mortier desparatious that to have names now brought before an American people that have for the last fourteen years or longer, been like the foot-ball of the sportsman and the extraordinary selected subjects of derision and contumely, that new expressions are about to be made that the people are about to trace back the erroneous doings of a nation, to weep and repent for mal-effects, to examine the old building that in these days was founded by our forefathers and for want of qualified tenants has become occasionally tinged with filth and spurious matter—that its anticipated solidity to the beating storms has ceased, and its firmness in various ranges assumed a doubtful type. The Jeffersonian doctrines have been forsaken; their QUALIFICATION have been abandoned—Humboggy and sarcasm in their stead adopted, and Modern American growth in the unhealthy tones of vice, farce, non-sustenance of truth and non-valorous deeds in their stead, the only objects for promotion captioned by these expressions, to this august assembly, in the character of a delegate from St. Clair county, I say, that reform-politically as well as morally, claims the present field; that the many gubernative exercises of the various Presidents since those days that were honored by a Washington a Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Jackson, have been to AMERICANS, thorns whose irritability never cease, whose national maligne depot has been indelible and that has cindered the lovely cement that germinated in the days of the Revolution in '78, and that were by our forefathers fostered with hope of ameliorizing the conditions of this and previous generations. Unwilling as I may be to offer to my nation the least attack of reproach, yet, as publicity was given of a western convention to take up the subject of a national merit—by delegating and instructing delegates, by the expression of a will to submit to the nomination of the Baltimore Convention and covenant to support the nominees—and with all the utterance of our disapprobation of Martin Van Buren's ever standing before the lovers of the "78" cause in any character that might respect or recognize him as a portion of material in the erection or construction of this American microcosm I on this occasion stay the ceremony of exposition—I tremble for our once happy country, at the threat of Van Buren's election again by the Americans to the Presidency—and thank God that the age of gray hairs will to every American in these days say "look e'er you leap" since 1819—I have risked an Americans part for the sustenance of democracy—and I do assert, JEFFERSONIANISM; ever shaded by the promise of better times, while the LOCKER was opened and the AMERICANS hope till split. On this occasion, delegates hasten to the Baltimore convention—and like Americans, we trust, will represent the cares of a nation and claim the western peoples choice—open again as in the "Declaration of Independence" the assertion "That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are LIFE, LIBERTY and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of the ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness." "LIGHT AND TRANSPARENT GOVERNMENT" by party opposition to be the move in this proposition of exorcise. But with one voice we will respond No! No!—No!!—For very many years agitating ceremonies have roused from their slumber, and caused the offspring of "1776" to look back and rehearse the tales, remembering the savage shriek and calling up to horrible vivification the bloody banners of Britain, when the unholy proffer was made for "SLAVERY OR DEATH." When the cr. "de" was only a forest of uncertainty and a. "morness" as in the hands of Honours. King, sustained to impart the voice of patriotic associations with our recollection much of it.

—and but for the want of time 'twould be rehearsed. This day sweetens recollection with the privilege of a convention to tell over the national grievances—the omissions of official duty and the usurpation of Aristocratical power—this day only whispers the silly "L. L. Van BUREN, BENTON and BOGGS." This day published for days passed, has told the world that to be free was our privilege, that to renounce VAN BURENISM would be healthy to Americans—that to dissection the deaf eared costumes of a White Housed scorpion was prudent and to tell the old veterans of 1776 that those rights occupy our wills—and the spirits of our fathers yet mingle in our blood and stimulate our actions, to nobly die defending the covenant made by the signers of the "Declaration of Independence" on the 4th. day of July 1776."

FREE TRADE & SAILORS RIGHTS PROTECTION OF PERSON AND PROPERTY.

Americans now begin to examine their privileges—and like the skilled physician examining a diseased heart will thump in proper character on its environs for a flat come—if flat, they'll say "beware"—if come "alike right" the diseased heart has been detected and in its furious race is hastening the exit of that aspirant, who, while in its premonitory stage said "Your cause is a good one but I cannot afford you any assistance in your present distressed condition" and that man who refused the hearing of the Mormon grievances, when by a Young, a Steward and a Reynolds they were offered for Congressional action (Benton) asserting that the Missouri Mobocracy the Bogg decree, (the woman and babe destroyer) and the expatriating horrors or exterminating feat from Far West, was not only just but that he was clad with proof with legal justification and the Mormons merited all and more than they had received of virulence and brutality. If American Jurisprudence be on these decisions and by the men whom democracy sustained, the deeds of valor which again will place them at the head of our affairs—the strands are broken—the links have sprung, and the anchor fangs refused to hold.—May we now say that in 1844—JOSEPH SMITH the proclaimer of Jefferson Democracy, of Free trade and Sailors rights and protection of Person and Property with us stands first to the Baltimore convention, (and if his want of success in the nomination exists instruct our delegates to say Henry Clay) and like men stand firm—to a man or voice speak out—and herald the tidings North, South, East, and West admitting that

"None but mean spirits dread the face of fear And none but cowards, life's afflictions bear All dauntless spirits sink at distant war And tremble as it threatens from afar But rich or poor, true minds preserve their weight And if exalted or debased are great!"

The convention adjourned, sine die. URIAH BROWN, President. F. MERRYWEATHER, Secretary.

The speech of Squire Reid, as delivered before the State Convention, is unavoidably crowded out this week, but it will appear in our next.

A Word to our Friends Abroad.—We have now fairly entered upon our electioneering campaign: from this time forth, forward is our motto, and in order to ensure success it will be necessary for us to use every exertion, Eternal vigilance is the price, and victory the reward of our labors. Let every man who is a friend to Gen. Joseph Smith, Jeffersonian Democracy, free trade and sailors rights, use every endeavor to secure the election. Don't let any one who professes to be a friend to Gen. Smith put their hands in their pockets and say as said our noble president, "your cause is just; but I can do nothing for you." Let all who profess to be friends shew themselves friendly on this occasion. "By their fruits ye shall know them." It is not an idle farce that we are engaged in; but a solid reality, and we want every lover of truth, justice, humanity, and patriotism to rally round the standard, to come to the rescue and to use every laudable exertion to ensure success.

Several presses are already beginning to advocate his cause and others are expected soon, one has started in New York and one in this state. A gentleman has just informed us that he is going to Cincinnati for the purpose of commencing a paper advocating our cause, and the prospect brightens on every hand.

Those gentlemen having the charge of States would do well to enlist as many of the papers in their cause as possible; we would also remind them that the utmost diligence is required to secure an electoral ticket and also to forward itable superiors as delegates to the National Convention.

Don't let us be idle and say we can do nothing for "knowledge is power," and "with it we can thrash the nations," let us teach men wisdom; tell them what is for their best interest, circulate Gen. Smith's Views, print them in every paper, publish them in pamphlet form, and circulate them throughout the length and breadth of this republic. Let Gen. Smith's Views be read and his principles character, and political creed be known and prejudice will give way like darkness before the rays of the sun, the nation will be saved, and victory will be ours.

The Neighbor.—We would say to our friends abroad that we have made arrangements to make our paper interesting, during the present political contest every thing interesting pertaining to our progress will be faithfully recorded, and all our plans made known, and as it is the only correct medium at present through which can be accurately known all of our leading movements, the elders and our friends abroad will do well to give it an extensive circulation. A paper will many times do more than a political speech, the interest of the cause depends greatly on the circulation of correct information; that information can be obtained from the newspapers without in our cause will filter in many parts.

We purpose issuing the Neighbor to new subscribers, if to one address, on the following terms, on the receipt of $10 good current money we will send six copies one year; for $15 nine copies, one year; for $20 thirty-two copies, one year; for $160 sixty-six copies, one year.

Our friends abroad are respectfully requested to use their influence to obtain subscribers. It will be perceived from the above terms that it will be advantageous to neighborhoods to club together for the purpose of obtaining their papers cheaper.

N. B. If requested we will write the names of the several persons subscribing on their papers, but they must be addressed to one office.

LYNCHING AMONG THE MORMONS.

The Mormons in Nauvoo lately lynched a colored man, to make him divulge the names of persons who stole goods, which were found in his possession.

They failed in their object, the victim of their brutality being probably at once innocent and ignorant.

We cut the above from the Cincinnati Philanthropist, and would say to the pious "lovers of mercy," that some of his own kennel of "wolves in sheep's clothing," whipped a poor negro (as is supposed) while they had his money and goods complained of their "murder," like the Sectarians' darling Religion 'hid in a napkin." The Mormons tried the wretches for their brutal treatment to a poor black man, and the vicious Philanthropist has metamorphosed it into "Lynching among the Mormons." Dear Sir! the Mormons are truly becoming

"The lion on the land And Leviathan of the sea!"

And should they continue to win as they go, And spread forth the knowledge that comes [from 'old Joe'] A "President," too, from the great root of Jesse.

Will bless this and all nations, God bless ye! So go on gentlemen, with your sayings and slanderings and like the negroes grace before meat; end your luries with "tanter in de clouds, to scare some; lighten an de arst, to make ut wink; Got a mighty bless me and Massa. Amen.

The Whig convention which met in Baltimore the 1st inst. was as anticipated nominated Henry Clay of Kentucky for President and Theodore Tilton of New Jersey for Vice President. The Whig leaders are loud in their vociferations in favor of the nomination of Henry Clay and are urging the rank and file of the party to come up to the scratch or all will be lost. "Cry aloud and spare not," ye blind leaders of the blind. Draw out all your forces for with Jeffersonian Democracy free trade and sailors rights, protection of person and property inscribed on his banner Gen. Smith will thoroughly cleanse the land of whiggery in November next.

STEAM BOAT ELECTION.

On the last upward voyage of the "Osprey" from St. Louis to this place, as usual the merits of the several candidates for the next Presidential election was discussed. A vote was taken and the following was the "State of the polls" as handed to us by a gentleman who came as passenger.

Gen. J. Smith, 26 gentlemen. 3 ladies
Henry Clay 0 " 2
Van Buren 2 " 0

The Ladies are altogether forsaking Van Buren and the gentlemen as a matter of course are following after. There is a wonderful shrinkage in Henry Clay but the General is going it with a rush Hurrah for the General!

We have the pleasure to announce the safe arrival in Nauvoo, on Monday the 20th inst. of another company of Latter Day Saints from the east, by the steamer Maid of Iowa numbering 62 souls all in good health and spirits, consisting of Elders Addison Everett, Albert Merrill and family, John Wolfe and family, Kleber Worley and family, Joseph Bouton, Jacob G. Bigler, W. W. JOSEPH SMITH vs. JOSEPH H. REYNOLDS & HARMON T. WILSON—RELIGIOUS PREJUDICE &c.

The communication of W. C. will be found interesting. It gives an account of the late trial, in the Circuit Court at Dixon, of Joseph Smith vs. Joseph H. Reynolds and Harmon T. Wilson, and discloses another specimen of that spirit of religious prejudice which has been arrayed against Gen. Smith ever since he first took his station in the religious world. When a community becomes so corrupt that it is a hard matter to empanel a jury, sufficiently free from religious prejudice to do justice to a fellow citizen, then does indeed realize the abyss of darkness and corruption to which the human mind is capable of sinking. Shame on the man whose mind is so trammelled by prejudice as to render him incompetent to be empanelled in a jury of his countrymen! How exalted he must appear, what magnanimity he must display and what convincing testimonials of a cultivated intellect he must exhibit, when he meekly, degradingly and slavishly acknowledges before intelligent men, within the pines of courts of justice, that he cannot see justly and legally with his fellow man, in consequence of religious prejudice! What has religion got to do with the truth or falsity of any civil or criminal allegation charged upon an individual? Nothing. O, short sighted, ignorant, corrupt, despicable men! Did you ever read that clause of the Constitution that protects against proscription for opinion sake?—that protects every subject of this Government in the free exercise of his religious sentiments? This was one of the fundamental principles consulted by the framers of that instrument. Throwing off the manacles of a tyrannical nation; springing forth into freedom; panting after a full fruition of national liberty; determined to rend every chain of oppression from the mind of man; eager to plant the germ of happiness in the foundation of the Republic—a free, universal religious toleration was embodied in, and granted by, its wise, judicious and ennobling provisions. The illustrious fathers of that glorious era, foresaw the glory, happiness and excellence that an adherence to these principles would secure, and the destruction, ruin, panic and distress that a departure from them would entail. They had felt the yoke of oppression, which kindled within their bosoms a warm solicitude for the unshackled freedom of posterity.

Shall men, at this age of the Republic—when it has stood the test of nearly seventy years—the liberality of its institutions supporting, like the ark of God, the fair fabric of liberty, rich with the blandishments of gratitude and benevolence—holding up the motto to surrounding nations, "Religious Toleration," the "Cradle of Liberty," the "Home of the Oppressed"—begin to inculcate the identical principles that have led to the overthrow of almost every Republic that has previously existed?—Would they follow in the train of ruin, desolation and overthrow which has befallen other nations, and tear a dynasty more despicable in its administration than that over which the Russian Autocrat tyrannized, dooming all to speedy banishment who will not unite with the Greek Church? Would they promote internal commotion and revolt—give a double impetus to the damning car of corruption that is now sweeping through our land, leaving desolation, faction, turbulence, party wrangling and ungodly ambition in its track, to grow into a national calamity? Would they light the torch of general devastation and pave the way for mourning around our nation's funeral pile, when all the trophies won by the chivalry of Revolutionary ancestors will find an oblivious rest amid the relics of our crumbling Republic? If these results are desirable and hoped for by demagogues and political weathercocks, let that spirit of religious prejudice, (manifested upon the above named trial and which we as people have ever encountered) continue to augment and cast its darkening shadows over the mind of man, and it will add sufficient fuel to the spreading flame to consummate the general devastation.

Notwithstanding Gen. Smith did not obtain a verdict for damages only to the amount of fifty dollars, yet the fact of the jury's verdict—obtained as it was in the midst of such strong prejudice—being in favor of the plaintiff, is sufficient evidence of the unparalleled malignance and unprecedented barbarity, encountered by him at the hands of those infamous mobocrats, at the time of his capture. Gen. Smith has now shown to the world that he was it legally and cruelly arrested, and that he was innocent when tried upon the merits of the charge alleged. This he has always been able to show upon every previous trial, and we venture to predict that his innocence will be sustained upon every subsequent charge, until the whole world shall become convinced of his patriotism and the exalted excellence of his character.

Coming events cast their shadows before.—On the steamer, Maid of Iowa, Capt. Rehder, on her last trip to St. Louis, there was a ballot for candidates for the Presidency. For Gen. Smith, 16 Gentlemen; and 2 Ladies; for Henry Clay, 13 Gentlemen; for Van Buren, 2 Gentlemen and 1 Lady. Verily the signs are auspicious.

Oregon Treaty Arrested.—It is stated by a Washington letter writer in the Philadelphia Chronicle that the course which Mr. Calhoun has taken relative to the Oregon Boundary, has arrested the negotiation upon that question with Mr. Jacksonham. Nor can it be resumed again until Mr. Jacksonham shall have obtained further instructions from his government. This is supposed to have been caused by Mr. Calhoun refusing to relinquish an inch of bona fide United States soil.

General Smith's Views.—We have on hand and purpose keeping at all times for sale at this office Gen. Smith's views of the powers and policy of the government of the United States, in pamphlet form.

Shocking Outrage.

RIOT & MURDERS IN PHILADELPHIA.

An Extra issued from the "Republican" office, St. Louis, dated "Friday morning 11 1/2 o'clock, A. M.," brings us the particulars of a more destructive, murderous, heart-rending riot in the city of Philadelphia, than probably ever took place in this nation since the Baltimore riots of 1812 and the Missouri mobs of 1838. We regret that our room will not admit of a detailed account of the destruction of life and property. We shall be compelled to abridge it as much as possible and give but the most important items. The next mail undoubtedly will bring further particulars, which will be forthcoming next week. The riot began thus:

The Natives held a meeting in Kensington. That meeting was attacked and dispersed by foreigners! On Monday, the 6th, another meeting was organized; that was attacked. Clubs, bricks, bats, &c. were used; houses defended themselves with stones and pistols. The rioters became more ferocious; they poured a sharp fire, and the Natives retreated from the ground. A number of men were killed and wounded. The Irish were in houses, and fired some twenty or thirty shots. Nine persons were severely wounded. Mr. Devlin's house was torn down, John Taffarty's injured! The Irish women and boys turned out, cheered on the mob and furnished them with stones, and ammunition, and clubs.

Half past 12 o'clock, P. M.—About 10 o'clock an attempt was made to burn down the house which encloses the Nunnery. They were fired upon by the Irish, and five were shot. Nathan Kamey was mortally wounded.

The Natives Americans held a meeting on Tuesday, the 7th inst. Several guns were fired at them; one man was killed and several wounded. Several houses were fired, and much loss of life and destruction followed.

In the afternoon the houses on Cadwalader street were fired and burned. John Taggart was taken up as the murderer of Rhinegold, and while being conveyed to prison was almost killed by the mob.

At 9 o'clock, Tuesday the 7th, the rioters were more ferocious than ever. The Natives House was burned down. One square of houses in Master street was burned. Three men were killed; upwards of thirty wounded; and the city in a scene of tremendous excitement!

Wednesday Morning.—The riot still continued worse than ever. About forty were killed. St. Michael's Church was occupied by the Irish. The Irish were pouring in to Philadelphia to help their countrymen. A mass meeting of the Native Americans was held (some seven thousand present) at which stirring speeches were made and resolutions adopted. We have not space to insert them.

A portion of the military are posted around the body of an Irishman named Joe. Rice. It is reported that a man who resided in the centre of the scene of riot, that seven or eight of the tenants of one of the houses destroyed by fire, perished in the flames. No doubt many perished in the same way, of whom we have no account, and perhaps never will know definitely. Mr. Peale had his arm amputated. Several persons were wounded and two or three others were reported to be killed; but not knowing the facts we cannot state particulars at present.

11 o'clock, A. M.—Several back buildings on Washington Street Market are on fire, but they suppressed the flames. Another fire is discovered in the court, running from Cadwalader street, above Jefferson. Four or six houses were destroyed.

12 o'clock, noon.—Great excitement prevails. Families are removing from their dwellings for squares around. The military are upon the ground. Two rows of frame buildings were burned. Two tenement buildings, untenanted, at the corner of Jefferson and Washington streets, shared the same fate.

2 1/2 o'clock, P. M.—St. Michael's Church has just been fired, which, with the dwelling of the Priest, on the north, and frame dwellings on the south, are destroyed. The Priest narrowly escaped, in a cab. Two brick buildings are burning—no efforts to extinguish the devouring element.

3 o'clock, P. M.—The female Seminary is a heap of ruins. Great excitement prevails. Another house has been fired. During the burning of the Church, the mob continued to shout and played the Byne Water. Nothing now remains of the beautiful gothic structure but its blackened walls.

3 o'clock.—The Seminary has been completely destroyed. A temperance grocery store was completely riddled, and everything in the house destroyed. The riot is on the ground. The mob made a rush upon them and defied them with loud shouts. The Colonel appealed to them as American citizens, under which they gave him three cheers and retired.

6 o'clock.—The riot still attacked the house of Alderman Hugh Clark, and have entirely gutted it out, demolishing the windows, throwing furniture into the street, and destroying the papers of the Alderman. The furniture of other buildings was also thrown into the street.

8 1/2 o'clock.—Harmony Court, consisting of 4 or 5 houses, were destroyed; also a frame house on another street, destroyed. A few minutes before 10 o'clock another church was burned; the fire is represented to present an aspect truly grand and imposing. St. Augustine's Church was burned. Other houses were burned and property destroyed to considerable amount. The mob threaten to fire every Church in the city. Great excitement prevails, but our space is filled—we must draw a veil, for the present, over this horrid spectacle.

The State Prison Bill.—A correspondent of the Post says: From the prolonged debate on the bill now before the Senate for the employment of State Prison convicts in mining and the opposition it receives, it would seem that there must be interests other than the rights of humanity or justice to the mechanical branches of labor from which the hostility arises. Surely neither local interests nor individual advantages ought, for a moment to delay a measure promising benefits in a moral view to society since the very name of punishment by labor is mines carries with it a terror to the evil doer, and in a pecuniary view, at least induces belief that their support need not be as now, a burden to the community.

Death of another Member of Congress. The hon. Peter E. Bostiere, a representative from the State of Louisiana expired in the city of Washington on Wednesday night, the 24th instant, after an illness of some weeks. The fact was announced in the senate, by Mr. Johnson, and in the house, by Mr. Slidell, both of Louisiana, in feeling and appropriate terms, and after adopting the customary testimonials of respect, the houses respectively adjourned. There are members of the house, three members of the cabinet, and two judges of the supreme court, have died since the last election of congressmen.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Editor of the Neighbor.

Dear Sir: I have just returned from the north part of this State, where I have been on business for our beloved President Joseph Smith; and it feels so good to breathe the pure air of liberty and friendship, after spending some three or four days in a swamp, or rather, a slough of religious prejudice and political hypocrisy, which are equally nauseous and offensive, that I cannot let this opportunity pass without giving vent to some of my feelings, in regard to what passed while I remained at the town Dixon, on Rock River.

My principal business was to appear in the Lee County Circuit Court, as a witness in the case of Joseph Smith, vs. Joseph H. Reynolds & Harmon T. Wilson, for false imprisonment and using unnecessary force and violence in arresting the plaintiff.

A plea had been entered in this suit by the council for the defendants, to which the council for the plaintiff demurred. The demurrer was argued on Wednesday morning the 8th inst. and the parties finally joined issue on the charge for using unnecessary force and violence, and the Court gave permission by consent of the Bar to proceed with the trial, but the council not being fully prepared, it was laid over until the following morning, the 9th inst.

On Thursday morning after the usual preliminaries of opening Court, the above case was called up for trial, and the clerk ordered to impanel a jury, and here, sir, a scene took place which ought to make every honest American citizen blush and weep for the credit and honor of his country and laws. A number of men were called up and when questioned as to whether they had previously expressed opinions in relation to the suit now pending, nearly the whole answered in the affirmative. The further question was then put as to whether they had any prejudice against either of the parties, to which a great majority replied they had against Smith. They were then questioned as to what their prejudice had reference to—his religious sentiments or general course of conduct. The greater part replied, to his religious sentiments; and the remainder said they were opposed to his general course of conduct.

About twenty men had to be called upon one after another, out of which number the Court finally selected twelve as competent jurors although the majority of these decidedly expressed their feelings of prejudice against the plaintiff. They were however accepted on the ground that they said they thought they could do justice to both parties, although some of them expressed a doubt whether they could do justice or not.

The jury being sworn the Court, or rather the council, proceeded to examine the witnesses on the part of the plaintiff, which occupied nearly the whole day. But little of the real matter of fact could be set before the Court, on account of their being confined to the charge of unnecessary force and violence; but this was proven in the clearest point of light.

I must refer to the testimony of old Mr. Dixon whose silvery locks seem to tell an age of many years. His evidence related to the circumstance of the Missouri Sheriff refusing for a length of time to give the plaintiff the privilege of Habeas Corpus, and threatening to drag him to Missouri in fifteen minutes from the time they arrived at Dixon. The old gentleman seemed to tremble with indignation while relating the simple facts as they transpired at the time, and like a true lover of his country, appeared proud of the privilege of telling those men that the citizens of Dixon would not suffer themselves to be disgraced by permitting them to drag away a citizen of this State to a foreign State for trial, without the privilege of a trial by Habeas Corpus, a privilege which is guaranteed to every individual under like circumstances, and especially when it was understood that he was to be dragged to Missouri, amongst a people whose hands are yet dripping with the blood of murdered innocence, and who thirst for the blood of General Joseph Smith as the howling wolf thirsts for his prey. Surely such a picture would melt the heart of any thing but an adamant. There are those men and to who profess to be the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ—who can hear such things, and still wish the Missourians had got Gen. Smith to Missouri to murder him without judge or jury; and surely they are no better than murderers themselves and only lack the opportunity to make them shedders of innocent blood.

After the evidence was through on the part of the plaintiff, the witnesses for the defence were examined which only occupied a few minutes. The arguments were then advanced on both sides, during which time I could not help noticing how apt the respectable gentleman of the opposite council was, to sing the song of "old Joe Smith" &c., which might appear very gentlemanly in his mind, but to me it seemed as contemptible as the voice of a stupid ass or the tongue of slander.

Finally the case was submitted to the jury who were charged by the Court and then ordered to retire and bring in a sealed verdict the following morning at 9 o'clock. Friday morning came and with it the verdict, and I proved to be in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants for forty dollars and costs of suit. I confess I was astonished when I heard it and could not help thinking that prejudice sometimes overrules justice even in the jury box. I could not help comparing the result of this trial with one which came off the day previous wherein a certain person, complained of another for destroying his cow by setting his dogs on the animal until they worried her. It appeared the cow of the plaintiff had seen it to break into the defendant's lot without asking leave and the defendant, or rather his men, not liking such treatment, set their dogs on her and destroyed her. Well, the result of this trial was a verdict of damages for the plaintiff of thirty dollars and costs.

Now, sir, compare the two cases. On the one hand, here is a citizen of the United States near two hundred miles from his home and his friends; he is on a visit with his family, not dreaming of danger or difficulty. Two men, or rather notes in sheep's clothing, for it is a fear that when Wilson and Reynolds made enquiry for Gen. Smith, at the time of the arrest, they said they were Mormon Elders and wanted to see President Joseph Smith, &c. Two men, I say, while he is thus enjoying himself with his family came upon him with each a loaded pistol in his hand and threatened to shoot him dead if he offered the least resistance, although no resistance had been offered. They then began to haul him about and when he asked them what they wanted with him and what was their authority, they replied they were going to take him to Missouri, and jamming their pistol at his side swore that was their authority. He requested them to let him go into the house to bid his family good bye; but this they positively refused, not even giving him the privilege to get his hat. They then forced him into the wagon, and placing themselves one on each side with a loaded pistol pressed close against his side, and repeatedly striking him with them so as to make him lame and sore for two weeks afterwards, they drove him to Dixon and ordered horses ready in fifteen minutes to drag him among his murderers; and otherwise abused, insulted, threatened and treated him in the cruellest manner possible, filling his family with the most excruciating pangs and rending the heart of his beloved companion with grief to witness their ferocious cruelty, not knowing but his life would be sacrificed before morning; and finally pursued their persecutions until it cost him from three thousand five hundred to five thousand dollars expenses; and all this without a cause, and when he sues for justice against these men, he obtains damages to the amount of FORTY DOLLARS.

On the other hand a man loses a cow which had broke into his neighbor's lot, and he obtains damages to the amount of thirty dollars. Now, sir, if this is not the effects of prejudice, amounting to oppression, then I am no judge of right and wrong. I am very much inclined to think that if Gen. Joseph Smith or any of his friends had treated any citizen of this State or any other State in the manner he was treated by those men, and they had sued for damages as he did the case would have terminated very differently; however, as it is.

The idea of a man yielding to such a degree of prejudice as to render him incapable of executing justice between man and man, merely from rumor and report, is to me perfectly ridiculous and contemptible, as well as wicked and unjust; and when a man is all the day long boasting of the rights and privileges guaranteed to every citizen of the United States under the Constitution and laws, and at the same time is so prejudiced against one of the most peaceable citizens that he does not know whether he can render him justice in a court of equity; but would rather strengthen the hands of mobocrats and law breakers, the inference that one must naturally draw is, that such a man is either a consummate scoundrel and hypocrite, or, that he is guilty of the most flagrant violation of the most sacred constitutional principles of this Republic. I am happy, sir, to have evidence daily that no such corrupt prejudice exists in the heart of General Joseph Smith, nor in the community so far as I have been able to discover.

Now, as to the exceptions these men have taken in regard to Gen. Smith's religious views or general course of conduct it matters not much. His religious views are his inalienable right, and is no-body's business, and the man who cannot render him justice on that account is a willful violator of the laws he professes to admire; and, sir, I have for more than two years past been a close observer of Gen. Smith's general course of conduct as well as his private life, and justice to him myself and the community at large compels me to say that in all my intercourse with men I never associated with a more honorable, upright, charitable, benevolent and law abiding man than is the much persecuted Gen. Smith; & sir, when I hear men speak reproachfully of him I never ask for a second evidence of his corruption and baseless. General Smith, sir, is a man of God, a man of truth, and a lover of his country, and never did I hear him breathe out curses or railing at any man because he saw fit to differ in religious matters. Shame on the principle—shame on the man or set of men who show themselves so degraded and miserably corrupt.

The last night of our stay at Dixon, I had the privilege of speaking on the principles of my religion to a number of individuals, in a kind of argument with two men; and, sir, although it is near four years since I have made a practice of preaching, it felt as sweet as ever. Truth, to an honest heart is sweet; but to a wicked man is like a piercing sword, as was manifest on that occasion, for although the principles of the gospel were laid down so plain and clear that it was impossible to misunderstand, yet the opposing party repeatedly misconstrued my language, and even his own accusations.

I cannot persuade myself that the prejudice referred to above is a general thing; there are many honorable exceptions, and I presume if the Mormons had signified their intentions of supporting the Democratic candidate for the Presidency at the ensuing election instead of dominating an independent candidate of their own choice, their prejudice would not have been so great at the trial of Reynolds & Wilson, and perhaps Gen. Smith would have obtained a judgment somewhat equivalent to the injuries he sustained from that unholy prosecution. But the Mormon people are too noble minded to be bought or biased by fear or favor, and have been too often deceived by the plausible pretensions of demagogues to put trust in any but tried friends. Gen. Smith has been an undeviating friend, not only to this community, but to the oppressed of every name or society, and we consider him as competent and qualified for the highest office of the United States as any other man, and a little more so; and a great deal more worthy of it.

In conclusion, let me say that whatever others may say, I consider it an honor to be associated with such a man as Gen. Joseph Smith and all true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ and the more wicked men despise and misrepresent.

As a body of freemen, we shall exert every honorable influence to elect the man whom we know to be every way worthy of our confidence. A man who, if this nation will receive him, will do more for them than the beloved Washington could do.

Having spoken to you thus freely, I bid you adieu, I subscribe myself your brother, in the new and everlasting covenant.

Mr. Editor:—I wish all Nauvoo would rise up and petition a repeal of the Hog law, or else support it like honest men. I hate to see a whiskey drinker, a tobacco chaser, dreading his spittle about, and I hate to see the hogs long nosed and mean as they are, acting more honest than some persons, who suppose they are Saints. The hog law is in full force, and till it is repealed, honor it and you honor the city. Policemen what of the Hog? Unwise men act like beasts.

A multitude of business compels me to close and I must forbear.

I have the honor to be your brother, in the everlasting covenant,

W. C.
Nauvoo, May 16, 1844.

TO THE CHURCH IN MAINE.

Dear Brethren:—Before you see this short epistle you undoubtedly will have seen the named General J. Smith announced as a candidate for our next president of the United States.

Whatever prejudices may heretofore have occupied your minds, as regards former presidents, and the two great political parties in the United States, together with the candidates already in the field, we are fully persuaded that when you maturely consider the claims of Gen. Smith, he will be the man of your choice for that high and responsible office. Martin Van Buren and Henry Clay, regarded as the two great champions of their respective parties will undoubtedly be considered the candidates claiming the confidence of this nation in the next presidential canvass. I would say, that it is not my intention to enter into a labored discussion of political principles, nor of the principles and characters of the two men, whose conflicting interests are nothing more than party dogmas that never did nor never can for any great length of time, give permanency to the government, nor promote the peace and best interests of its subjects.

The people of the United States, since the days of Gen. Jackson, have been distracted with the destructive mutations of government, and it is clearly to be seen by every discerning person, that the policy pursued by our last two presidents is not calculated to increase the public wealth, nor to place upon our heads crowns of honor. What redeeming principles were ever realized by the course pursued by Van Buren during his term? Can the first noble virtuous act, as a sweet smelling anvil be written of him? How has he treated the respectability of his constituents, citizens of the United States? What was his answer to the delegation from the Church of Latter Day Saints when praying for redress of grievances, while yet Missouri's soil was smoking with the blood of innocence? How were the wishes of fifty thousand freemen treated by him and his adherents? How mysteriously and disgracefully was the affair of the Caroline managed? Mr. Van Buren has demonstrated one fact if no more, that he is altogether unworthy the confidence of a free, enlightened and virtuous people, his own party themselves being judges. Mene mene, telid, indeed, written of him, for he has committed sins unpardonable in the sight of this vast republic. Although in changing the scene, a very different character appears when Mr. Clay is introduced, yet, like the "Fox and the fig," the policy of the latter would destroy what had been saved by the former. Can it be ascertained of what specific gravity Mr. Clay is? At one time he is too heavy to float with a paper medium; at another, too light to be confined to the same stratum with a metal currency. To be sure he would take every man by the hand and speak peaceably and smoothly to him; but wherein can there be discovered at the present crisis, the great advantage to the nation in placing either Mr. Clay or Mr. Van Buren at the head. They are both party men of the deepest dye, therefore unfit for the chief magistracy of the foremost nation in the world. Enough has been said of the two men; we now turn with pleasure to the man of our choice.

The Lord, the mighty God, has ordained him a deliverer and savior to this generation, if they will but heed his counsel. When the tribes of Israel were led and governed by the prophets of God, unparalleled prosperity attended them. Witness the days of Moses and Joshua. God made them saviors each in their time, to those tribes. So we, if Pharaoh will receive it, have a Moses whose rod when turned to a serpent will swallow up the serpents of all his magicians. Gen. Smith is every way calculated to preside over a great and mighty people. Although well skilled in all the learning of the times, no man can boast of being his instructor. By his own industry and the gifts of heaven, he has attained a degree in wisdom that baffles the ken of the greatest legislators and philosophers of the age. In the event of his becoming our chief magistrate, where other men might fail, either for want of virtue or knowledge, his integrity and superior foresight would guide us safely through every danger.

Having been acquainted with Mr. Smith more than seven years past, and knowing his views of the policy and powers of the government of the United States, which is now before the American people, I feel prepared to say, that was his moral worth fully known to the philanthropist, the honorable and high-minded among all people, the response, like the echo on the river Nams, would reverberate until that which was at first faintly whispered, would become loud and audible, GENERAL JOSEPH SMITH, forever.

As a body of freemen, we shall exert every honorable influence to elect the man whom we know to be every way worthy of our confidence. A man who, if this nation will receive him, will do more for them than the beloved Washington could do.

Mr. Editor:—I wish all Nauvoo would rise up and petition a repeal of the Hog law, or else support it like honest men. I hate to see a whiskey drinker, a tobacco chaser, dreading his spittle about, and I hate to see the hogs long nosed and mean as they are, acting more

The Texas Treaty.—This subject occupies a large portion of public attention, and is creating a great excitement, some what influenced from the fact that the provisions of the treaty cannot be known until its fate is decided in the Senate.

It is supposed probably with reason, that the public debt of Texas is to be assumed, and that the treaty recognizes an equity of redemption in Mexico; beyond this all is conjecture.

It is to be regretted that this important question, coming up as it does on the very threshold of the Presidential election, embarrasses the friends of both the leading candidates, and ultimately both will be forced to take sides in the matter.

It is opposed on the grounds that annexation is forced upon the people for political objects, without offering the proper time for considering the magnitude of the proposition. It is contended that a Congress should be specially elected to act in the premises; that war with Mexico would be the result, and that nothing is said in the negotiating about slavery. These objections, not without force, are presented more with the view of postponing the consideration of the question than rejecting altogether the proposition of annexation.

Those who are familiar with the hereditary obstinacy of the Spanish character, must be satisfied that Mexico will never acknowledge the independence of Texas, unless forced to do so by threats from England, and then will demand a valuable consideration. The more fact therefore, that Mexico refuses to recognize the independence of Texas does not militate against the actual independence of that Republic, or invalidate the recognition by several European powers, nor can we believe that Mexico, despairing of ever recovering Texas, would refuse to treat with us for her reserved rights should Texas be annexed as a Territory.

We entirely disclaim the idea that England desires to have Texas, but England, in case it does not come into our Union, will evidently control its internal policy and commercial intercourse greatly to our disadvantage. The question as we have said is, peculiarly embarrassing to the Presidential Candidates.

If Mr. Clay supports it, he loses in the East, and if Mr. Van Buren opposes it, he loses the South. Their friends in the Senate cannot avoid meeting the question at once, for those who vote to lay the Treaty on the table will be considered as voting against it.

We have late information from Washington; that the democratic Senators will all vote in favor of annexation with such amendments to the treaty as the honor and interests of the country require.

We may expect that Southern Whigs will also go for it, and the Treaty will be thus adopted. That point being settled, no further legislation may be required on this subject until the next session of Congress.

[N. Y. Sun]
The New Post-office Bill.—The New York Republic speaking of this matter, makes the following judicious remarks:—"The bill of Mr. Merrick, like all others in which the people have a deep interest, is in a most lethargic state. No great reform, no radical change in existing abuses, either local or national, can be expected, while politicians of all hues and grades are calculating changes, and estimating the influences which may be brought to bear upon the next Presidential election, and their own petty interests in the successful candidate. One set are instructed by their constituents to retrench the federal expences, and to reduce the remuneration of the officers of government. With amusing gravity, they pocket an enormous pay and mileage, and then look round for some hapless alldiary, whose interests are not represented in the national councils—no matter how hardly his money may have been earned, no matter how small may be its amount, no matter how urgent may be the claims of a dependent family—he is eagerly pounced upon as a victim to be offered up at the shrine of personal aggrandisement and individual popularity. His services to the country are depreciated by men whose whole labors are entirely selfish, and his remuneration magnified by those who grow rich from the public crib, and who seek to make a merit of oppressing the deserving in order that the meretricious importance of legislation may conceal their neglect of the real business for which they were appointed. The people are taxed $2,000,000 per annum, unjustly, by exorbitant postages, and representative propose to remedy it by putting naval officers on half pay! Will injustice to the defenders of the people compensate for the oppression of the people themselves?"

CARROTS FOR HORSES.

We were lately told by the proprietor of one of the most extensive livery stables in this city, that he has had an experience of several years in feeding the common yellow carrots to his horses, and that he considers them the most valuable article for winter feed that he has ever used. He considers a peck of carrots and a peck of oats worth more for a horse than a bushel of oats alone; and for horses that are not constantly employed, the carrots alone are far preferable to oats. He would purchase carrots for his horses, in preference to oats, even if they cost the same by the bushel; the price of carrots, however, is generally about half that of oats. His horses eat the carrots with a far better relish than oats, so much so, that if a peck of each are poured into the manger, they will eat all the carrots before they taste the oats. When fed constantly on carrots, a horse will drink scarcely a pail of water in a week. The culture of carrots is recommended to our farmers, as worthy of their attention. —Farmer's Gazette.

CABBAGE HEADS FROM STUMPS.

James Bates, of Norridge, Me., writing to the Farmer's Journal, says: "I do not know all that your Boston gardeners are up to, but I do know that, if cabbage stumps of any variety are set out in the spring in good order, one, two, three, or even four good sound heads will grow on them; and this they will do, year after year, until they die by accident. They are managed in the following manner:

"When the upper, narrow leaved ones, which would bear seed, are carefully rubbed off, and likewise all the lower, round leaved ones, which will form heads except the number the strength of the stump and soil are capable of bringing to perfection. At our cattle show last week Mr. John Drew, presented several such stumps with one to four heads of low Dutch cabbage on each, which have borne for three years. He sets them out in earth in the cellar in autumn cuts off the heads when required for use, and places them pretty thick in the garden in spring. The labor is trifling, the cut worm gives no trouble, and the crop sure and abundant."

Wax for Grafting.—Melt three parts of tallow, two of beeswax, and one of tallow, together. Pour this, when melted, into cold water, a pound at a time. Having rubbed your hands with lard, work the wax in the tallow till it is pliable, and when the water is forced out of it, it is ready for use, and will remain on the tree for three years. Use the wax sufficiently warmed to spread easily; cover the top of the stump about the thickness of a cent, and the slit as far as it extends, somewhat thinner.

The time for grafting depends much upon the season; but the best is when the buds first begin to open. Scions will live set at any time after the sap freely circulates, and till the apples are large as musket balls. —Farmer's and Gardeners Almanac.

Cure for Cancer.—A gentleman who has for years been afflicted with a cancer on his face, informs us, that after having followed the prescriptions of some of the most skillful physicians at the expense of more than seven hundred dollars, having twice had it cut, he has been effectually cured by simply bathing it three or four times a day with brandy and salt. Those afflicted with these virulent ulcers will do well to try it. —Marine Cult.

Interesting to Patentes.—A correspondent of the National Intelligencer says: "The Artisans and Mechanics of the U. States will be pleased to learn that, the Hon. Zadock Pratt, a practical mechanic, has introduced a resolution in the House of Representatives providing for the publication and engraving of all inventions patented in the Patent Office at Washington, which now amount to thirteen thousand five hundred and twenty-three; and that it is his intention to have copies of these works distributed, at the expense of the Office throughout the U. States, so that the numerous classes of our citizens whose genius or talent may lead them to the discovery of new inventions, may know and have constantly at hand a complete compend and view of all the models and draughts of the machines for which patents have been issued since the foundation of the Government."

This project is highly meritorious and business like, and particularly so, when it is known to be the object also of Mr. Pratt to appropriate out of the Patent fund, which is now about $100,000 with an annual yield of $10,000, a sufficient sum to purchase and distribute in the same manner a collection of scientific and other necessary books, to be at the disposal and use of the citizens of each town and hamlet.

It is gratifying to perceive that there is one man at least in our Congress to devote a part of his mind and time to his brother mechanics, and to the things that are truly useful, instead of following in the general business of President making and the manufacturing of public opinion.

The following is the resolution above referred to, which was introduced in the House by Mr. Pratt a few days ago, and agreed to:

Whereas, from the difficulty in ascertaining, even after a view of the models or draughts now in the possession of the Patent Office, for what inventions patents have issued, much time and labor, and often heavy expenses, are incurred by persons in different sections of the U. States, in perfecting what they conceive to be inventions originating with themselves, but which, to their mortification and often great pecuniary loss, they find, upon application at the Patent Office, to have been already secured by other persons, thus rendering their long and frequently expensive labors not only nugatory but absolutely discouraging to future attempts to render service to the community and reflect honor on our country.

And whereas large sums are annually paid into the Patent Office for patents, the investments whereof, after deducting necessary expenses, amount annually to about ten thousand dollars, which surplus could be advantageously applied to the benefit of the numerous class of citizens whose genius leads them to the discovery of new and useful inventions, and to whose benefit it seems reasonable that some portion of the advantage received by the public should revert; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents be and they are hereby directed to inquire into the expediency of making the necessary appropriation out of the Patent fund, to purchase an ample collection of scientific and other necessary books, to provide for the publication and distribution of the descriptions and drawings of the inventions for which patents have been granted; also, what other provisions are necessary to give greater efficiency to the office and a more perfect arrangement of the mode and drawings, within the extent of the fund arising from patents; and that the committee report by bill or otherwise.

'Licking' Lasses.—At the Thanksgiving dinner, in Philadelphia, got up by the New Englanders resident in that city, the ceremony of 'Licking' Lasses was gone through between the courses. It is thus described by the reporter of the Ledger:

It consisted of passing an enormous glass bowl, filled with molasses, in which was a pine stick, neatly whittled for the occasion, around the table, beginning with the President and making every individual stir the same with the stick, take a quantity upon his fore finger, and lick it off, without letting any drop, or without smearing his face. The dexterity with which this operation was performed constituted the test of a true blue Yankee. None were permitted to avoid the ordeal, and the awkward attempts that were made elicited bursts of laughter.

POETRY.

With what calm gladness I behold the soul

Falling from the world, and to the world

Whence my heart's home, and my heart's desire.

Sorrow, now so fit, lay my tired head

Upon thy lap, O Earth! our kindest Mother:

Thy weary child, by sweet suffering led,

Cometh to thee, her soul's deep grief to smother.

Open thine arms—she brings a wasted frame,

An aching heart, unto thy quiet dwelling—

She brings sad thoughts, which none may know

Or name,

But whose lone whispers to her heart are telling

That could she on thy pillow find repose,

Her life-long sorrows would forever close!

Fid me, then fold me, to thy sheltering breast,

And let my sleep be dreamless and unbroken.

I pine, O Mother, for that lasting rest

Which thou to many a throbbing heart hast

Spoken.

Life hath hung, O so heavy on my hands—

I am but here a pilgrim and a journeyer,

While Memory, like a constant sentinel, stands

Over the Spirit that she holds a mourner.

In silence and deep loneliness I come—

Da kened and troubled—take the wanderer

Home!

I know the spirit of neglect shall keep

Its desolate vigil my cold ashes over—

There no fond friend may ever come to weep,

Yet will thy blessed presence round me hover.

Thou and thy thousand ministrants shall smile

In ceaseless love upon my last reclining,

And I—how sweet will be my rest the while,

With thy green grass and flowers above me

Twining!

Kind Mother Earth! I thank thee for that boon,

A quiet grave—whither thou wilt give me soon!

Yes, Earth will give this sinking form a home—

But Thou who art my merciful Forgiver,

Wilt bid this weary spirit to Thee come,

And bathe its wing in Life's refreshing river!

Thou hast been pitiful to me, O God!

Thou hast drawn my heart to Thee 'mid worldly dangers—

And heard my prayer—that I be bore thy rod,

So thoughts of my last hour might not be

Strangers

But that my soul from earthly taint set free,

In garments undefiled, might calmly rise to Thee.

The incident on which the poem is founded is this: A slaveholder, passing by his slaves, from Virginia, through Ohio, to Missouri, sold a little blind boy, the only son of his mother, and she a widow, and then separated them forever.

The poor child was sold for one dollar!

THE LITTLE BLIND BOY.

Come back to me mother! Why linger away

From thy poor little blind boy, the long weary day!

I mark every footstep, I list to each tone,

And wonder my mother should leave me alone!

There are voices of sorrow and voices of gloom,

But there's no one to joy or to sorrow with me:

For each hath of pleasure and trouble his share,

And none for the poor little blind boy will care!

My mother, come back to me! Close to thy breast

Once more let thy poor little blind boy be pressed:

Once more let me feel thy warm breath on my cheek,

And hear thee in accents of tenderness speak!

O mother! I've no one to love me—no heart

Can bear like thine own in my sorrow's part!

No hand is so gentle, no voice is so kind,

Oh! none like a mother can cherish the blind!

Come back to me mother! Why linger away

FOR PRESIDENT,
GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.FOR VICE PRESIDENT,
SIDNEY RIGDON, ESQ.,
OF PENNSYLVANIA.PROSPECTUS OF THE NAUVOO NEIGHBOR.

THE Nauvo Neighbor will be devoted to Literature, Agriculture, the general news of the day; and, above all, it will advocate the principles of Gen. Joseph Smith, and pursue such a course as shall be best calculated to secure his election to the Presidency. Every lover of freedom, virtue and innocence, cannot better promote the laudable objects of patriotic emulation, than by swelling the tide of intelligence, from whence correct information, ennobling principles and political truth can flow to the world of mankind. Every individual desirous to secure the election of Gen. Smith, should use every effort in his power to procure as great a number of subscribers to the Neighbor as possible. We wish to send it into every district, city, village and hamlet throughout the length and breadth of the Union, and we look with confidence to our friends abroad to assist us by forwarding the names of all the subscribers they possibly can procure. We have a great and mighty object before us; and union, energy and untiring industry of all, will effect its glorious consummation.

Names of subscribers must invariably be accompanied with good current money. Letters addressed to the editor must be post paid to insure attention.

JOHN TAYLOR.

One of the English mottoes is, "England expects every man to do his duty;" and when an American is told to go and accomplish an adventure, he replies, "I'll try." But the Latter-Day Saints, having a "more sure word of prophecy," when a command for an important enterprise is made known, exclaim, "I WILL DO IT!" So, huzza for Joseph Smith for the next president, and let all the people say "amen." While Van Buren whines, "I can do nothing for you," the "Clay" is so soft that decent people dread to be associated with it. Who ever heard that a cabbage stump would make a staff for the United States; or a cotton skin a cover for a nation? Nobody; it needs a "Smith," like "Joseph" to prepare for the great famine that must succeed such storms and successes as has lately troubled Philadelphia.

So ye wise men, who've nothing else to do, Help save the land from woe; And Rise in your might, like freemen ever true, And elect our General Joe!

TRUTH IS MIGHTY.

We present to the public, in this week's paper, Gen. Smith's correspondence with the honorable Henry Clay, and without remarks, notes, puff, recommendations, or explanations, it will be seen, felt, and understood, that "Harry of the West," among virtuous people, is used to it! No thing that we could say, would add to its true, keen fine edged American point, it brandishes before a wandering multitude with such "dreadful splendor!" If such wisdom, eloquence, and evidence of great discernment as appears in this, and other similar productions from Gen. Smith, do not arouse this nation to a sense of their unhappy popularity, then has virtue fled, and honor become dim; and they may the people expect to lay down in sorrow, and wake in trouble. O people! if you wish to escape taxation, mobocracy, and disgrace, leave Van Buren in Kinderhook, to raise cabages, and Clay in Kentucky, to pull hemp, and place General Smith in the Presidential Chair, to raise the credit of the nation; save taxation; extend freedom, territory, and wisdom; Honor bright gentlemen, Joseph Smith, is the only true patriot in the field that tells what he is, and what he will do. The liberal man devalues liberal things, and let all the people sustain him, and sin will be as scarce as the apples of Sodom, while virtue will blossom as the rose.

HENRY CLAY.

The great Whig National Convention has at last labored in Baltimore, and brought forth "Harry of the West" for President; and Theodore Frelinghuysen, of New York, its Vice President.

No mistake "Harry" the nomination is yours—you're fairly in the field, paroled as you produced directly, with all your paraphernalia of Northern and Southern principles, anti-annexation letters, Mexican timors, &c. &c. Now for the battle;—gather up the fragments of your political wisdom—pass shilly over the monuments of past follies and disdain to glean from your desecrated epitaph, as an outfit for your present campaign, your opinions of western squatters and your celebrated, unanswerable bank speech of 1811! Since that date, you know, you have "turned about and jumped Jim Crow," and have become the fool of Whiggery, and bear upon your shoulders the great Atlas of the banking man! Never trouble yourself to recount the vacillancy of early life—overlook dewdrops and pass over the grave of Cilly—yet with the tears of a widowed wife and orphaned children—cross not the threshold of that desolated house to gaze on the sorrows there, and tell mankind, "this is my handiwork!"

—this would be impolitic. Tell not the people what you have done; but what you will do, if elected. Tell them that you will bar Texas from entering the national compact for the sufficient reason that you are awed by Mexico—that you are opposed to the augmentation of our public domain—to increasing the power and wealth of the Union, by friendly and honorable treaty, clearly unfurled by every principle of international law—and, finally, tell an astonished world that the "Hon. Henry Clay" has been a patriot, that pattern of a true republican; and that great American statesman whose name has been waited upon the breeze of distant climes—advised a persecuted people, while laying their grievances upon the shrine of our national altars, praying for redress of grievances, that he would advise them, forthwith, to remove to Oregon! What a display of patriotism! what a manifestation of greatness! What an utter contempt Henry Clay, that great embodiment of Whig principles, must entertain for the nation. He must think that it is either too corrupt, too rotten, and lost to the principles of virtue and equal rights, to do justice to her citizens, or too weak and effeminate to protect them in their rights.

A word from the Redman.—Last week about forty Sac and Fox Indians, on their way to St. Louis, gave our city a specimen of the stage of the forest, in a war dance, with paints, feathers, ribbons, war clubs, al-a-mo-de-Kee-a-Soc-wa. At the close, Kish ku kash, one of the principal chiefs, addressed the audience in substance as follows: "White men! The weather is hot; we cannot dance so well, and we have done. You have witnessed us celebrate our bye gone battles, on this sacred land, with a smile of approval, and so has the great Spirit, in yonder sky, looked upon what we have done, with a smile of equal justification; for this is the sacred land, where our nation once worshipped him, and this is the good ground, where rests the dust and bones of our brave fathers, in peace. Ohooh!"

They inform us, that in about a year they have to remove further to the west, to fulfill the late treaty, made with the agents of the U. S. Government.

Our exchanges bring us no further account of the riot in Philadelphia; but the city has been visited by a tornado which destroyed one Church and done great injury to the steam-engine Princeton, which was lying at the Navy Yard.

MR. CLAY AGAINST TEXAS.

From the Spectator.
MR. CLAY'S late letter in opposition to the re-admission of Texas into the Union will, we doubt not, kill the treaty in the Senate, but we trust it will also kill him with the American people. His anti-American, cowardly spirit, would disgrace a British colonist in the farthest corner of the continent; for however humble and dependent on European power, there is, we suppose, in every man who first draws his breath on this continent an aspiration to independence, and a fearless scorn of foreign power and domination, which the very aspect of nature inspires. To hold up the terrors of a war with Mexico on the one hand, and the contemptible terrapin policy of limiting the extension of our Confederacy, and the blessings it can impart, to the States now composing it, on the other, as fit inducements to reject Texas from the Union, is to us most amazing fall for a man. Of Mr. CLAY's internal policy for the Government of the Union we have ever had no respect; but we did suppose that he had an American heart—full of American aspirations for the extension of our free institutions over this wide continent; full of American courage to meet the interference of foreign nations with our domestic relations; too brave to quit before such a power as Mexico, too proud to stoop to Southern brow to the mandates of Abolitionists. We have been disappointed; and we now feel for him nothing but loathing and scorn. Whether he has pursued the right course for the preservation of the Union, or his own personal respect, time will develop. We believe he has struck a vital blow at the one, and effectually destroyed the other.

Happiness.—An eminent modern writer beautifully says:—"The foundation of domestic happiness is faith in the virtue of woman. The foundation of political happiness—a confidence in the integrity of man. The foundation of all happiness, temporal and eternal, reliance on the goodness of God."

Clay and Adams.—The Bargain.—That there was a corrupt coalition, a bargain, an understanding, between Adams and Clay, by which the former was made President in 1824, by the management of the latter, and in defiance of the will of the majority, there can be no doubt. In 1827, the Hon. George McDuffie made the following explicit charge: "Now, I assert, and pledge my reputation, upon the truth of the assertion, that John Q. Adams was elected against the will of a majority of the American People, and a majority of the States, by a minority of the Representatives in Congress, a considerable portion of which minority, including Henry Clay, voted against their avowed principles, and against what they knew to be the will of a large majority of their constituents."

I also as art, and am willing to stake my humble stock of political reputation upon the truth of the assertion, that the circumstances of the extraordinary coalition between Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay, furnish as strong evidence of an abandonment of Political Principle on the part of Mr. Clay, and a corrupt Political Bargain between him and Mr. Adams, as is ordinarily required in the courts of justice, to establish the guilt of those who are charged with the highest crimes known to the law.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GEN. JOSEPH SMITH AND THE HON. HENRY CLAY.

NATUO, ILL., Nov. 4th, 1843.

Hon. H. CLAY.—Dear Sir:—As we understand you are a candidate for the presidency at the next election; and as the Latter Day Saints, (sometimes called Mormons, who now constitute a numerous class in the school politics of this vast republic,) have been robbed of an immense amount of property, and endured nameless sufferings by the State of Missouri, and from her borders have been driven by force of arms, contrary to our national covenants; and as in vain we have sought redress by all constitutional, legal and honorable means, in her courts, her executive councils, and her legislative halls; and as we have petitioned Congress to take cognizance of our sufferings without effect; we have judged it wisdom to address you in this communication, and solicit an immediate, specific and candid reply to What will be your rule of action relative to us as a people, should fortune favor your ascension to the chief magistracy?

Most respectfully, sir, your friend, and the friend of peace, good order,
and constitutional rights,
JOSEPH SMITH.

In behalf of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.
Hon. H. Clay, Ashland, Ky.

ASHLAND, Nov. 15, 1843.
Dear Sir:—I have received your letter in behalf of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, stating that you understand that I am a candidate for the Presidency, and enquiring what would be my rule of action relative to you, as a people, should I be elected.

I am profoundly grateful for the numerous and strong expressions of the people in my behalf, as a candidate for President of the United States; but I do not so consider myself. That much depends upon future events, and upon my sense of duty.

Should I be a candidate, I can enter into no engagements, make no promises, give no pledge, to any particular portion of the people of the United States. If I ever enter into that high office, I must go into it free and unfettered, with no guarantees but such as are to be drawn from my whole life, character and conduct.

It is not inconsistent with this declaration to say, that I have viewed with a lively interest, the progress of the Latter Day Saints; that I have sympathized in their sufferings under injustice, as it appeared to me, which has been inflicted upon them; and that I think, in common with all other religious communities, they ought to enjoy the security and the protection of the constitution and the laws.

I am, with great respect, your friend and obedient servant,
H. CLAY.

JOSEPH SMITH, Esq.

GEN. SMITH'S REJOINER.

NAUVOO, ILL., May 13th, 1844.

Sir:—Your answer to my inquiry, "what would be your rule of action towards the Latter Day Saints, should you be elected president of the United States," has been under consideration since last November, in the fond expectation, that you would give (for every honest citizen has a right to demand it) to the country, a manifesto of your views of the best method and means which would secure to the people, the whole people, the most freedom, the most happiness, the most union, the most wealth, the most fame, the most glory at home, and the most honor abroad, at the least expense; but I have waited in vain. So far as you have made public declarations, they have been made, like your answer to the above, soft to flatter, rather than solid to feed the people. You seem to abandon all former policy which may have actuated you in the discharge of a statesman's duty, when the vigor of intellect and the force of virtue, should have sought out an everlasting habitation for liberty; when, as a wise man, a true patriot, and a friend to mankind, you should have resolved, to ameliorate the awful condition of our bleeding country by a mighty plan of wisdom, righteousness, justice, goodness and mercy, that would have brought back the golden days of our nation's youth, vigor and vivacity; when prosperity crowned the efforts of a youthful Republic, when the gentle aspirations of the sons of liberty were, "we are one."

In your answer to my questions, last fall, that regular tact of modern politicians, declaring, "if you ever enter into this high office, you must go into it free and unfettered, with no guarantee but such as are to be drawn from your whole life, character and conduct," so much resembles a lottery vender's sign, with the goddess of good luck sitting on the ear of fortune, astraddle of the horn of plenty, and driving the merry steeds of bridle, without reins or bridle, that I cannot help exclaiming: O frail man! what have you done that will exalt you? Can any thing be drawn from your life, character or conduct that is worthy of being held up to the gaze of this nation as a model of virtue, clarity and wisdom? Are you not a very picture, with more than two blanks to a prize? Leaving many things prior to your Ghent treaty; let the world look at that, and see where the wisdom, honor, and patriotism which ought to have characterized the plenipotentiary of the only free nation upon the earth? A quarter of a century's negotiation to obtain our rights on the north eastern boundary, and the mellow manner in which Oregon tries to shine as American Territory, coupled with your presidential race, and come-by-hance secretaryship, in 1823, all go to convince the friends of freedom, the golden patriots of Jeffersonian democracy; free trade and sailo's rights; and the protectors of person and property, that an honorable war is better than a dishonorable peace.

But had you really wanted to have exhibited the wisdom, clemency, benevolence and dignity of a great man in this boasted Republic, when fifteen thousand free citizens were exiled from their own homes, lands and property, in the wonderful patriotic State of Missouri, and you then upon your oath and honor, occupying the exalted station of a senator of Congress from the noble State of Kentucky; why did you not allow the world your loyalty to law and order, by using all honorable means to restore the innocent to their rights and property? Why, Sir, the more we search into your character and conduct, the more we must exclaim from holy writ, the true is known by its fruit.

Again, this is not all; rather than show yourself an honest man, by guaranteeing to the people what you will do in case you should be elected president; "you can enter into no engagement, make no promises, and give no pledges," as to what you will do. Well, it may be that some hot headed partisan would take such nothingness upon trust, but sensible men and even ladies would think themselves insulted by such an evasion of coming events! If a tempest is expected, why not prepare to meet it; and in the language of the poet, exclaim:—
"Then let the trial come; and witness thou, If terror be upon me; if I shrink Or falter in my strength to meet the storm, When hardest it beest me?"

True greatness never wavers, but when the Missouri compromise was entered into by you, for the benefit of slavery, there was a mighty shrinkage of sealers honor; and from that day, Sir, the sterling Yankee, the struggling Abolitionist, and the staunch Democrat, with a large number of the liberal minded Whigs, have marked you as a black-leg in politics, begging for a chance to shuffle yourself into the Presidential chair, where you might deal out the destinies of our beloved country for a game of drags, that would end in "Hark from the tombs a doleful sound." Start not at this picture; for your "whole life, character and conduct" have been spotted with deeds that cannot be blushed upon the face of a virtuous patriot; so you must be contented in your lot, while crime cowardice, cupidity or low cunning have handed you down from the high tower of a statesman, to the black hole of a gambler. A man that accepts a challenge or fights a duel, is nothing more nor less than a murderer, for holy writ declares that "who sheds man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed;" and when in the renowned city of Washington, the notorious Henry Clay dropped from the summit of a senator to the sink of a scoundrel, to shoot at that chalk line of a Randolph he not only disgraced his own fame, family and friends, but he polluted the sanctum sanctorum of American glory; and the kingly blackguards throughout the whole world, are pointing the finger of scorn at the boasted " asylum of the oppressed," and hissing at American statesmen, as gentlemen vagabonds and murderers, holding the olive branch of peace in one hand, and a pistol for death in the other! Well might the Savior rebuke the heads of this nation with, go into you serpents, Pharisees, hypocrites, for the United States government, and Congress, with a few honorable exceptions, have gone the way of Cain and must perish in their ganyagings, like Korah and his wicked host. And honest men of every clime, and the innocent, poor, and oppressed, as well as heathens, pagans, and Indians, every where who could but hope that the tree of liberty would yield some precious fruit for the hungry human race, and shed some balm leaves for the healing of nations, have long since given up all hopes of equal rights, of justice and judgment, of truth and virtue, when such polluted, vain, heaven daring, bogus patriots, are forced or flung into the front rank of government, to guide the destinies of millions. Crape the heavens with weeds of woe; gird the earth with scabbles, and let hell mutter one melody in commemoration of fallen splendor! for the glory of America has departed, and God will set a flaming sword to guard the tree of liberty, while such mint-imiting Herods as Van Buren, Boggs, Benton, Calhoun and Clay, are thrust out of the realms of virtue as fit subjects for the kingdom of fallen greatness; vox reprobi, vox Diaboli! In your late addresses to the people of South Carolina, where rebellion budded but could not blossom, you "renounced ultraism," "high tariff," and almost banished your "banking system," for the more certain standard of "public opinion."

This is all very well, and marks the intention of a politician, the calculations of a demagogue, and the allowance for feelings of a shrewd manager, just as truly as the weather cock does the wind when it turns upon the spire. Hostings for the South, barbaques for the west, confidential letters for the north, and "American system" for the east.
"Jullaby baby upon the tree top,
And when the wind blows the cradle will rock."
Suppose you should also, taking your "whole life, character and conduct," into consideration, and as many hands make light work, stir up the old "Clay party," the "National Republican party," "High Protective Tariff party," and the late cotton skin party, with all their paraphernalia, ultraism, se plus ultraism,—sine qua non, which have grown with your growth, strengthened with your strength, and shrunk with your shrinkage, and ask the people of this enlightened Republic what they think of your powers and policy as a statesman; for truly it would seem, from all past remains of privileges, politics, projects and pictures, that you are the Clay, and the people the potter; and as some vessels are marred in the hands of the potter, the natural conclusion is, that you are a vessel of dishonor.

You may complain that a close examination of your "whole life, character and conduct," places you as a Kentuckian would pleasantly term it, "in a bad fix," but Sir, when the nation has sunk deeper and deeper in the mud, at every turn of the great wheels of the union, while you have acted as one of the principle drivers; it becomes the bounden duty of the whole community, as one man, to whisper you on every point of government, to uncover every net of your life, and enquire what mighty acts you have done to benefit the nation; how much you have tithed the mint to gratify your lust; and why the fragments of your raiment hang upon the thorns by the path, as signals to beware.

But your shrinkage is truly wonderful! Not only your banking system, and high tariff project, have vanished from your mind "like the bascule fabric of a vision," but the annexation of Texas has touched your pathetic sensibilities of national pride so acutely, that the poor Texans, your own brethren, may fall back into the ferocity of Mexico, or be sold at auction to British stock jobbers, and all is well, for if the old senator from Kentucky ask fearful it would millitate against my interest in the north, to enlarge the borders of the union in the south. Truly a poor wise child is better than an old foolish king, who will be no longer admonished. Who ever heard of a nation that had too much territory? Was it ever bad policy to make friends? Has any people ever become too good to do good? No, never; but the ambition and vanity of some men have flown away with their wisdom and judgment, and left a creaking skeleton to occupy the place of a noble soul.

Why, Sir, the condition of the whole earth is lamentable. Texas dreads the teeth and for nails of Mexico. Oregon has the rheumatism, brought on by a horrid exposure to the heat and cold of British and American trappers; Canada has caught a bad cold from extreme fatigue in the patriot war; South America has the headache, caused by bumps against the beams of Catholicity and Spanish sovereignty; Spain has the gripes from age and inquisition; France trembles and wastes under the effects of contagious diseases; England groans with the gout, and wriggles with wine; Italy and the German states are pale with the consumption; Prussia, Poland, and the little contigous dynasties, duchies, and domains, have the mumps so severely that who's head is sick, and the whole heart is faint; Russia has the cramp by lineage; Turkey has the numb palsy; Africa, from the curse of God, has lost the use of her limbs; China is ruined by the Queen's evil, and the test of Asia fearfully exposed to the small pox; the natural way from British pedlars; the islands of the sea are almost dead with the scurvy; the Indians are blind and lame, and the United States, which ought to be the good physician with "balm from Gilead," and an "asylum for the oppressed," has booted, and is booting up into the council chamber of the government, a clique of political gamblers, to play for the old clothes and all shores of a sick world; and no pledge, no promise to any particular portion of the people, that their faithful heirs will ever receive a cent of their Father's legacy! Away with such sill important, self aggrandizing, and self willed demagogues! their friendship is colder than polar ice; and their professions meaner than the damnation of hell.

Oh! man! when such a great dilemma of the globe, such a tremendous convulsion of kingdoms, shakes the earth from center to circumference; when castles, prison houses, and cellars raise a cry to God against the cruelty of man; when the mourning of the fatherless and the widow causes anguish in heaven; when the poor among all nations cry day and night for bread and a shelter from the heat and storm; and when the degraded black slave holds up his mangled hands to the great statesmen of the United States; and sings,

"O liberty, where are thy charms,
That ages have told me were sweet?
And when fifteen thousand free citizens of the high blooded Republic of North America, are robbed and driven from one state to another without redress or redemption, it is not only time for a candidate for the presidency to pledge himself to execute judgment and justice in righteousness, law or no law, but it is his bounden duty, as a man, for the honor of a disgraced country and for the salvation of a once virtuous people to call for a union of all honest men, and appease the wrath of God, by acts of wisdom, holiness and virtue! The fervent prayer of a righteous man avails much.

Perhaps you may think, I go too far, with my strictures and insinuations because in your concluding paragraph you say, "It is not inconsistent with your declarations to say, that you have viewed with a lively interest the progress of the Latter Day Saints, that you have sympathized in their sufferings, under injustice as it appeared to you, what has been inflicted upon them; and that you think, in common with all other religious communities they ought to enjoy the security and protection of the constitution and the laws." If words were not wind, and imagination not a vapor, such "views" with a lively interest might coax out a few Mormon votes; such sympathy for their suffering under injustice, might heal some of the sick, yet lingering amongst them, raise some of the dead and recover some of their property, from Missouri, and finally if thought was not a phantom, we might in common with other religious communities, you think enjoy the security and protection of the constitution and laws! But during ten years, while the Latter Day Saints have bled, been robbed, driven from their own lands, paid oceans of money into the Treasury to pay your renowned self and others for legal aid in the d-d-d-ing out equal rights and privileges to those in common with all other religious communities, they have waited and expected in vain! If you have possessed any patriotism, it has been voided by your popularity for fear the saint would fall in love with his charms. Blind charity and dumb justice never do much towards alleviating the wants of the needy, but, at least show which way the wind blows. It is currently rumored that your dearer resort for the Latter Day Saints, is, to emigrate to Oregon, or California; such cruel humanity; such noble injustice; such honorable cowardice; such foolish wisdom, and such vicious virtue, could only emanate from Clay. After the saints have been plundered of three or four millions of land and property by the people and powers of the sovereign state of Missouri; after they have sought for redress and redemption from the County Court to Congress, and been denied through religious prejudice, and ecclesiastical dignity; after they have bled a city and two temples at an immense expense of labor and treasure; after they have increased from hundreds to hundreds of thousands; and after they have sent missionaries to the various nations of the earth, to gather Israel according to the predictions of all the holy prophets since the world began, that great plenipotentiary, the renowned Secretary of State, the ignoble duelist, the gambling Senator, and Whig candidate for the presidency, Henry Clay; the wise Kentucky Lawyer advises the Latter Day Saints to go to Oregon to obtain Justice and set up a government of their own; O ye crowned heads among all nations, is not Mr. Clay a wise man, and very patriotic! why Great God! to transport 200,000 people through a vast prairie; over the Rocky Mountains, to Oregon, a distance of nearly 2000 miles, would cost more than four millions; or should they go by Cape

Horn, in ships to Calif-rnia, the cost would be more than twenty millions! and all this to save the United States from inheriting the disgrace of Missouri, for murdering and robbing the saints with impunity! Benton and Van Buren, who make no secret to say, if they get into power, they will carry out Boggs exterminating plan to rid the country of the Latter Day Saints, are

"Little nipperkins of milk, Compared to "Clay's" great aqua fortis jaw."
Why, he is a real giant in humanity; send the Mormons to Oregon and free Missouri from debt and disgrace! Ah! sir, let this doctrine go to and fro throughout the whole earth, that we, as Van Buren said, know your cause is just but the United States government can do nothing for you, because it has no power; you must go to Oregon, and get justice from the Indians.

I mourn for the depravity of the world; I despise the hypocrisy of christianity; I hate the imbecility of american statesmen; I detest the shrinkage of candidates for office, from pledges and responsibility; I long for a day of righteousness, when he, "whose right it is to reign, shall judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the attack of the earth," and I pray God, who hath given our fathers a promise of a perfect government in the last days, to purify the hearts of the people and hasten the welcome day.

"With the highest consideration, for virtue and unadulterated freedom,
I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

Mysterious Express Robbery.—On Wednesday evening last, between 5 and 6 o'clock, three kegs each containing $1,000 in specie, chiefly in American half dollars, were despatched in charge of the express of Messrs. Adams & Co., from the office of Messrs. Samuel Harris & Son, brokers, at the corner of Baltimore and Light streets, in this city, consigned to a firm in Wall st. New York. The kegs were taken to the railroad depot in Pratt st., previous to the departure of the 7 o'clock train for Philadelphia, and placed in the baggage car, on the top of the express chest which had already been filled with money packages, among which was $50,000 in gold and silver. The car was then locked as usual, and the train, at the appointed time, started for Philadelphia. On the arrival of the cars at Wilmington, the baggage car was still locked, but on opening it to change some way-baggage, it was found that the three kegs of specie had mysteriously disappeared. To unlock a car while in motion quietly—roll out three kegs of specie, each containing $1,000, safely lock the car again—and escape detection, is accomplishing a feat unsurpassed in this age of bold and ingenious robbery. The police of Baltimore aided by the officers of the rail road company have been sedulously engaged since the robbery in endeavoring to gain some clue by which to ferret out the thief, but as yet the affair remains shrouded in impenetrable mystery.

The Ruling Passion.—Bonaparte died in his military garb, and his Field Marshal's uniform and boots, which he had ordered to be put on a short time previous to his dissolution. Augustus Cæsar chose to die in a standing position, and was careful in arranging his person and dress for the occasion. Julius Cæsar, when slain by the conspirators in the Capitol concealed his face beneath the folds of his toga, so that his enemies might not see the death-pang upon his countenance; Seward B. of Northumberland, when at the point of death quitted his bed and put on his armor, saying, "that it became not a man to die like a beast." A more remarkable instance is that of Maria Louisa, of Austria, who a short time before she breathed her last, having fallen into a slight slumber, one of the ladies in attendance remarked that her Majesty seemed to be asleep. "No," said she, "I could sleep if I would indulge repose; but I am sensible of the near approach of death, I would not allow myself to be surprised by him in my sleep; I wish to meet my dissolution awake."

Such are the efforts of poor, expiring mortality—still clinging to earth—still laboring for the breath of posterity, and exerting itself in efforts to fall with grace, unness to the last.

One of the most characteristic illustrations, however, of the "ruling passion," has just occurred in the South Carolina. A well known betting man—the brother of a prominent turfman of the old Dominion—was lying so dangerously ill that his friends expected his dissolution immediately. The physician, bending over his dying patient, apprised him that he could not live but a few hours, whereupon the latter faintly asked him the amount of his bill. The astonished doctor replied, "Fifty dollars." "Then," replied the dying man, "I'll bet you double or quits that I live till morning." He lived just long enough to win the doctor's bill, and then died. [Raleighs Register.

Gale at Buffalo.—The Commercial Advertiser, of the 24th, says, a tornado swept over that city on the 23d. It extended a few miles westward, and appears to have been more terrible in appearance than effect. A few spars were broken among the shipping in port, and the unfinished wall of the addition building to the Eagle Furnace was partially blown down.

Lamentable Occurrence.—At Pittsburgh, Pa., on Monday morning, a few moments after Mr. Updegraff, Engineer at Messrs. Bailey, Brown, & Co's Rolling Mill, had started the engine, one of the boilers exploded, throwing him into the flywheel pit, by which he died a few hours after.

CHAUNCEY L. HIGBEE.

Testimony of Margaret J. Nyman, as Chauncey L. Higbee, before the High Council of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, in the City of Nauvoo, May 21, 1842.

Some time during the month of March last, Chauncey L. Higbee, came to my mother's house, early one evening, and proposed a walk to a spelling school. My sister Matilda, and myself accompanied him; but, changing our design on the way, we stopped at Mrs. Fullers. During the evening's interview, he, (as I have since learned,) with wicked lies proposed that I should yield to his desires, and indulge in sexual intercourse with him, stating that such intercourse might be freely indulged in, and was no sin. That any respectable female might indulge in sexual intercourse, and there was no sin in it, providing the person so indulging, keep the same to herself, for there could be no sin, where there was no accuser—and most clandestinely, with wicked lies, persuaded me to yield, by using the name of Joseph Smith; and as I have since learned, totally false and unauthorized; and in consequence of those arguments, I was influenced to yield to my seducer, Chauncey L. Higbee.

I further state that I have no personal acquaintance with Joseph Smith, and never heard him teach such doctrines, as stated by Chauncey L. Higbee, either directly or indirectly. I heartily repent before God, asking the forgiveness of my brethren.

Nauvoo, May 21st, 1842.

During this spring Chauncey L. Higbee, kept company with me from time to time, and as I have since learned, wickedly, deceitfully, and with lies in his mouth, urged me vehemently to yield to his desires; that there could be no wrong in having sexual intercourse with any female that could keep the same to herself;—most villainously and lyingly stating that he had been so instructed by Joseph Smith, and that there was no sin where there was no accuser.—Also, vowing he would marry me. Not succeeding, he, on one occasion, brought one, who affirmed that such intercourse was tolerated by the heads of the Church, I have since found him also to be a lying conspirator against female virtue and chastity, having never received such teachings from the heads of the church; but I was at the time partially influenced to believe in consequence of the source from whom I received it. I yielded and became subject to the will of my seducer, Chauncey L. Higbee; and having since found out to my satisfaction, that a number of wicked men have conspired to use the name of Joseph Smith, or the heads of the Church, falsely and wickedly to enable them to gratify their lusts, thereby destroying female innocence and virtue, I repent before God and my brethren and ask forgiveness.

I further testify that I never had any personal acquaintance with Joseph Smith, and never heard him teach such doctrines as Higbee, stated either directly or indirectly.

GEO. W. HARRIS, Alderman.

Nauvoo, May 24th, 1842.

Some two or three weeks since, in consequence of brother Joseph Smith's teachings to the sisters, I began to be alarmed concerning myself, and certain teachings which I had received from Chauncey L. Higbee, and questioned him (Higbee) about his teaching, for I was pretty well persuaded from Joseph's public teachings that Chauncey had been telling falsehoods; but Chauncey said that Joseph now taught as he did through necessity, on account of the prejudices of the people, and his own family particularly, as they had not become believers in the doctrine. I then became satisfied that all of Chauncey's teaching had been false, and that he had never been authorized by any one in authority to make any such communication to me. Chauncey L. Higbee's teaching and conduct were as follows. When he first came to my house soon after the special conference this spring, Chauncey commenced joking me about my getting married, and wanted to know how long it had been since my husband died, and soon removed his seat near me; and began his seducing insinuations by saying it was no harm to have sexual intercourse with women if they would keep it to themselves, and continued to urge me to yield to his desires, and urged me vehemently, and said he and Joseph were good friends, and he teaches me this doctrine; and allowed me such privileges, and there is no harm in it and Joseph Smith says so. I told him I did not believe it, and had heard no such teaching from Joseph, nor from the stand; but that it was wicked to commit adultery, &c. Chauncey said that did not mean single women, but married women; and continued to press his instructions and arguments until after dark, and until I was inclined to believe, for he called God to witness of the truth, and was so solemn and confident, I yielded to his temptations, having received the strongest assurance from him that Joseph approved it and would uphold me in it. He also told me that many others were following the same course of conduct. As I still had some doubts, near the close of our interview, I again suggested my fears that I had done wrong, and should lose the confidence of the brethren, when he assured me that it was right, and he would bring a witness to confirm what he had taught. When he came again, I still had doubts, I told him I understood he (Higbee) had recently been baptized, and that Joseph, when he confirmed him, told him to quit all his iniquitous practices.—Chauncey said it was not for such things that he was baptized, for you think I would be baptized for such a thing and then go into it so soon again? Chauncey Higbee, said it would never be known, I told him it might be told in bringing forth. Chauncey said there was no danger, and that Dr. Bennett understood it, and would come and take it away, if there was any thing.

GEO. W. HARRIS, Alderman.

Nauvoo, May 23th, 1842.

Extract from the testimony of Catherine Warren, vs. Chauncey L. Higbee, before the High Council of the Church, &c. I have had unlawful connexion with Chauncey L. Higbee. Chauncey Higbee, taught the same doctrine as was taught by J. C. Bennett, and that Joseph Smith, taught and practiced the things, but he stated that he did not have it from Joseph, but he had his information from Dr. John C. Bennett. He, Chauncey L. Higbee, has gained his object about five or six times, Chauncey L. Higbee, also made propositions to keep me with food if I would submit to his desires.

We have abundance of like testimony on hand, which may be forth coming if we are compelled, at present the foregoing may suffice.

Why have you not published this before?—We answer, on account of the humility and entreaties of Higbee, at the time, and on account of the feelings of his parents, who are highly respectable, we have forbore until now. This character of C. L. Higbee, is so infamous, and his exertions such as to destroy every principle of righteousness, that forbearance is no longer a virtue.

After all that this Chauncey L. Higbee has done, in wickedly and maliciously using the name of Joseph Smith, to persuade innocent females to submit to gratify his hellish lusts; and then blast the characters of the most chaste, pure virtuous, and philanthropic man on earth, to screen himself from the law of the land, and the just indignation of an insulted people, and save himself from the Penitentiary, or whatever punishment his unparalleled crimes merit; has entered into a conspiracy with the Laws, and others against the life of those, who are knowing to his abandoned conduct; thus hoping to save himself from the disgrace which must follow an exposure, and wreak his vengeance and gratify his revenge for his awful disappointments.

State of Illinois,
City of Nauvoo, ss.

Personally appeared before me, Willard Richards, Clerk of the Municipal Court, in and for the city aforesaid, J. P. Green, Marshall of said city, who being duly sworn according to Ordinance, deposed and said that on Friday the 20th day of April, 1841, Mr. O. P. Rockwell, informed me that one Augustin Spencer, had committed an assault on the person of Alderman, Orson Spencer; and the Mayor of the city had sent for said A. Spencer. I repaired immediately to Mr. Spencer's Law Office, where I found said A. Spencer, made him my prisoner, and informed him he must go with me to the Mayor's Office, when he said, he would not go. I then commanded R. D. Foster, Chauncey L. Higbee, and Charles A. Foster to assist me in taking said Spencer to the Mayor's Office; but they swore they would not, used many threatening oaths and aspersions; saying they would "see the Mayor and this City damned, and then they would not;" but soon after they followed me and the prisoner to the office door, when the Mayor ordered me to arrest said Foster and Higbee, and for refusing to assist me in the discharge of my duty, I immediately attempted to arrest them, but they resisted, and with horrid imprecations threatened to shoot. I laid hold of Charles A. Foster, and I told him he was my prisoner, and must go into the office with me, when R. D. Foster, laid violent hands on me, and I then commanded the byo standers to assist me, there not being sufficient present, the Mayor laid hold on the two Fosters at the same time. At that instant Charles A. Foster drew a double barrel pistol on the Mayor, Joseph Smith, but it was instantly, wrenched from his hand, and he afterwards declared he "would have shot you (speaking to the Mayor) if you had not taken my pistol from me, and would have thanked God for the privilege of ridding the world of a tyrant." Chauncey L. Higbee responded to Foster's threats and swore by the Eternal God "I will do it." R. D. Foster then asked said Higbee if he had his pistols with him, C. L. Higbee said "No if I had, I swear by God I would shoot the right man, for he is in the crowd" looking the Mayor full in the face, and stretching his hand out towards the Mayor when he spoke it.

May 24th, 1842.

Personally appeared before me, George W. Harris, alderman, of said city, Matilda J. Nyman, the signer of the above instrument, and testified, under oath, that the above declaration was true.

GEO. W. HARRIS, Alderman.

Nauvoo, May 24th, 1842.

Some two or three weeks since, in consequence of brother Joseph Smith's teachings to the sisters, I began to be alarmed concerning myself, and certain teachings which I had received from Chauncey L. Higbee, and questioned him (Higbee) about his teaching, for I was pretty well persuaded from Joseph's public teachings that Chauncey had been telling falsehoods; but Chauncey said that Joseph now taught as he did through necessity, on account of the prejudices of the people, and his own family particularly, as they had not become believers in the doctrine. I then became satisfied that all of Chauncey's teaching had been false, and that he had never been authorized by any one in authority to make any such communication to me. Chauncey L. Higbee's teaching and conduct were as follows. When he first came to my house soon after the special conference this spring, Chauncey commenced joking me about my getting married, and wanted to know how long it had been since my husband died, and soon removed his seat near me; and began his seducing insinuations by saying it was no harm to have sexual intercourse with women if they would keep it to themselves, and continued to urge me to yield to his desires, and urged me vehemently, and said he and Joseph were good friends, and he teaches me this doctrine; and allowed me such privileges, and there is no harm in it and Joseph Smith says so. I told him I did not believe it, and had heard no such teaching from Joseph, nor from the stand; but that it was wicked to commit adultery, &c. Chauncey said that did not mean single women, but married women; and continued to press his instructions and arguments until after dark, and until I was inclined to believe, for he called God to witness of the truth, and was so solemn and confident, I yielded to his temptations, having received the strongest assurance from him that Joseph approved it and would uphold me in it. He also told me that many others were following the same course of conduct. As I still had some doubts, near the close of our interview, I again suggested my fears that I had done wrong, and should lose the confidence of the brethren, when he assured me that it was right, and he would bring a witness to confirm what he had taught. When he came again, I still had doubts, I told him I understood he (Higbee) had recently been baptized, and that Joseph, when he confirmed him, told him to quit all his iniquitous practices.—Chauncey said it was not for such things that he was baptized, for you think I would be baptized for such a thing and then go into it so soon again? Chauncey Higbee, said it would never be known, I told him it might be told in bringing forth. Chauncey said there was no danger, and that Dr. Bennett understood it, and would come and take it away, if there was any thing.

I further testify that I never had any personal acquaintance with Joseph Smith, and never heard him teach such doctrines as Higbee, stated either directly or indirectly.

By this time some forty or fifty had assembled around the office door, among whom was Dr. Richards, the City Recorder, who was standing peacefully and attentively on the step of the door, when R. D. Foster who was raging and foaming about the Mayor and others, came up to him suddenly and shaking his fists in the Recorder's face, in the most threatening and abusive manner said "and you too, by God are another damned black hearted villain," with many more such like opprobrious epithets which he repeated many times. The said Fosters and Higbee were soon after arrested, brought before the Mayor and fined each in the sum of one hundred dollars for refusing to obey the Marshall's orders at Mr. Mar's office.

State of Illinois,
City of Nauvoo, ss.

Personally appeared before me Willard Richards, Clerk of the Municipal Court, said city, Joseph W. Coolidge and Elbridge Tufts, after being duly sworn deposed and said, that they have read the foregoing Affidavit of John P. Green, Marshall of said city, that they were present at the door of the Mayor's office, on the 20th of April 1844; when said Marshall arrived with the prisoner A. Spencer, that they saw and heard what transpired after the arrival of the Marshall as aforesaid, as stated in said affidavit and that the same is verily true.

JOSEPH W. COOLIDGE, ELBRIDGE TUFTS.

Sworn to and subscribed this 25th day of May, 1844, before me WILLARD RICHARDS, Clerk. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal of court. The time and place above written.

WILLARD RICHARDS,
Clerk M. C. C. N.

In addition to the above affidavits, we refer the reader to the depositions of A. B. Williams and M. G. Eaton, published in the "Neighbour," of the 15th May inst. and ask what honest man is safe while such, hot headed, law breaking, peace disturbing, angry threatening, heaven darning, God provoking beings, are stalking abroad in our midst! And what virtuous female will ever venture again to be within the reach of such a creature? And when complaints have been made to the Grand Jury of Hancock County, against such abominable wretches as are palming themselves upon us, to gratify their hellish lusts; what have the Jury done? testimony.

We have abundance now in store, and every moment brings us more. And all who are not now satisfied of the true character of Chauncey L. Higbee, and his clique, we think them hard to satisfy. But more anon, if they will not cease their threatnings and abominations.

Muscular Motion.—Numerous experiments on the relative heat and pulsation, of animals under different latitudes, have shown that men in this climate pulsate, on an average, seventy eight times in a minute, while in the Canadas they do not exceed fifty seven. This circumstance affords proof positive of the fact that the transitions from heat to cold vary the powers of pulsation. The common watch is computed to tick 17,153 times in one hour. This is 511,688 in a day, and consequently 150,165,390 in a year, supposing the year to be but 365 days; and as some watches do by care, preserve their powers of action for 100 years, we have the gross number of 12,016,539,000 times for one time piece. Now, although the watch is formed of hard metal, and therefore, to all appearance, likely to endure long yet man possesses within him, a piece of machinery composed of an extremely soft material, which beats nearly 5000 times every hour, 120,000 times each day, and 43,000,000 per year, and consequently 4,380,000,000 times in 100 years an age frequently attained by healthy persons who lead temperate lives. This piece of Machinery is the heart.

Opinion of Dr. Watts.—Among the accomplishments of youth there is none preferable to a decent and agreeable behavior among men, a modest freedom of speech, a soft and elegant manner of address, a graceful and lovely deportment, a cheerful gravity and good humor, with a mind appearing ever serene under the ruffling accidents of human life.—And to this, a pleasing solemnity of reverence when the discourse turns upon any thing sacred and divine; a becoming neglect of injuries, a hatred of calumny and slander, a habit of speaking well of others, a pleasing benevolence and a readiness to do good to mankind, a special compassion to the miserable, with an air and countenance in a natural and unaffected manner, expressive of all these excellent qualifications.

An editor in Vermont says—"A friend informs us that he could send us a marriage notice, but as the young gentleman does not take a paper, he does not think editors under any obligations to publish his marriage. That's a point, but the mystery of it is, how any young lady in this age can afford to marry a fellow that takes no paper! Poor thing!

Launch of the U. S. Steam Sloop-of-War Michigan.—The Michigan built under contract by Messrs Stockhouse & Tomlinson, of Pittsburgh, was launched from the Navy-Yard at Erie, Pa. on the 5th inst.

DREADFUL RAIL-ROAD ACCIDENT.

We are indebted to Ephraim Arnold, Esq. of this vicinity, who returned on the morning train of cars from Madison, for the particulars of a most calamitous accident which occurred on the evening of the 28th., while the cars were descending the inclined plane at that place. There were some 18 or 20 passengers in the car, which was overtaken on the track by a heavy freight of cars, when about half way down the plane. The collision forced the passenger car off the track, ran over and crushed it almost to atoms. Four of the passengers were almost instantly killed, and nearly all the others severely hurt. The names of those who were killed, are Mr. Bundrum of Madison, Mr. Brooks of Bloomington, Mr. J. Derling of Brownstown, and a young gentleman from Wheeling, Va. whose name we did not learn.

We understand that suits have been instituted against the Company, by some of those who escaped with their lives, but were severely injured.—Hossier Revived.

LATER FROM AFRICA.

By the arrival at New York of Lieut. Forris an officer of the U. S. Squadron on the African coast, information has been received that three of the vessels composing it, the flag ship Maccodan, Commodore Perry, the sloop Saratoga, Commander Tatnall, and the sloop Ucaur, Commander Abbot, have had some work upon the coast in the way of punishing the natives, concerned in the murder of the captain and crew of the schooner Mary Carver, about two years ago.

On the 4th December last the three vessels proceeded down the Coast to about sixty or eighty miles below Cape Palmirs, and on the 12th landed a force of about five hundred officers and men. On the 13th the African King and his interpreter came attended by his people all fully armed, to hold a palaver.

The talk was very unsatisfactory, and finally the king, his interpreter, and the people turned and ran, but had not proceeded far, before a volley from the American force killed the king, his interpreter and others. The natives fled to a jungle, from whence they continued for above an hour to fire upon the Americans, who returned volley for volley, burned their towns, destroyed their villages, and then returned to their ships.

On the following day the force again landed a few miles further down, burned five more towns, destroyed a considerable number of canoes &c. In one of these towns the Register of the Mary Carver was found, also a private letter belonging to the Captain of that vessel, and other papers which had belonged to it. The boat had again returned to the shore, and a few miles further down a treaty of peace was concluded with another tribe of Africans.

The Spanish Brig Valadore, a slaver, with 150 slaves on board, made her escape from the coast. She had been pursued several times by one of the American cruisers and H. B. M. brig Bozeta.

Arabian Relics.—Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, has published a lecture in the Newark Advertiser, from the Rev. Charles Foster, now in Arabia, announcing "the recovery of the long lost and once famous Hamyaritic tongue; and in it of inscriptions, perhaps the oldest monuments in the world, containing a full confession of the Patriarchal faith, and an anticipated Gospel. These wonderful remains of Arabian antiquity belong to a period of the world, to reach when all in eternal evidences oblige us to ascend 3500 years, or within 500 years of the flood. For they are records of the lost tribe of A. I, the immediate descendants of Shem and Noah; a people of Arabia who perished utterly, not only long prior to all profane history, but before the books of Moses were written. The unknown inscriptions were published in Wellsted's Travels in Arabia, who discovered them on the coast of Hadramaut, in 1831. Copies were forthwith transmitted to Germany, to professor Gesenius and Rodiger; who, it appears, have been at work on them for years, as it turns out, without deciphering a single word. Mr. Foster states he detected the key, on an Arabic version of Schulten's "Monumenti Vetustina Arabia." Two short Arabic poems opened to him the Hamyaritic alphabet and language, and enabled him to read the record of an age so remote.

The Seminoles.—Two following letter from Wild Cat to the Editor of the Arkansas Intelligencer, describing the wretched condition to which he and his people have been reduced by a long and bloody war with the United States may not be entirely uninteresting to our readers.

Dear Sir: In your paper of the 2d inst. you have noticed me as intending to be a member of a political convention of the white people of the United States.—This, I beg, you will correct. I do not design mixing or being present at the time and place alluded to. You can do me and my people a much more acceptable service by hearing and speaking our grievances through your columns, than by placing my name so conspicuously to ridicule. A brave man yourself, I know you would not wantonly insult a conquered or fallen adversary.

It is true I design visiting Washington City, on business of myself and people, and of infinitely more consequence to us than the political frolics of the white people. The object of my intended visit is good. I wish the world to know it in advance, and I wish you to state it. I have been at war with the United States. I defended the soil of my birthplace with my blood. It was dear to me, and to my people, as our homes, and as the country of our fathers. But, that war is now ended. My people were overcome by a stronger party. What the sword did not destroy, your money bought. Like the rain that falls upon the earth from the Heavens, the memory of that war is absorbed and forgotten. We emigrated to the country upon the faith of your people—promises were made us of another home, a separate and distinct soil, where we could gather again the fragments of a distracted and unhappy people. The hand that could conquer, should possess the heart to fulfil promises made to a subdued people. None knows our condition better than you do. Look at us! a distracted people, alone, without a home—without annuities—destitute of provisions, and without a shelter for our women and children—strangers in a foreign land, dependant upon the mercy and tolerance of our Red Brothers, the Cherokees—transported to a cold climate, naked, without game to hunt or fields to plant, or huts to cover our poor little children—they are crying like wolves, hungry, cold and destitute!

I wish to write a letter to Gen. Worth, and if you allow me, will send it through your paper.

No more now. Your friend,

CO-A-COO-CHEE.

Trial of the Gordons for Murder.—We learn from the Providence Journal that the trial of John Gordon and William Sprague, accused of the murder of Amasa Sprague, having occupied the Supreme Court for nine days, was brought to a close Wednesday evening. The case was delivered to the Jury at 5 o'clock, after an elaborate charge from the Chief Justice. The jury, after being about an hour and a half, returned with a verdict of guilty against John Gordon, and not guilty as to William Gordon. The former, on account of the verdict with perfect calmness—the latter was much affected. William was discharged, and on parting both were much affected.

The sentence of John Gordon has been postponed to the first Monday of the September term.

A RIGHTEOUS VERDICT.

The following paragraph from the St. Louis Republican proves that we still live under a Government of Laws. Mr. Daniel, it will be recollected, was the ringleader in the pillage and murder of the Santa Fe trader Chavis, in the Western Territory of the Union, under the pretence of a Texan commission.

Conviction of John McDaniel.—At ten minutes past 11 o'clock yesterday, the case of the United States vs. Chavis, was given to the jury—with the single remark of Judge Catron, that they were judges of the jurisdiction and of the facts. The jury retired to their room, and at 4 o'clock, Mr. Daniel was brought into Court, and the jury rendered their verdict—Guilty of murder, as charged in the indictment.

Horrid Murder and Arson on Staten Island.

—One of the most awful and mysterious murders has occurred in the vicinity of Port Richmond, the particulars of which I will briefly relate.—Capt. Geo. Houseman, who resides about one mile from Port Richmond, left home a few weeks ago for the south. During his absence, on Sunday about eleven o'clock, a gentleman to appearance came up on the front stoop, and was seen from the adjoining house by Mrs. Bedino. In about two hours, the same individual was seen passing from the house, with a small bundle. These circumstances excited no suspicion, as he was supposed to have brought news from Capt. Houseman, to his wife. Mrs. Houseman during the absence of her husband, has always had some friend to stay with her, she being quite alone, having on'y a little daughter about two years old. Mrs. H. was last seen alive on Sunday on the front stoop.

On Sunday night, and all day Monday, the house was entirely closed; but it excited no suspicion on the part of Mrs. H.'s father-in-law who resides next door, and at about 80 yards distance, as it was presumed she had gone to see her grandmother, who resides within a short distance. On Monday evening, about 10 o'clock, the back door was discovered to be on fire, and on being forced open, a part of the hall stairs with the door and partition were seen in flames. The bed and all attached in the story above, on which Mrs. H. had slept, was consumed.

After the fire was extinguished, in removing some of the materials, the bodies of Mrs. Houseman and her child were found, almost burned to a cinder, presenting a most sad spectacle. The circumstances, which lead to the supposition that Mrs. Houseman was murdered, are these. The two bones of the left forearm were found fractured, and a deep incised wound near the fracture; a bandage, resembling a black silk handkerchief, tied with a flat knot around the wrist, so tight as to excoriate the part underneath; and on the carpet, her gold watch, chain and other fixtures, worth two hundred dollars, her jewelry, several sets of silver spoons, and considerable money are missing. These circumstances, together with the general opinion of Capt. Houseman's wealth and also the fact of his having been known to receive recently a thousand dollars for part of a vessel, are quite conclusive of the fact of murder having been committed. The jury of inquiry have been in session all day, examining many witnesses, and adjourned till to-morrow at 8 o'clock. The excitement is very great, and but one opinion exists—that of murder.

MARRIED.—In this city, on the 28th inst., by Elder Erasmus H. Derby, Mr. Edward Lang Page, of Salem Mass., to Miss Catherine J. Spear, of Boston Mass.

IN LAUREL.—On the 21st inst., by Elder Samuel James, Mr. Joseph M. Cole, of this city, to Miss Elizabeth A. James, of Laurel.

Till Hymen brought the love delighted hour. There dwelt no bliss in Eden's rosy bowers.

DIED.—In this city, on Saturday evening, the 18th inst., Benjamin G. Foster, daughter of Aaron and Susan Frost, (formerly from Bristol, Oxford County, Me.) aged 25 years, 8 months and 16 days.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Her life, though short, was one of sickness and pain; but she ever bore her afflictions with great patience and humility. She was particularly resigned during her last illness, and often spoke of her departure with great composure; wishing—if it was the Lord's will—she might soon be released from this world of sorrow.

The evening before her death, she informed her parents and sisters, present, that she was about to leave them and go to rest, requesting them to give her relatives in the land of her nativity, information of her disease, with strong solicitations to obey the everlasting gospel and gather with the saints of God, that they might be blessed and happy. She retained her reason to the latest moment of her expiring breath, and calmly fell asleep in God, to wait the resurrection of the just. She has been a member of the Church of Christ nearly four years, and was ever constant and firm in the faith which God has again given to his people.

Surely, "blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

CORNSTALK SUGAR.

The following is an extract from the report of the committee on Maple and Cornstalk Sugar, at the N. Y. State Agricultural Fair.

The Committee have great pleasure in stating that Mr. M. Adams of Ogden, in Monroe co., has gone into the experiment of manufacturing sugar of Cornstalk; and for one acre of the "eight rowed yellow northern corn," he has constructed an iron mill for crushing the stalk and expressing the juice, which answers the purpose admirably—but it is yet too early in the season to know the result of the experiment as a part only of the cornstalks have been gathered and manufactured, and the remainder are yet standing in the field.

Mr. Adams has, however, already made about 400 lbs. of sugar, a sample of which he has submitted to your committee, and which is capable of equalling the best sugar made from the cane. The stalks still on the ground, he thinks will make 100 wt. more of sugar; but had it not been for the excessive drought which has pervaded in that section of the country, he is satisfied that the corn planted and experimented upon by him, would have produced 1000 wt. of sugar, which was the rate yielded by two rods of the land which he measured off, the proceeds of which he worked up by itself.

Upon the whole Mr. Adams is perfectly satisfied that sugar can be made in this part of the country from cornstalks of superior quality and flavor, and equal to every respect to the best sugar made from the cane, so as to remunerate well for its manufacture.

WOOL.

This word echoes round the country. Almost every paper, north, middle, and west, has something to say about wool. A dealer exhibited to us a very soft and silky sample of the first lot of wool that ever reached this city, as he said, from Wisconsin. The parcel was of all sorts and grades, and he paid 25 cents a pound for it. Twenty thousand pounds are expected from Chicago, where a few years ago there was neither wool nor anything else. A Michigan farmer recently sold his first year's clip in this city, for three thousand dollars cash. The expense of transportation from Chicago, is not over three quarters of a cent a pound.

SMALL FARMS.

It appears to be generally acknowledged that the Flemish are the best farmers in Europe; their farms are small, they collect and preserve all the manure they find, and make their land resemble a garden by their perfect cultivation, always keeping up a constant rotation of crops, and making so much manure that they do not find it necessary to employ a naked fallow, or lay down their ground for pasture; their cattle being fed all the year in stables, which are kept so very clean that they appear to have surprised the Scotch farmers who have visited them. A Flemish family is often supported by the produce of six or eight acres, in a state of comfort much superior to that of Scotch or English farm laborers; thus giving a practical proof of the wisdom of working no more land than can be cultivated.

The following extract from a letter from "Mr. Gillett, Director of Affairs Publiques a Bruxelles," to Sir John Sinclair, deserves attention: "I have examined with attention the situation of agriculture in most countries in Europe, and do not hesitate to affirm that it is no where so well understood and practised as in the Low Countries. I do not except my native country, (England) though I am ready to admit that she is as much advanced in the important science beyond France, as the Low Countries are beyond England.

This will not surprise you, sir, when you consider, that while the fortunes of England and France were divided between agriculture, industry, colonization, and external commerce, those in the Low Countries were principally employed in the advancement of agriculture alone, by establishing small farms. This system has succeeded admirably well in Flanders and Brabant, where land is in the highest state of cultivation, and offers a wonderful contrast with its situation in the Leige country, county of Namur, and in the province of Hainault, which bounds Flanders and Brabant. There the system of large farms is still in common practice; and very little progress has been made within fifty years. The vast disproportion of the product of those provinces, when compared with that of Flanders and Brabant, offers a very strong argument against the system of large farms. It is an error into which many have fallen for want of observation, and a knowledge of the interior of the country, to believe that the soil of the Low Countries was originally good. It is almost the incredible industry of the peasantry in Flanders and a part of Brabant which has rendered the soil so productive. The Pays de Waes, a province of art, was forty years ago, a bruyere—a heath or waste. It is now, perhaps, the richest province in the world."

New Kind of Wheat.—The Norwalk (Ohio) Experiment says:—"We have at our office a specimen of grain called South American wheat, raised in this country and which is said to yield from eighty to one hundred bushels to the acre. The head very much resembles, in size and appearance, the fruit of the sun-mae, and the berry seems to be almost entire barren, with very little hull or bran. It may be planted in drills or sowed broadcast, the former method, however, is thought to be preferable, and is said to require far less labor, if drilled, than common corn yielding double the quantity per acre, and we judge it to be as nutritious food for man or beast as any grain we raise."

Importance of Agriculture.—Mr. Ellis, worth says, in his last report to Congress that 83 in every 100 of the present population are inevitably connected with or dependent upon agriculture, from which they derive their food and raiment, their whole means of moral, religious, and intellectual progress, and that wealth, too, essential to individual liberty and national independence.

Boil your Molasses.—When molasses is used in cooking, it is a prodigious improvement to boil and skim it before you use it. It takes out the unpleasant raw taste, and makes it almost as good as sugar. Where molasses is used much in cooking, it is well to prepare one or two gallons in this way at a time.

An infallible way to make your child miserable, is to satisfy all his demands. Passion swells by gratification; and the impossibility of satisfying every one of his desires, will oblige you to be short at last, after he has become headstrong.

"Shon," said a Dutchman, you may say what you please 'bout bad neighbors; I had two worst neighbors as never was. Mine pigs and I mane hens come home and dere ears split, and toder day two of dem come home missing.

Enviability Privilege.—The greatest and most enviable privilege which the rich enjoy over the poor, is that which they exercise the least—the privilege of making them happy.

Foreign News

IRELAND.

State Prosecutions.—Monday being the first day of Easter Term, the vicinity of the courts of law was crowded by an expectant multitude, who were on the tip-toe of expectation to learn the sentence of the convicted conspirators in the late State trials. They were, however, disappointed. The court sat, the city and country grand juries were sworn, a few motions of no general interest were heard, and the court adjourned, without the name of O'Connell, or his case, being once mentioned throughout the day.

Out of Court, we learn, that the Crown has served the convicted repealers with a four-day rule, to appear for judgment, which is according to usual practice; and they, on the other hand, have served the Crown with a two-day rule of notice, to move for a new trial: this latter would expire on Wednesday, but as the Court sits in error on that day, it would not come on until Thursday; and on Friday the Attorney-General would be entitled to move for judgment, but whether he will do so when there is a pending motion for a new trial, remains to be seen. The grounds on which a new trial is prayed for, are similar to the points prominently brought forward on the trial, viz: the omission of a part of the jury roll—the misnomer of Mr. John Jason Rigby—the carrying of the trial beyond Hilary Term, and what is most strongly urged, the misdirection of the learned judge in summing up the evidence.

The attendance of Mr. O'Connell and the rest of the traversers, at the Law Courts, attracted large crowds of persons, who, however, quietly dispersed on hearing that no matter of interest relating to the State trials would come on until Thursday.

The Great Repeal Dinner at Cork.—The grand banquet to Mr. O'Connell, given by the inhabitants of Cork, took place on Monday, the 7th inst. Upwards of 800 persons were present, and Mr. Smith O'Brien, M. P., from Limerick, presided. The speech of Mr. O'Connell was the principal event of the evening, from its containing a variety of allusions to the sentence expected to be passed upon him. Speaking of the splendour of the demonstration, he said—

No man who ever stood upon the threshold of a prison received such a compliment (Here, here, and cheers.) No man who ever stood on the steps of a throne was honored as I have been honored, though on the threshold of a prison; but I would not change that prison, with the compliment for the throne of any monarch in the universal world. What crime have I committed? (Loud cries of "None.") I declare to Heaven I do not know. I believe Chief Justice Pennefather does not know, nor am I aware that the sagacious jurists knew what crime they convicted me on. I repeat I am not aware of the crime, but I am sure of this, that it was to be committed over again, I am the boy for it. (Great Cheering.) I have done nothing of which I am ashamed before man, or tremble for before my God.

Another reference to his sentence elicited tremendous applause—

I am advanced in life—the prison may terminate my existence—(Sensation and cries of "God forbid.") I am not shrinking from the dungeon. (Cheers.) I do not speak in a whining or pious manner; but I do trust that my last moments will be enlivened by the reflection that I should have lived longer had I not loved Ireland so intensely. (Loud cheers.)

Alluding to the uncertainty of his being imprisoned, he said—

It would be an idle thing for any man to suppose that I am not to go to prison. (Cries of "No, no.") Yes for as sure as I see you here, I shall have to go there. Renewed cries of "No, no, and cheers." What folly you talk! sure you have not the key of the gaol door to lock it against me. Laughter and cheers.) I say I shall go to prison; I do not say I will go, because it will be against my will but I do say that I shall go, for I will be commanded there.

How can any man suppose that I am not to go there? There are three ways of avoiding the prison—the first is by making submission to our enemies, a course which you would not recommend. (Loud cheering.) I thought you would agree on that point. (Laughter.) The second way is by the result of the writ of error; but I confess I know so much of judges, that my own conviction as an old lawyer, is that we have the clearest possible case for setting aside the judgment. (Hear, and cheers.) The third way would be by the government abandoning the prosecution, and holding us under a recognizance to come up for judgment at an indefinite period. (Hear, hear.) But they will not do that. Take it that they granted, the sentence will be carried into execution. Take this also with you, they may imprison me, but they will not vex me—they may confine my person, and they will do so; but they will not deprive me of a single pleasurable sensation. (Cheers.) If I have not the enjoyment and exercise of my native mountains, though I shall not be cheered by the merry sound of my bagpipes, I will dream a day dream of them, and will turn my mind to pursuits that will be sure to yield delight and instruction. (Hear and cheers.) There is no horror in confinement that a man working for forty years cannot have in contemplation; and my astonishment is that they did not imprison me before now—that they did not begin by confining me. (Hear.)

Adverting to the duty of the people of Ireland under these circumstances, he called upon them in very energetic language, never to cease prosecuting the demand for Repeal, and in so doing, to be peaceable and orderly, for without temperate conduct, it would never be carried. These two points he called not his dying request, but the last he should make prior to falling into the fangs of the Attorney-General. He thus closed his speech:—

I am speaking to you as if a voice were issuing from the tomb of a gaol, but not the mournful accent of danger. (Loud cheers.) Irishmen, the time is come; preserve the peace—observe order—do not run a risk. I conjure you, as you love Ireland, and hate the mal-administration of justice—as you esteem the Chief Baron, and dislike the Chief Justice (Groans)—in short, if you love Ireland—if you want to confer on me comfort when in my dungeon, you will rally for old Ireland and Repeal.

The City of Hayti.—Instead of a hand some city, such as it appears from the ships deck at sea, rising at a gradual elevation from the shore, and adorned with good houses and gardens, you enter into streets of wooden buildings, with the pavement dislocated or broken up, the drains neglected, and filth and stable dung interrupting your steps in every direction.

The quay is spacious, but the water is shallow near the shore; and all sorts of uncleanness are suffered to annoy the senses. A constant malaria is the consequence, which at certain seasons of the year renders the lower quarter of the city very sickly, and occasions great mortality among the sailors from foreign parts. Port-au-Prince, with all its advantages of situation, with every inborn capability of being made and kept delightfully clean, is perhaps the filthiest capital in the world. The houses in general are of two stories, built slightly of wood, to avoid the rend and tear occasioned by earthquakes, which at different times have nearly demolished the city. Some few of the better habitations are of brick or stone, and may be called handsome edifices. The Senate-house is a plain substantial building, with no pretensions to splendor; and the palace of the President, the largest edifice in the city, was built by the English for the general's headquarters, during their temporary occupation of the south of the island; and is therefore, as little like a royal palace as any republican could desire. The Haytian flag, of red and blue, floats on its turrets, and it has in front a spacious court, in which are lodges for the military guard of horse and foot, who are constantly on duty. These are the only public buildings worthy of notice. The Roman Catholic Church is a capacious structure, but very plain and homely.

[Chandler's Notes on Hayti.]

Late from Mexico.—Mr. Southall, bearing very important despatches from Mexico, arrived in this city in the Pilot yesterday afternoon. He left the city of Mexico on the 12th ult. and Vera Cruz on 22d ult. By him we learn that the last Mier Prisoner, Mr. Vassess, was released on the 18th ult., and was expected to take passage from Vera Cruz in the Anna-wan for New York, about the first.

We are informed that a good deal of irritation still exists between the French Minister, the Baron De Sivry, and the Mexican Government, regarding the operation of the law interdicting the retail trade to foreigners, excepting under certain onerous conditions. The remonstrance of the United Ministers of the three nations, the U. States, England, and France, had been disregarded, and no less than 21 stores, some of them of considerable magnitude, belonging to the French in the city of Mexico had been closed.

It is believed that the French intend to make a waslike demonstration against Mexico; all diplomatic intercourse had been suspended between the authorities and the French ministry, and the people in the city were really expecting the appearance of a French squadron on their coasts. Nothing new has occurred regarding annexation, but as we hear from Mr. S., the Mexicans think that it is already accomplished, and that Texas is now bona fide an integral portion of the United States.

Business was exceedingly dull, and the Government was anticipating a hostile visit from a French squadron.

Mr. Southall has despatches from the Sandwich Islands for our Government, which were received over land via Mazatlan. It is understood that a commercial treaty has been formed between the British Government and the King of the Sandwich Islands, in which, as usual, the advantages are all on one side—that of John Bull. One of the stipulations reported, is, that British vessels are to be exempt from tonnage duties, and that English products are to pay a duty of only 5 per cent in the ports of his Majesty the King of the Sandwich Islands. [N. Orleans Repub.]

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 5, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT,
GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,
SIDNEY RIGDON, ESQ.,
OF PENNSYLVANIA.

ERRATA.—The first line of "Riots in Congress," a poetic effusion on our first page should read, "Hush, hush, let," &c., instead of "let."

OPINIONS ON GREAT MEN.

Some body says Van Buren wants fame, wants a character, wants honesty, wants wisdom, and wants demi-crats to elect him President of the United States;—and it would be noble to let him want.

John Randolph said "Mr. Clay was talented, but corrupt. He stinks and shines, and shines and stinks, like a rotten mackerel by moonlight; and we say let him stink."

James Gordon Bennett of the New York Herald, upon Gen. Smith's remarks upon the Globe says, "a more curious and unique thing has probably not been published since the time of Mahomet, who used to issue his bulletins in something of the same style." Every body knows that Bennett is like a pea in a bladder, every time you stir it, it rattles and we all say let it rattle!

Veritas nunquam celat.

Gregg, who should have been tapped for the shallows while young, has bent his way to the Upper Mississippi, where, to ferment his shallowness, he has commenced spitting at the Alton Telegraph, to unload his foul stomach. The great riddle of the whole matter is, as he cannot, under the canopy of law and the present consistency of public opinion, use daggers to kill or silence Mormons and Mormonism, he must speak daggers at them to show how smart he is, and indicate his serpentship by popping out his forked tongue at the Alton Telegraph. If Crisis will let him, he will always rattle before he bites; but according to our motto at the head, Truth never yields.

Locusts.—Within a few days the locusts have made their appearance "more plenty" than they do every year and among the rest of the excitable of the last days, they have the letter AP on each wing, which whether it means Missouri mobs; Mormon mercy, man's misery, miser's money, or Mary Magdalene, is all one, so long as there were to be signs before the end. Some people think these locusts are the continued race of the old Pharaoh breed; but by reading Exodus 10: 13 and 14 verses, they will learn their mistake. As to what the Prophet Joel said about the locusts, or even John the Revelator, when they come the world will know it, whether they believe or not for the very last swarms with stings in their tails, have a king over them the angel of the bottomless pit, who will fight to gain the topless upper deep. What a fine thing it is that God endowed a part of his creation with reason and understanding; it gives a chance to discover the phantasmagoria of vapors and shadows, as plagues, and policy from within the veil.

Gen. Smith goes ahead.—A vote was taken on the Osprey, on her last trip to St. Louis, and resulted as follows:—

Gen. Smith,	gent. 65, ladies 6.
Mr. Clay,	do 27, do 3.
Mr. Van Buren,	do 12, do 3.

Well may it be said that the United States was not made for Van Buren and Clay alone, but Gen. Smith, too. Go it honestly, and demagoguery, and flattery, and sophistry, and magicians, and Clay will follow after the "pall bearers" like hell, when the fourth seal is opened.

HARK!

"Shall wisdom cry aloud and not her speech be heard?"

It has been said that "Boston is full of notions, and some pretty good notions too." The "Investigator" of that city has done honor to the talents and "views" of Gen. Joseph Smith. In fact, if ever there was a just expression, it is that one wherein the "Deists" are called the "deists of the earth." But never mind that; hear the Investigator—

"General Smith's Views of the Powers and Policy of the United States."—A Pamphlet of this title has been handed to us, which we have read with much pleasure. The Mormon Prophet has there put forth many excellent ideas worthy of the perusal of a free people. It is a plain philosophical discourse, entirely free from cant, and full of the very best advice. General Smith appears to be neither whig nor democrat; but he is evidently in favor of the largest liberty, discountenances that mob spirit which is so prevalent in our country, and recommends unity, charity and universal toleration. The address is well written, and the quotations from American Statesmen are excellent and appropriate, and made without reference to party. He advises legislators to "study the convenience of the People more than the comfort of the Cabinet." He praises Jefferson and Jackson, but seems disposed to sneer at Van Buren and Tyler, whom he calls a "pseudo-Democratic Whig President." He recommends the re-annexation of Texas under certain circumstances. He says—

"When a neighboring realm petitioned to join the Union of the sons of liberty, my voice would be, come, yea, come Texas; come Mexico; come Canada, and come all the world—let us be brethren; let us be one great family, and let there be universal peace." Surely, none can complain of a want of liberality in these sentiments! His opinions on the subject of Abolition are worthy of attention. He goes for a liberal and generous policy, and advises Government to use its surplus revenue for the purchase of the freedom of the slaves. He thinks the slaveholder would agree to this, and that no other measure of emancipation is just.

VAN BUREN'S PROSPECTS ON THE WANE—TYLER'S MOVEMENTS—GEN. SMITH, &c.

The clouds that loom through the political horizon seem to be freighted with a tempest that is to destroy the hopes and blight the prospects of Van Buren. Many of the Democratic members of Congress have repudiated and denounced him as not the available man to receive the support of their party. Letters have been written from the Capitol recommending the people to settle upon some more popular individual on whom to bestow their suffrage. The waters of Van Buremism are beginning to be troubled, and the great wave of public opinion, sweeping from one extremity of the Union to the other, threatens to wreck the magician's bark. Van Buren editors are filled with consternation and put to their "trumps" to patch up the rents in his political garment. All parties are looking for the result of the National Convention, to see who is to be the nominee. Will it be Van Buren, Johnson, Gen. Cass, or some body else? It seems to be the enquiry of all parties. The convention only can decide.

The people do not like the demagogue vascillancy of Van Buren. At one period in his life he advocates the extension of the Union; now he throws such ambiguity over his position on the Texas question that it is hard to define the measure he wishes to have pursued by the United States. In his letters upon this subject, as well as Mr. Clay,

"He waxes in, and waxes out,

And leaves a body all in doubt,

Whether the snake that made the track

Is going south, or coming back."

Tyler is uncompromisingly in the field and his determined course seems to say,

"That rock shall fly

From its firm base as soon as I."

He is determined to run, independent of conventions, parties, cliques, or the ironic peccadilloes of political weather cocks. Well, he has as much right to run as any body else; and if the people will vote for him—all right. If we are not mistaken, President Tyler, with the patronage of the Government under his control, will greatly interfere with Van Buren.

This state of things existing, what is to be done? What are the people to do? The political world is agitated by the convulsions of party;—rancor, turbulence, mobs, murder and ruin; cities wrapped in flames, desolation brooding over our commercial marts, and women and children left homeless upon the mercy of a heartless world; anarchy raising its hydra-head over the ashes of American institutions; religious sanctuaries profaned by the violence of priestcraft; the mutations of law and jeopardsy of individual rights;—all portend the ultimate dismemberment of the Union and the destruction of our Republic, if something is not done to place a check upon the tide of iniquity that sweeps like an avalanche over our nation. Who is to save the Union by snatching her from the abyss of ruin? Does Van Buren, Clay, or Tyler say anything about these evils? Do they present themselves as saviors from these calamities and point out the way that peace, happiness and safety are to be restored to society? No, they do no such things;—their patriotic and capacious minds are absorbed in political juggling, and they can pay no attention to the distracted state of society! Great men! great patriots! great statesmen! A game at billiards, a horse race, a trip of pleasure, or a mule in Congress, are, to them, objects of greater attraction than the blessings of domestic peace and the security of personal rights and property.

Would the people enjoy the full fruition of liberty? would they have our Republic flourish under the guidance of a judicious administration? would they perpetuate freedom and universal liberty?—if so, rally for Gen. Smith, that patriot and philanthropist—place him in the Presidential Chair, and all will be safe; we shall become free, prosperous and happy nation.—Look well to this matter!

"If I'd as many wives as there's stars in the skies,

And they were all as old as Adam,

I'd down upon my knees and kiss who I please;

'Tis your humble servant madam!"

This old verse puts us in mind of the present Presidential campaign. Every cliquo, cabal and faction, have a candidate for president. Benton and Van Buren against every thing; Clay against every thing; and Tyler against every thing. 'Tis a true bill, gentlemen, these candidates and a half a dozen others, are against every thing: truth and virtue, the people's interests; the nation's interest and the "Almighty's,"—go it ye sinners, for there is one honest man in the field, who is not afraid of every thing. Gen. Smith is in favor of men, rights and Jehovah. He is a saint—huzza for Saint Joseph!

In Pursuit.—An officer from the State of Alabama passed through this city yesterday in pursuit of a runaway named Brown. The blood-stained offender, we are informed, has taken refuge in Joe Smith's haven at Nauvoo, and as he is a man after the prophet's own heart, he will doubtless receive protection from his municipal court.—St. Louis Republican Municipal court indeed! Virtuous enough for St. Louis, having never burnt a negro alive without investigation. Do you take, old squires Republican? Forgive more lies, will ye?

To the brethren and friends willing to me on church business, I wish they would pay the postage, for no others will meet my attention, for I am not able to pay the enormous sum of postage that I have heretofore paid to answer foolish interrogations. HYIUM SMITH.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Neighbor.

Mr. Editor, Dear Sir:—Having spent a few days very agreeably in your beautiful city, I take the liberty of informing the numerous readers of your wide-spread journal, concerning some facts which came under my notice, during my short sojourn among you; and which have been the means in the hands of the Almighty, of accomplishing a great change in my sentiments with regard to Gen. Joseph Smith and the people among whom he resided.

I am not about to relate any thing wonderful in itself, or even new to you; or any thing but what every individual may see, would he but take the trouble to come here and open his eyes. It was however new to me, and not only so, but totally unexpected, inasmuch as I came here with my ears and my heart filled with such stories, hearsays, and exaggerations against you, as if they were one-tenth part true, would stamp you as the basest villains and the greatest fanatics, ever existent on God's footstool—only to be compared to the Malays, the Caribs, the Baccanets, or, to use a more modern comparison, the mob of Philadelphia.

It is needless to say, when such were the stories believed by me, how bitter and hostile were the feelings with which I stopped here; indeed so inimical were they, that I had not business compelled me, I never could have made this "City of the Saints" a "resting place" for my feet, but being unavoidably detained a few days, I determined to make good use of my time, and see if I should not be confined in my belief.

It has become so degrading in the eyes of modern degeneracy to alter a persons opinions, or change his views, that I am almost afraid to acknowledge my feelings changed, and my belief altered with regard to your people; yet, knowing that, in the opinion of wise and candid persons, it is much more honorable to acknowledge a fault and repair it, than to persist in an error; I trust that your readers will sympathize with me, and instead of pronouncing me "turncoat," &c., listen calmly to my reasons for thinking differently of the Mormons now, than I did a few days ago. That my feelings have met with an entire, complete and radical change, I beg leave distinctly to state; and since I think I have good reason for such a revolution in my feelings, I cannot charge myself with any blame in the affair, unless it be for ever entertaining such feelings.

Since my sentiments were such as I have expressed, it must be expected, as was the case, that I should be very much prejudiced against you, and would view every thing with a judicial eye. I came here expecting to see an idle, indolent, brawling, intemperate and licentious people;—I found them on the contrary industrious, enterprising, orderly, temperate and chaste. I expected to see them superstitious, bigoted, fanatical and blind followers of a blinded prophet;—I found them free from superstition, liberal, enthusiastic only in their desires to ameliorate the condition of mankind and convert them to the truth, and veneration for their prophet to be sure, but no more than intelligent men should do, who was acquainted with his enlightened views, comprehensive knowledge and extended benevolence. I expected to find them illiterate, ignorant, illiberal, the offshoots of the earth;—I found them intelligent, enlightened, liberal; and as smart and well dressed an assemblage as I ever saw for the number in my life.

When I was told that this place was five years ago a wilderness, with only about a dozen cabins, scattered over the whole extent, I could scarce believe my senses. On every side I saw extended around me the beautiful cottages, the smiling flowers, and the well cultivated gardens of the enterprising inhabitants. Here and there I saw the lofty mansions of the more wealthy, towering like the oaks of the forest, above their more humble rivals; and giving a beautifully variegated appearance to the entire place, over the whole of the vast city of four miles square, I saw the beautiful mansions (mostly composed of brick) of its twenty thousand inhabitants: It is indeed a beautiful place and viewed from wherever makes a most splendid appearance. The prairie also, for many miles back, is cultivated almost like the Garden of Eden, by its industrious inhabitants;—and all this the work of five years! I could scarce believe it, and yet my eyes could not deceive me. History records no parallel; a few despised, persecuted, banished people, flying from the terrors of religious intolerance, manifested by some of the citizens of this boasted republic, to commence, carry on, increase, and build up such a city as this in so short a space of time almost exceeds belief. In reflecting upon it, we hardly know which to admire most, their untiring zeal in the cause of their religion, or their determined perseverance in making the "wilderness a fruitful field," and building up a "resting place" where none could molest them and none can make their afraid.

The site is indeed one of surpassing beauty; probably the most beautiful of any on the river; but as this is allowed on all hands, and the description has so often been presented to the public, I will not weary the patience of your readers by giving them another, although the theme could never be worn out. I can only say, that should any individual visit the place he would be led to exclaim with the Queen of Sheba, "the half has not been told me."

But what I was led most particularly to notice, was the neatness, cleanliness, and comfort of their abodes, and the intelligence, industry and good order of the inhabitants. I did not see as in other cities a parcel of sops and dandies, prancing round the streets to see and be seen; but every one seemed to have some business, and to pursue it with all his heart. I did not see any groceries or grog shops, with loafers and rowdies ready to pick a quarrel with any body and insult every decent man they met; and what is more singular than all, I did not see a single intemperate man in the place, and I was assured by a gentleman who has lived here two years, that he had not seen one in the whole course of that time, although there is no Washingtonian society in the place. They seem to believe, and rightly too, in my estimation, that the religion of Jesus Christ embraces all temperance societies, and every other society in the world for the information of mankind.

I had every opportunity that an individual could desire, and certainly I had the inclination, to discover whether there was any thing concealed, "behind the curtain," any thing "uniquitous" under these specious appearances; in short, whether the many stories reported by J. C. Bennett and others of the same stamp, were true or not, and I found them invariably false. Some perhaps may argue in the words of the old saying that "where there is a smoke, there must be some fire." I can only say in answer, that the facts are as I have stated them, as such I must admit them if no one else does. Gentlemen—come and see for yourselves.

But, lest I trespass on your time and limits, I will bring my remarks to a close. I have had business for many remarks, I should like to have made upon your city and its inhabitants, but should you deem this short communication worthy of an insertion in your valuable paper I will, before I leave, give you my opinions with regard to your prophet—his doctrine—and his views, &c.

With sincere desires for the welfare, prosperity and blessings of the Almighty on the people of this place, permit me to subscribe myself respectfully yours, &c.

MORE MORMON EXTERMINATORS!

Read the following letter, Americans, and see whether Boggs is the only Nero in the land of Liberty; "the home of the brave, and the realm of the free," that means to use power when he has it! Read, reader and then say if you don't think "a burnt child dreads the fire."

Quincy Illinois; Oct. 12th, 1843.

Hon. F. H. Elmore;

Dear Sir:—The joint letters of Messrs. Ashe, Gourdin and yourself was received by due course of mail, and will be replied to as soon as I can visit St. Louis, and return.

I regret exceedingly, to learn by letters from Georgia, and Maryland, that there is a strong probability that some indiscreet and selfish friends of Mr. Van Buren, will play off the same game in those states at the present election, that was recently practised against Mansur, in Massachusetts, and the gifted and Republican Hunter in Virginia: You will remember that, these gentlemen were recently the regular Democratic nominees in their respective districts for Congress, and might easily have been elected, but Mr. Calhoun, being their first choice for the Presidency, the exclusive friends of Mr. Van Buren, either absented themselves from the polls, or voted for the Whig Candidates. The information I have just received is but too probable that many over zealous friends of Mr. Van Buren, will pursue the same course in Georgia, and Maryland, that has already been pursued in Massachusetts, and Virginia. This is deeply to be regretted; if the friends of Mr. Van Buren, continue to proscribe every individual who may prefer either Buchanan, Cass, Johnson, or Calhoun, as a first choice; it will be impossible for the friends of these latter gentlemen, long to act in concert with them. This thing of secretly opposing and endeavoring to undermine those with whom we profess to act in union, will never do.

It is difficult to say exactly in what relation the friends of Col. Johnson, in this state; stand towards those of Mr. Van Buren; Johnson's friends say he is really a candidate for the Presidency and will not, in any event, accept a subordinate station. On the other hand the Van Buren presses in this state and Missouri, have Johnson's name displayed at the head of their Columns; as a candidate for Vice President, and it is contended that Johnson, can at any time be "bought off" by placing him as a candidate for Vice President on the same ticket with Mr. Van Buren, for President. There is certainly something mysterious in the movements of the friends of these two candidates; many who appeared to be the warmest friends of Johnson last winter, are now the open and avowed advocates of Van Buren, and the Hon. J. P. Hoge, member elect from the Galena District, to Congress, who was understood last winter to be the warm friend of Mr. Van Buren, is now threatened with proscription, and party vengeance, as a renegade who has deserted his first love and gone over to Johnson!!! The facts as I learn them are these: Hoge represents the district in which Nauvoo, is situated, and in which the Mormons, or "Latter-Day Saints," undoubtedly hold the balance of power. These Mormons have been, and still are, pursued with a fiendish malignity by the people of Missouri, the Missourians are headed, moved and directed by Benton, and Benton is known to be the confidential, personal, and political friend of Van Buren, and his principal adviser in all things, to elevate Mr. Van Buren, and his friends of the Benton school, would be to place in power the deadly enemies of the Mormons, and enemies too, who make no secret of their determination to exterminate them if it ever lies in their power. Under these circumstances, it was well understood the Mormons would not, in a body, support any Benton—Van Buren, man for Congress. Hoge, was no doubt fully aware of this, and it is said that in a speech which he made at Nauvoo, last summer, he expressed a decided preference for Johnson, over Van Buren; the substance of this speech was soon reported to Benton, and Hoge, was denounced as a recreant; there are some, however, who do not hesitate to say that the falling out between Benton, and Hoge, is all a sham to blind the eyes of Smith and the Mormons; and that he will act with the Van Burenites, from first to last, voting with them for Jones, for speaker, Harris, for clerk, and Blair, or Kendall, for public printer. I know not how these things may be, but none errors—I do know, however, that it is too common for our politicians to express great friendship for the Mormons about Nauvoo, and curse them when in other parts of the state—it would be hard, very hard, to say who they could depend on to present and urge a memorial before Congress.

With Gen. Joseph Smith, the reputed head of the Mormon Church, I am personally unacquainted, but I have understood from one of the brethren, it is possible they may memorialize Congress at the approaching session on the subject of their wrongs in Missouri. Should this be the case, I think it would be very desirable to have some active member at a distance from the influence of Missouri; to take the matter in hand, and press it to a vote; I say at a distance from the influence of Missouri, for it is well known here that Missouri is holding up some old groundless indictments in terror over these people, while both the political parties in the state profess friendship for the Mormons, at Nauvoo, and either indifference or contempt for them elsewhere, thus meanly treating these much injured people as if they were mere rascals, uninfluenced by either principle or patriotism and ready to sell their votes for a temporary consideration.

I have seen a letter from the Hon. R. B. Rhetts, of your State in which, alluding to the so-called "Missouri War," in Missouri, he expressed an opinion that "Missouri had held the hot end of the branding iron in that affair." This is exactly my own view of the case, and if Mr. Rhetts would consent to take charge of the matter, there is no man in Congress who would be in all respects so suitable. He lives in a remote section of the country, where no excitement against the Mormons prevails; and consequently himself and his constituents could examine all the testimony on both sides, with calmness and arrive at a correct conclusion; he is a bold fearless and eloquent man, of great personal popularity and political influence; and if he takes up the subject can press it to a vote. But there is yet another and higher consideration, why Mr. Rhetts should be especially entrusted with this business.

It is alleged on the part of the Mormons, that they were oppressed and persecuted by the mob in Missouri, and that, when, as good citizens, they appealed to the Authorities in Missouri for protection, the whole constituted Authorities of the State converted themselves into a mob and lawlessly shed the blood and plundered the property of those they were bound to protect. These are grave charges, if true. The Mormons declare they can prove all the facts, which Benton and the authorities of Missouri deny. Now who is to try the truth or falsehood of these charges? Who is to hear testimony, and say whether or not a State, which has been admitted into the Union as a sister in the confederacy and clothed with power and authority to protect that portion of the American people residing within its limits, did convert itself into a mob to exterminate and plunder those whom it was its duty to protect and defend? It is said here that there is no remedy, that neither the constitution of the United States, nor the acts of Congress provide for any such case! If this be the fact, I think it time that a remedy was provided, and Mr. Rhetts would be the very man to undertake it. He represents the very district in Congress so long represented by Pinkney, Lowndes, Cheves, Hamilton, and Barnwell, whose pure spirits would smile upon the efforts of their successor to put down mobocracy in our land. South Carolina is the only state in the Union which has never been disgraced by a mob. One by one, this infernal spirit has spread over all the states; unfettered old Massachusetts, found herself unable to defend the helpless sisters of a convent, but South Carolina, the birth place of Sumpter, Marion, Moultrie, Jackson, Calhoun, and Haynes, has never suffered this foul spirit to invade her borders; with clean hands she stands ready to cast the first stone at the monster mobocracy.

Then who so proper to undertake the business as her leading member, one of the ablest lawyers of the day? Will you be so kind as to learn of Mr. Rhetts, whether he is willing to take charge of a Memorial from the Mormons, setting forth the injuries they have suffered from Missouri and praying redress? It is not required that he should commit himself before hand, I think the Mormons would not expect more than to be treated just as if they had been any other class of citizens, all they will ask is that he receive the Memorial and Petitions with such testimony as they may be able to furnish and give it a patient examination, and if he is satisfied that they have right on their side, then either bring forward a Bill for relief or a Resolution declaring there is no remedy, and providing for future cases.

I think this would do much good; it would be worthy of South Carolina, the "Charitable State," to step forward and demand either that the stain now resting upon Missouri should be wiped away, or that an oppressed and injured people should be redressed. No improper motive could be imputed to Mr. Rhetts, because he lives far away, he has nothing to hope for from the Mormons, nor to fear from their persecutors.

If Mr. Rhetts consents to take the matter in hand, either tell him to write to me, or write yourself, and I will open a correspondence with Ex-Governor Lucas and other members of Congress, whom I know to be friendly and engage their assistance.

Very respectfully,
Yours,

JOHN FRIERSON.

LETTER TO GEN. JOSEPH SMITH.

West Springfield, Erie Co., Pa.

March 26th, 1844.

To Gen. Joseph Smith, of the Nauvoo Legion, and Spiritual Guide of the Latter-Day Saints.

Reverend Sir:—

Having heard that you recently issued an address to the people of the United States, on the subject of the political evils now oppressing us as a nation, but not having seen it, I very respectfully beg leave to ask you for a copy of it.

I have understood also that you are a candidate for the office of President of the United States, of America; I would respectfully beg leave to ask if the report is true? I have no doubt but it would be a blessing to the country if some such a man would come up, whom all parties could support if they would with clean consciences, because you have not been guilty of so many political intrigues as those have, who will undoubtedly be nominated for that distinguished office next May.

Persecutions will always make a man friends, (and the manner you have been abused, comes but little short of persecution in the eyes of your friends, I have no doubt,) and in the event of your running, you will unquestionably receive a large vote in the Union.

People are beginning to appreciate properly, your services in the cause of religion, and philanthropy.

Many people here who have been attached to political party, will not vote any ticket unless your views meet their approbation. On the other candidates they are neutral.

Very humbly, I remain,

Your obedient servant.

SOME OF THE REMARKS OF JOHN S. REED, ESQ., AS DELIVERED BEFORE THE STATE CONVENTION.

The following is a part of the speech of Mr. Reed, Esq., as delivered at the State Convention, in Nauvoo. We expected according to a resolution passed, to have had the whole; but as Mr. Reed was in a hurry, he was unable to furnish us with any more than the following, which refers more particularly to Gen. Smith's early history.

Mr. Chairman:—I cannot leave this subject and do justice to my own feelings, and the character of Gen. Smith, without giving a short history of the first persecution that came upon him in the counties of Chenango and Broome, in the State of New York, commenced by that class of people calling themselves Christians.

The first acquaintance I had with Gen. Smith, was about the year 1823. He came into my neighborhood, being then about eighteen years of age, and resided there two years; during which time I became intimately acquainted with him. I do know that his character was irreproachable; that he was well known for truth and uprightness; that he moved in the first circles of community, and he was often spoken of as a young man of intelligence, and good morals, and possessing a mind susceptible of the highest intellectual attainments.

I early discovered that his mind was constantly in search of truth, expressing an anxious desire to know the will of God concerning his children here below, often speaking of those things which professed Christians believe in. I have often observed to my best informed friends, (those that were free from superstition and bigotry) that I thought Joseph was predestinated by his God from all eternity to be an instrument in the hands of the great dispenser of all good, to do a great work; what it was I knew not. After living in that neighborhood about three years, enjoying the good feelings of his acquaintances, as a worthy youth, he told his particular friends that he had had a revelation from God to go to the west about eighty miles, to his father's, in which neighborhood he should find hid in the earth, an old history written on golden plates, which would give great light and knowledge concerning the will of God towards his people in this generation; unfolding the destiny of all nations, kindred and tongues; he said that he distinctly heard the voice of him that spake. Joseph Knight, one of the fathers of your church, a worthy man, and my intimate friend, went with him. When I reflect upon our former friendship, Mr. Chairman, and upon the scenes that he has passed through in consequence of maladministration, mobocracy, and cruelty, I feel to lift up my voice to high heaven, and pray God to bless the aged veteran, and that his silver locks may go down to the grave in peace, like a shock of corn fully ripe. In a few days his friends returned with the glad news that Joseph had found the plates and had gone down to his father-in-law for the purpose of translating them. I believe he remained there until he finished the translation. After the book was published, he came to live in the neighborhood of father Knight's, about four miles from me, and began to preach the gospel, and many were picked in their hearts, believed and were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. He soon formed a church at Coleville; his meetings were numerous attended; the eyes of all people were upon him with astonishment. O Mr. Chairman, the world was turned up side down at once, and the devil always ready to assist and help along in all difficulties that arise among men, personified in some of the religiousists, began to prick up his ears, and jump, and kick, and run about, like Jim Crow, calling for rotten eggs to help in the wake; you would have thought, sir, that Gog and Magog was let loose on the young man. He called upon the world's people, (as they are called) but got no help; he then flew about in the sectarian coaches, like lightning, and they immediately came to his aid, and uniting their efforts, raised against him like the thunders of Mount Sinai. When those fiery bigots were let loose, they united in pouring the red hot violence of their wrath upon his head. The cry of "false prophet! false prophet!" was sounded from village to village, and every foul epithet that malice and wicked ingenuity could invent, was heaped upon him. Yes, sir, the same spirit that influenced the Presbyterians of Massachusetts, about one hundred and fifty years ago, in their persecution of the Quakers, when they first began to preach their doctrines in that State, was fully manifested by those religious bigots who were afraid if they let them alone, their doctrines would come to nought. What was the result of the persecution in Massachusetts? Why, Sir, warrants were made out by those churches having authority, and the Quakers were tried for heresy. But what was the result of those trials? The sentence of death was passed upon the Quakers for heresy, by those religious fanatics, and three of them were hung by the neck on Bloody Hill, in Boston, to make expiation for that unpardonable crime. "Toll it not in Gath," nor publish it on the tops of the mountains in this boasted land of freedom, that the Puritans of New England, who had fled from the Old World in consequence of religious intolerance, that they might enjoy the sweets of liberty, to soon became persecutors themselves, and shed innocent blood, which still cries aloud from the dust for vengeance upon their heads. Let shame cover our faces when we mention the name of freedom in our grand Republic.

O my God! when in one portion of our country blood is flowing for the crime of worshipping our Creator according to the dictates of conscience, or as the spirit directs, and in the other age great rejoicings in consequence thereof, where, I ask, is that boasted freedom for which our fathers fought and bled? O thou who holds the destinies of all things in thine hands here below, return these blessings unto us, that we may keep them as precious jewels, till time is no more. But, Mr. Chairman, I am wandering far from the subject. I will return to the persecutions which followed Gen. Smith, when his cheeks blossomed with the beauty of youth, and his eyes sparkled with innocence.

Those bigots soon made up a false accusation against him and had him arraigned before Joseph Chamberlain, a justice of the peace, a man that was always ready to deal out justice to all, and a man of great discernment of mind. The case came on about 10 o'clock, A. M. I was called upon to defend the prisoner. The prosecutors employed the best counsel they could get, and ransacked the town of Bainbridge and county of Chenango for witnesses that would swear hard enough to convict the prisoner; but they entirely failed. Yes, Sir, let me say to you that not one blemish nor spot was found against his character; he came from that trial, notwithstanding the mighty efforts that were made to convict him of crime by his vigilant persecutors, with his character unstained by even the appearance of guilt. The trial closed about 12 o'clock at night. After a few moments deliberation, the court pronounced the words "not guilty," and the prisoner was discharged. But alas! the devil not satisfied with his defeat, stirred up a man not unlike himself, who was more fit to dwell among the fiends of hell than to belong to the human family, to go to Coleville and get another writ, and take him to Broome county for another trial. They were sure they could send that boy to hell, or to Texas, they did not care which; and in half an hour after he was discharged by the court, he was arrested again, and on the way to Coleville for another trial. I was again called upon by his friends to defend him against his malignant persecutors, and clear him from the false charges they had preferred against him. I made every reasonable excuse I could, as I was nearly worn down through fatigue and want of sleep; as I had been engaged in law suits for two days, and nearly the whole of two nights. But I saw the persecution was great against him, and here let me say, Mr. Chairman, singular as it may seem, while Mr. Knight was pleading writs to go to a peculiar impression or thought struck my mind, that I must go and defend him, for he was the Lord's anointed. I did not know what it meant, but thought I must go and clear the Lord's anointed. I said I would go; and started with agonized faith as the apostles had when they could remove mountains, accompanied by father Knight, who was like the old patriarchs that followed the ark of God to the city of David. We rode on till we came to the house of Heczekiah Peck, where a number of Mormon women had assembled, as I was informed, for the purpose of praying for the deliverance of the prophet of the Lord. The women came out to our wagon and Mrs. Smith among the rest. O my God, Sir, what were my feelings, when I saw that woman who had but a few days before given herself heart and hand to be a consort for life, and that so soon her crimson cheeks must be wet with tears that came streaming from her eyes; yes, Sir, it seemed that her very heart strings would be broken with grief. My feelings, Sir, were moved with pity and sorrow for the afflicted; and on the other hand they were wrought up to the highest pitch of indignation against those fiends of hell who had thus caused the innocent to suffer.

The next morning about 10 o'clock the court was organized. The prisoner was to be tried by three justices of the peace, that his departure out of the county might be made sure. Neither talents nor money were wanting to ensure their success. They employed the ablest lawyer in that county, and introduced twenty or thirty witnesses before dark, but proved nothing. They then sent out runners and ransacked the hills and vales, grog shops and ditches, and gathered together a company that looked as if they had come from hell, and had been whipped by the evil boy thereof; which they brought forward to testify one after another, but with no better success than before, although they wrung and twisted into every shape, by trying to tell something that would criminate the prisoner. Nothing was proven against him whatever. Having got through with the examination of their witnesses about 9 o'clock, in the morning, the case was argued about two hours. There was not one particle of testimony against the prisoner. No Sir, he came out like the three children from the furnace, without the smell of fire upon his garments. The court deliberated upon the case for half an hour with closed doors, and then we were called in. The court arraigned the prisoner and said: "Mr. Smith, we have had your case under consideration, examined the testimony and find nothing to condemn you, and therefore you are discharged." They then proceeded to reprimand him severely; not because anything derogatory to his character in any shape had been proven against him by the host of witnesses that had testified during the trial, but merely to please those fiends in human shape, who were engaged in the unhallowed persecution of an innocent man, merely on account of his religious opinions.

After they had got through, I arose and said: "This court puts me in mind of a certain trial held before Felix of old, when the enemies of Paul arraigned him before that venerable judge for some alleged crime, and nothing was found in him worthy of death or of bonds. Yet, to please the Jews, who were his accusers, he was left bound contrary to law; and this court has served Mr. Smith in the same way, by their unlawful and uncalled for reprimand, after his discharge, to please his persecutors." We got him away that night from the midst of three hundred people without his receiving any injury; but I am well aware that we were assisted by some higher power than man; for to look back on the scene, I cannot tell how we succeeded in getting him away. I take no glory to myself, it was the Lord's work, and marvellous in our eyes.

This Chairman, is a true history of the first persecution that came upon Gen. Smith in his youth among professed Christians, and in a county heralded to the ends of the earth, as a land of freedom; where all men have the constitutional right to worship as they please, and believe what they please without persecution, so long as they do not interfere with the rights and privileges of others. Yes, Sir, a persecution got up through the influence of religious bigotry by a vile set of men as ever disgraced the family of man. But their devices against him were brought to nought by that overruling power that controls all things and brings to nought the councils of the wicked.

Mr. Chairman, little did I think, that I was defending a boy that would rise to eminence like this man; a man whom God delights to honor as a prophet and leader of his people; one to whom he has given the keys of heaven and earth, and the power of David, and said to him whatsoever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against you. And may he live to put his foot upon the neck of his enemies in love and meekness. I know, Sir, that God has made him a leader of many thousands of people, and may he teach them in meekness, and with that wisdom and judgement that God shall direct.

I add no more.

A keeper of a dry goods store in Second street below Pine, shot in the leg, flesh wound; name understood to be Perry or Pierry.

A lad, half grown, shot in the groin, bad wound, name not ascertained.

Another lad shot through the lower part of the abdomen, killed instantly; name unknown.

Another lad, name not known, struck in the breast by a spent ball, flesh wound.

These are all we have heard of up to this time, but there are doubtless more. It is said that three Irishmen were shot and burned in their houses; we are not sure of the fact.

The First Division of the Military, under command of Gen. Geo. Cadwallader, and the Sheriff's posse, proceeded to the scenes of riot.

Nine o'clock, P. M.—We have just left the dreadful yet picturesque scene. The market houses are all in flames, and quite a row of brick and frame dwellings, whose frightened occupants have fled in all directions for safety and for life. The dark red clouds are lighting up with a horrid glare the blue and quiet sky. Rolls of bright smoke taking fantastic shapes thicken the air, while here and there through the dense cloud, the flame tongues of a living light may be seen licking with fire some now building preparatory to its destruction.

In front may be seen congregations of excited men, shouting, talking, arguing, blesting, and tossing their arms in the air with vehement agitation. Beyond, on that open space, the plumed heads and glittering swords of the cavalry, are waving and glancing in the lurid light, while the heavy tread of men, and the ringing clank of muskets broken the near presence of the infantry. The adjacent streets are deserted. The houses are closed, and abandoned. Since the approach of the military all is still, save that here and there the shriek of a child, or the sob of a woman, or the deep call of a man, break the solemn stillness.

Dim figures move suspiciously in the shade as if seeking concealment, while wretched looking beings driven from their abodes, houseless and homeless, are strolling off with beds, pillows, chairs and tables upon their shoulders, looking for some distant place of deposit. Hark! a shot! a scream—a rush of the soldiers!—and another victim is borne away for surgical assistance. A solitary one horse cart, as we leave, is turning away, and in it are a woman, two girls, a boy, and an infant, all crying. It contains some furniture, and by its side walks a man, who turns back to waste one lingering gaze on the burning pile at hand; and with a groan of intense agony, exclaims, "the toll of twenty years all gone in one moment! My God! have I deserved this! The cart drove on, and we heard no more.

We walked homeward thinking can it be possible that this is a land of Freedom, a land of Laws, a land of Christianity.

The following letter was recently published in the "New York Herald," and will not be uninteresting to the citizens of Illinois.

London, April, 18th, 1844.

Dear Sir:—You and your numerous readers doubtless will be glad to peruse the report of Governor Davis and Capt. Swift upon the Illinois and Michigan canal. It is very lengthy and dwells much upon details, that may not be very interesting to the general reader. All those however, who feel any interest in Illinois or the western trade will read the report with interest. The bondholders here have generally been well satisfied with it, and all seem now to admit the importance of the canal and the abundance of the security, and yet no one feels interest enough in American affairs to lend any aid in carrying the proposed arrangement into effect. All have ceased to hope for any judicious legislation in relation to the settlement of the State Debts, and they say that less they have to do with indebted States the better. They consider it useless to make any further advances unless there is some disposition manifested to pay by the States themselves.

This is extremely unfortunate for us at this time, for if there had been a ready aid lent to Illinois in this emergency, it would have gone far towards awakening a proper spirit among the people generally. It would have been a strong appeal to their gratitude; they could have resisted. Though they may now succeed, still the great delay and extreme caution goes to show that all confidence in the integrity and honor of our people is destroyed, and that whatever is done is solely upon tangible security, and not with any reliance upon the action of the state. It perhaps was useless to expect any thing more, but still a generous confidence would have met its reward. I think in the prompt and efficient action of the State.

There has been an attempt made to give this whole affair an improper direction, one not warranted, and one that may do it serious injury, and all this too by those who should have aimed only at doing a good and public good. They doubtless fancy that their extreme cleverness and guile shrewdness enables them to remain concealed, without exciting suspicion as to their real motives. But I can assure their whole scheme is fully understood, and before they shall be permitted to carry it into effect, the canal shall remain in its unfinished state. Illinois is poor and unfortunate, but she shall never become a victim to the wily schemes of avaricious and designing men, let their fate be what it may.

The amount required for commencing the canal is not yet subscribed—my efforts are now directed with a view to obtain the required subscription.

If every American citizen could be placed in as humiliating circumstances as I have been, while urging the interest of a sovereign State by being told that all confidence in my country was lost, they would never cease their exertions, until every dollar of their debts were paid, and until the name of their country was placed beyond reproach. Let us, for heaven's sake get out of this degrading position, and once more stand proudly pre-eminent, and independent, and no longer remain where we are scouted and contemned by every rank and age.

Truly yours,
MICHAEL RYAN.

From the Register.

In one of the counties of Ohio, there lived a family by the name of G—. Their oldest daughter was a beautiful blooming girl of 15, in the fall of 1824. In the same settlement there resided a worthy family by the name of C—. The oldest son was by nature of warm affections, and being raised and educated in the society of Miss Mary G—, she witnessed her artless simplicity, and cheerful deportment, so wonder that David C— became a sincere lover of this innocent and lovely girl. Nor were his affections bestowed in vain; for Miss Mary duly appreciated his worth, and returned his affections. My sister prevailed upon Mary to spend a few weeks with her. At the expiration of two weeks she returned to her father's house, and after conferring a day or two she started again to spend another week with Mrs. K—. She passed the farm and mills of Mr. C—, and David followed her over the stream, and taking his rifle, he went with her, perhaps a mile towards Mr. K's, and then took a route through the woods to the ferry and recrossed. He was bloody, and his sister Hannah asked him the cause. He replied that he had shot a turkey and carried it home, but meeting a stranger that was moving, he had sold or given him the turkey. This was on Monday, and nine days afterwards, Mrs. G— came to my sister, and enquired for Mary; stating that she had not been at home for nine days. The alarm was raised, and search made, and enquiry instituted for the lost girl. Many conjectures were put forth as to her disappearance. Within three days there were near 300 persons assembled, and a general search intended to be made. It was at last ascertained where she was last seen, with whom, and in what direction going. The company spread out, about 50 yards apart, and took a direction towards Mr. K's farm. After a search of about 2 hours, they came to a spot where there was the appearance of some thing having been killed and dragged away in the direction towards a slough. The trail passed over several logs, and on reaching the slough, they discovered a pile of rotten logs thrown together in the water and mud. On further searching that pile they found the body of the once beautiful and lovely Mary, bruised, and horribly mangled. Her dress was drawn over her head, for she had been drawn upon the ground, feet foremost, for near one hundred yards.

The body was taken to Mr. K's, and all were required to come forward and touch the body. This my brother and several others agreed upon ostensibly for the purpose of witnessing any change that might be visible in the countenance of the assembled multitude, but under the pretext of an old superstitious notion that when the murderer should touch the corpse of one whom he had murdered, that the wounds would bleed afresh. All came forward and touched her body except David C— whose feelings would not permit him to come near her. Excitement was great, and his refusal to touch her, and his having been seen last with her in that direction and coming home all bloody, was construed into his supposed guilt, and on suspicion poor David was thrown into prison to answer, at the next court, for the alleged murder of Mary G—. Decried were the hours that passed over him while confined in the dark dungeon of a loathsome jail. But conscious innocence kept him from despair, and he trusted that God would so order the affair that innocence would one day be known, and fully brought to light. After the body of Miss G— had been interred 8 days, it was suggested that perhaps murder was committed upon her to conceal another crime. Her body was disinterred, and a competent jury called to examine and report upon this matter, and their decision was as suggested. Public excitement now became so high, and the community believing that David C— was truly the murderer, and spoiler of innocence that serious apprehensions were entertained that the jail would be forced and the prisoner burnt. At the trial every circumstantial evidence was tried to bear against him, and it seemed that David C— must be sacrificed to appease the wrath of an incensed multitude. Able counsel were employed for the prisoner, and after investigation David C— was acquitted from legal arrest, but not from popular sentiment. He was hunted down, and persecuted where ever he went, and life became burthenome to him. The happiness and prosperity of his father's family departed, and never shall I forget the sad change was visible with them, when in 1828—I again saw them; for I had left that section of country only 2 months before the sad tragedy. In 1829, Mr. C— sold out and moved to Illinois. The next year a Mr. A—, assaulted a woman in the remote part of his settlement, and to accomplish his selfish designs, he threatened her life, and told her that he would treat her as he had Mary G— for similar obstinacy. He also made her promise total secrecy, and thus she escaped with life. She immediately made oath before a justice of his crime, and he was arrested. His mother-in-law and two of his wife's sisters then divulged his conduct towards themselves, and such was the strong testimony against him that he was duly committed for trial at the next court. He broke jail and leaving his excellent wife and children to shift for themselves he departed for the west. The public now looked back with feelings of the deepest regret for their cruel treatment of poor David C—. By this time so much had transpired that all were thoroughly convinced of the innocence of C— and the guilt of A—. This wretched man had only been married about one year when he murdered Mary G—. He was one of the company that touched her lifeless body, but none could discern any change upon his features. After coming to the west he was engaged with counterfeiters and desperadoes and being afterwards accused of murder and found guilty he was hung, and thus the earth was rid of a monster. In 1833 David C— sunk to the grave broken hearted. In passing through the section of country where the murder was committed I went to the spot and there upon a beech tree some one had cut in the bark those words: "Here, Mary G— was murdered by David C— Nov. 19th 1824." But how much were the community deceived as to the true murderer! The wretch who was guilty, witnessed the effects of his crime, reeked upon an innocent and worthy young man. Mary G— and David C— now lie low in death. Peace to their memory! This is a plain narrative of facts, and the parties concerned were all well known to the writer. I have not embellished; for my feelings, on this mournful occasion would not permit me so to do.

CHARITY.

A selfish, stingy, and narrow spirit, when we care for none but ourselves, and regard not how it fares with other men, as we do but live in ease and plenty ourselves, is of all things most contrary to that charity which Christ has taught and so earnestly recommended to us; love is not mercenary or self-seeking, it inclineth us to do good to others though we do not receive the least advantage to ourselves, besides the pleasure of doing it. If our hearts be full of true charity, it will never suffer us to be in quiet till we give it some vent, and will make us impatiently seek for opportunity of exercising it; so far is love from projecting gain or profit to itself by that kindness it doth to others, that it is beneficent to the evil and unthankful, to the indigent, and those who are unable to make any requital; it teaches us to lend, not hoping to receive again nay, to do good to those who return evil for it, so far is it from any base or selfish designs.

[Dr. Calmy's Sermons.]

Sierre Leone.—Accounts received at Salem, Mass., from this place up to the 7th of March, state that hostilities had occurred between the British and the natives. The river Niger was blockaded by her Majesty's steamer Albert, to bring Sarrah, King of the Landames, to terms. The Naloes, in an armed canoe, broke through the blockade. It was pursued and driven ashore, and the day after the Kassaaka-bouly was battered down, but in an attempt to land, the British force of five men, and had eight wounded. A reinforcement was sent from Sierre Leone. On the 11th a severe battle was fought, the Landames having joined the British. The Naloes were defeated and their town burned down. The river was opened on the 12th.

Fire in Manchester.—It is stated that a most destructive fire occurred at Manchester March 2. The amount of property destroyed is believed to be more than £100,000.

Three thousand pounds were recently collected in Glasgow in one day, for the great league fund.

STINSON MIDDLETON.

March 27, 1844. no49-3m.

crisis of affairs renders it important to have an executive officer at the head of the nation of rare and extraordinary qualifications.

Mr. Clay and Mr. Van Buren are obviously not the men. Mr. Van Buren, though he may have the adroitness of a cunning lawyer, his cowardice in wielding power to defend the oppressed should rank him with hypocrites and hirelings. Mr. Clay, may be the better man of the two, but there is little reason to believe that he would originate any essential reform in the nation. Mr. Clay's policy like an old garment worn threadbare, would not be mended and is not worth it, being worn out. Surely a virtuous nation cannot and will not honor God and a shining blackleg and duelist at the same time. But they will love the one and hate the other. They will hold to the one and let the other sink with the ponderous gravity of his own vices. Like a darling but spoiled child the nation has done enough for him.

Who then is the man to whom this nation may look with safety, to preside over them and bring order out of confusion, and impart efficiency to the laws and purge the seats of civil jurisprudence and wipe from our national escutcheon the stain of slavery; and give the people the unrestricted right of petition, crush the spirit of violence, that stalks abroad in the length and breadth of the nation, turning temples and public halls, station professional men, while in the discharge of their official duties, in their own churches or in their own banks? Who is the man that will possess the energy, courage, and power to give to the friends of universal freedom, the unrestricted freedom of speech, either in the south, or in the north, and never see the sacred right of trial by jury infringed, with impunity? That will loose the heavy burdens and break every species of oppression. Such a man, that will do all these things, I will admit must combine the courage of a Napoleon, the wisdom of a Solomon. Such a man however, can be found in the person of General Joseph Smith. From his boyhood he has been accustomed to feel the lash of oppression, and invariably wrest the lash from the hand of the oppressor. His knowledge has not been acquired in the popular schools of the day; but from an intuitive and comprehensive survey of the simple and fundamental principles of all governments. He is eminently fitted to fill the highest station in the gift of the people. He is one of those rare men that God raises up among men in different periods of the world, in order to set a great mark in the history of nations, and to form a new era in the annals of the world. Lakeside mountain, of firm and rocky base, that bounds the onward distance of a great and long river, and gives it a new channel altogether; he is fitted by the God of Heaven, to change the course of popular errors and dogmas that have been accumulating for ages. Religious and political errors in the lapse of centuries, become so massy, like constantly accumulating codes of civil jurisprudence, that they original and elementary design is obscure, and unfathomable to ordinary minds. Then it is that empires and speculative theorists, make desolate the treasures of knowledge and oppress the mind and consciences of the children of men to an insupportable degree. At such times the Father of our race, raises up a deliverer, fully adequate to the great emergency, and rescues the world, by strutting them from creeds and usages that are oppressive and intolerable.

I have now directly under my eye, a political and religious map of the world. The variety and confusion of governments, policies and creeds presented, either indicate that the Father of our race, has sent a messenger from home, or forsaken his terrestrial abode. One shade of light however from this gloomy picture means my eye, I observe the eyes of all the ends of the earth, are intently looking and waiting for a change of policies, governments, and creeds. The desire of all nations has come, that is one universal desire pervades all nations, expressed as near as may be, in these words: O ye eternal heavens, grant us deliverance for the whole world, growth and travailing in pain to be delivered. The children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth. Efforts are being made in every nation, to the ends of the earth, to burst the bonds of political inequality and tyranny, and the chains of ignorance, bigotry, and priestcraft.

The cry for help is universal. The Christian and Mahometan, Jew and barbarian, crowded heads and presidents, lords and peasants are in fearful anticipation of dreadful events, except the Lord of the whole earth shall send deliverance. The most ancient inspired and well authenticated history, points out with unerring certainty America, to be the place where the ensign of inalienable rights is to be lifted up. This is the land where order is to be brought out of chaos. The land of promise—the land of Joseph. Other lands are full of people to overflowing, but here is a continent scarcely explored, vast tracts of land, stored with cattle, honey, and every sustenance for man and beast, in ample abundance for the colonizing of whole nations at once. It is a choice land above every land. The ancients foresaw in vision, that not only Ethiopia, would after long oppression, stretch forth her hands to God, and the Isles be intensely waiting for a law of government, handed down from heaven, but all nations would desire the same thing. At this very moment there is not a nation under the whole heaven, that the people are tired of and waiting for some better government to be instituted. And what are they waiting for? They are waiting for the word of God, the law of the Lord, or the kingdom of God to be set up on the earth, religiously and politically. The ancients bore record, that the word of the Lord, should go forth from Zion, that is from America. David bore testimony, it was in the fields of the wood (or prairies.) Isaiah said it was a land shadowing with wings. Jacob described its geographical location minutely and told which of his descendants should inherit it.

Can Henry Clay or Martin Van Buren administer the word of the Lord, for which all nations wait? Will their public acts bear any comparison with the public acts of Gen. Smith? What signal acts and deeds, have distinguished Van Buren, or Clay, that have not been eclipsed by superior acts in General Smith? They indeed have emerged from obscurity to much notoriety, and so has Joseph Smith. The notoriety of Mr. Smith in America and England, is certainly not less than that of Mr. Clay. But the latter has had the field nearly half a century, to exhibit his acts and greatness, while Mr. Smith has only been about twelve or fourteen years in public life, and is yet scarcely at meridian. While Mr. Clay, has travelled and wrought till evening, Joseph Smith has yet some thirty or forty years, for to out-distance the Kentuckian; while the latter has finished his race, without gaining his length of the "General." No he is, even behind the Prophet. Mr. Clay and Van Buren floated into notoriety, with the popular current in common with numerous other men. They reached the haven of distinction, along with other gallant ships, as soon as favorable winds and tide would permit. But General Smith has kept abreast of them, against wind and tide. He has shook off the shafts and missiles of priestcraft and old popular creeds, as a lion might the arrows of a boy's cross gun. Single handed, and alone, he has attacked all Christendom, and borne off triumphantly numerous and valiant armies, with which he can scour the ends of the earth, at the drop of the hat, and hold fast hydra headed, bigotry by the horns. Mr. Clay has headed a popular army, by succumbing to popular dogmas. But Mr. Smith, has won and conquered a noble host in despite of the strong fortifications of a hidden foe. Mr. Clay has made rapid sail by stepping into a log-wed boat, but Mr. Smith has constructed his own boat and out-stepped him. Mr. Smith is purely original under God; while Mr. Clay and Van Buren are purely apes under fashion and popular dogmas, that have led the world with nonsense, and confusion. Joseph Smith is a diplomatist of a higher order than Mr. Clay or Van Buren. His skill in securing to the Latter Day Saints, chartered rights and privileges (under the most adverse circumstances,) so extensive with the chartered privileges of the most sovereign States of the Union have excited the wonder and admiration of the greatest and best men. His own sagacious mind, devised the Nauvoo charter as liberal in its bearings, as the sun that shines both upon the just and unjust. It is perfectly tolerant, and protective to all religions that are or may be. In its military bearing, it sustains the most prompt and efficient discipline. The right of Habeas Corpus was not forgotten in that instrument, but is made available to every man who would seek a refuge from lawless violence and oppression. And what is marvellous in the origin of this great charter, is that it was devised at a time when every other man's mind would have sunk in despondency, under robbery, destitution and public odium. Mr. Smith is an extraordinary financier. A population gathering around him, most generally poor has been taught the best expedients, for becoming permanently rich. Towns, Temples and a City, have been built up under his ministrations with unparalleled rapidity, against floods of calamity, lawlessness, kidnapping, confiscation, robbery, and slaughter. General Smith's mind is fitted for the tumultuous scenes that threaten this and every other nation. Steady to his purpose no difficulties or obstacles intimidate him in the least. Beloved of God and all good men that know his virtues, the Nation must and will be blessed with such a President.

From the State Register. DISASTROUS CONFLAGRATION IN NEW ORLEANS.

The Placemore of the 17th contains the particulars of a disastrous fire which occurred on the day previous. Two hundred and eighty houses had been reduced to ashes. The fire commenced in a carpenter's shop near the northwest corner of Franklin and Jackson streets. The wind fortunately blew in the direction towards the swamp; had it been otherwise, the flames would have swept towards the river, in which case there would have been no bounds to the destruction. Loss estimated at 400 thousand dollars. It is supposed that two thousand persons have been left homeless. The Placemore says: "To attempt to picture the scene, with the fierce element was raging at its wild, were impossible. Houseless untold numbers were seen rushing through the smoke and flame, and seeking a shelter which only proved temporary, for the flames were again upon them. Beds and bedding, furniture, groceries in short every thing that could be moved in a hurry—was seen piled and thrown together on Canal and Commercial streets, the owners sitting upon the little wreck that was left to them of all their household store. Many of the inmates of the houses were laboring under sickness and infirmity, and their eyes rolled wildly as they were borne from their homes. Mothers, half frantic, were searching for lost children—children were rushing, with loud screams, amid the fierce crackling of the flames, and seeking their parents in every face. All was confusion and despair; but the most distressing sight of all, perhaps, was the removal of the sick from the Maison de Sante. God grant we may never be called upon to witness such a spectacle again."

Thomas Kearney, a young man about 19 years of age, an apprentice to A. W. Scates, was seen to rush into a house on Jackson street, amid the flames, and rescue a young child playing with a rattle, unconscious of its fate, while the mother was looking on in the greatest agony, expecting every moment to see her child burn to death.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT,
GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,
SIDNEY RIGDON, ESQ.,
OF PENNSYLVANIA.

RETRIBUTIVE JUSTICE.

A knot of base men, to further their wicked and malicious designs towards the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and to bolster up the intents of black-legs and bogus makers, and advocate the characters of murderers, established a press in this city last week, and issued a paper entitled the "Nauvoo Expositor." The prospectus showed an intention to destroy the charter, and the paper was filled with libels and slanderous articles upon the citizens and city council from one end to the other.

"A burnt child dreads the fire," the church as a body and individually has suffered till "forbearance has ceased to be a virtue": the cries and pleadings of men, women and children, with the authorities, were, will you suffer that servile murderous intended paper to go on and vilify and slander the innocent inhabitants of this city, and raise another mob to drive and plunder us again as they did in Missouri? Under these pressing cries and supplications of afflicted innocence, and in the character, dignity, and honor of the corporate powers of the charter, has granted to the city of Springfield, and made and provided as a part of our charter for legislative purposes: viz, "to declare what shall be a nuisance, and to prevent and remove the same," the city council of Nauvoo on Monday the 10th, declared the establishment and Expositor a nuisance; and the city Marshall at the head of the police in the evening took the press, materials and paper in to the street and burnt them.

And in the name of freedom, and in the name of God, we beseech all men, who have the spirit of honor in them, to cease from persecuting us collectively or individually. Let us enjoy our religious rights, and peace, like the rest of mankind: why start presses to destroy rights and privileges, and bring upon us mobs to plunder and murder? We ask no more than what belongs to us—the rights of Americans.

TO THE PUBLIC.

In removing the Nauvoo Expositor as a nuisance, let it be distinctly understood that every step taken, has been sanctioned by legal proceedings, founded upon testimony had before the City Council: and when it is considered that Nauvoo is a incorporated body, as well as any other city in the United States; has "reserved rights" as well as the State or States; and that the charter of the city of Springfield, which is a part of our charter, has the wise provision for the City Council "To declare what shall be a nuisance, and to prevent and remove the same;" and that it is a common occurrence for city corporations to remove "scandalous prints;" and that Blackstone holds the rule just, "that a libelous print or paper, affecting a private individual, may be destroyed." Blackstone, 5. note 6. And that wicked men, were convicting at the dearest rights of our city and citizens, it must be admitted on all hands that the emergency of the case, called for specific proceedings in defence of our sacred honors. No doubt that many that laughed at our misfortunes in Missouri, will roar at this legal procedure, as arbitrary, and to them we reply, that "He that wants all men pleased each way, And not himself offend; He must begin his work to day, But God knows when he'll end."

Elegant, Ornamental, and fine Penmanship.—Mr. A. R. Dutton, from N. Orleans, is about opening a writing school in Nauvoo; and from an exhibition of specimens of his dexterity in the art, we think he is about the best plain, ornamental and finished penman in America. To patronize him would be rewarding genius.

ANECDOTE.

Two Fosters make two; two Higbees make four, and two Laws make six; and one Ivins makes seven; and the "seven sons of sevens," in one of their discourses, in this city not long since, raised up there hands before "that God who gave bounds to the mighty deep; that God who organized the physical world and gave infinity to space," and said, "we verily believe, and many of us know of a surety, that the religion of the Latter Day Saints, as originally taught by Joseph Smith which is contained in the Old and New Testaments, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and Book of Mormon, is verily true!" But the "Sarmont" being very long and the memory of "the seven" very short, before they got through, they resolved, that "we consider the gathering in haste, and by sacrifice, to be contrary to the will of God." (Held! Held! cried the "Devil and Dr. Faustus") you are running against a snag! The bible says gather my saints that have made a covenant by sacrifice. Let the ships of Tarshish bring them first, and let them come on camels and swift beasts: and the Book of Mormon you know says all that are "not gathered" shall be cut off from among the people; and the book of Doctrine and Covenants, says the New Jerusalem is to be built by the gathering of the saints, and that, "it is a day of sacrifice." We know Jesus; we know Paul, and we know Joseph, but who are ye? Verily you are like the Irish Sailor who, while riding a Jackass in great glee, in fly time, had his foot kicked out of the stirrup, and a Jackass' kicked in! Och me old Father of rabbits, with one eye single to yer own dear self—if yer a goin to get on I'll get off!

GRINDING THE POOR.

The following very unscriptural and we think grinding "notice" was seen in several places last week in our city:

"THE Subscribers wish to inform all those who through sickness, or other misfortunes, are much limited in their means of procuring bread for their families, that we have allotted Thursday of every week, to grind TOLL FREE for them, till grain becomes plentiful after harvest."

P. S. Elder Cowles, or Bishop Ivins, will attend at our mill on those days set apart, and will judge very benevolently, in all cases where the above indulgence is claimed.

W. & W. LAW.

Nauvoo, June 7th, 1844.—"If" Well might Jesus exclaim when thou givest alms, don't sound a trumpet! and truly may we say, when the poor wait "bread" let them go to the Laws and "let them get their TOLL FREE!" Why not send (Bishop) Ivins to the poor with the flour, in cases of sickness, "misfortune," or even limited means? We unto you scribbles, pharisees, hypocrites! half faced, half eyed, with hearts of stone to grind the poor toll free! Read your doom in the 48th section and 5th paragraph of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

"O GRACIOUS!"

"Blow the trumpet sound the bugle! fire the cannon! and let the small arms rattle! Pardon the crimes of Joseph Thompson Hare; laugh at Murrell; pardon Avery, the Methodist priest, for the seduction and murder of Sarah Maria Conrad; tell Van Zandt, the Episcopalian priest, and twenty others who were fleeing the virtue of their flocks, to go on and spot among the ewe lambs of Israel; pardon all pirates and highwaymen; and even liberate the black slave of Jack Hall the notorious chimney sweep, of a gone by century in London; for George Beader a Mormon Elder, with his licence in his pocket, signed by Joseph Smith, has been caught with four or five pieces of foreign bogus in his possession, and sent to prison in the dreadful city of St. Louis. What an opening!—From the great Missouri Republican with Bogus' beef grinding in his teeth, down to the little alarming Revelle, "muling and puking in its nurse's arms"—all raised their ears from five to six feet high and even the Quincey Whig opened his sepulchral mouth so that you might see clear through to Warsaw, the "but end." Lord what glorious times! we have got one Mormon elder at last into jail! Go on doctors, rob the graves and yerk the lives out of the low ladies of St. Louis, and hang their putrid flesh around the Catholic College like beef in a butcher's market; justice will not claim more than a picacone, and a minute's imprisonment for such light offences; O. P. Rockwell, however, is an exception; he is a Mormon, nine months' solitary confinement for nothing will do for him! But we have a Mormon Elder glory to the vigilance and shrewdness of "Lukington Hazzard for Bogus' butchers! spanish bogus and impudical judges! O gracious! how the hypocritical heat of this wicked and adulterous generation, makes the dreadful good ones run out their tongues and toll out the drippings of corruption!"

The General yet goes ahead.—The Osprey's last blot was, Smith gent. 63 Ladies 20 Clay do 16 do 4 Van Buren do 11 do

VERY GOOD.

We understand that Hyrum Smith will shortly visit all the principle precincts in Hancock, to solicit the people for their votes to elect him, at the coming election, a representative to the State Legislature. This is not only constitutional, virtuous and gratifying to noble minded patriots, and friends of equal rights, but it will be an honorable representation, truly Democratic and every way worthy of the confidence and support of the electors. Tell the truth and nothing can be said against him: in fact, to be respected he only needs to be known.

TURN AWAY.—The newspapers, as usual, are taking a real "Turn" for General Smith as candidate for president.—Truly they turn and overturn, and publish wonderful stories about the General and Nauvoo. All right, gentlemen, Gen. Smith is much obliged to you for turning the wheel; the more you turn the sooner the job will be done, and the nicer the polish will be on "fine steel," providing the workmen dust on plenty of emery. Turn away, my good fellows, and give the General your votes into the bargain; one good turn deserves another.

To Writers.—G's poetry, and other writings, are on hand and under consideration. Good rifles, close sights, and short shots bring the game!

STORY OF THE LION AND LAMB.

From all appearances in the New York Herald, there was a great lion with a shaggy mane, great cheek teeth, furious eyes, and huge paws, which had a den near the eastern sea; and he used to bask upon the cliff while his jackals furnished him with much flesh to regale his royal body; and let the fragments of his enormous consumption, the smoking brands of his gigantic power; and the melted cinders of his wrath, lay piled round the confines of his borders, in tattering grandeur, like the black thunder clouds before a tornado. The very beasts of the field, from a mite to a mammoth, trembled at his sublime presence, and were awed into unconditional silence! A flash from his eye was as terrific as the lightning of God; and a whisk of his tail, lashing the surrounding mountains, was more dreadful and calamitous to the lesser beasts, than the dire convulsions of an earthquake; and his "lion's" dro, in liquid streams of melted eloquence, was like rivers of burning lava from the crater of Mount Etna; year more, dreadful, and more awful! In his majestic snoring, the gore of his gracious beard; the froth on his lordly lips, in their tri-colored magnificence, and his kingly paws, glittering with the ivory flesh hooks of mortality, with here and there a speck of blood, as trophies of valor, were so transcendently pompous, beyond description, that without a permit, animals of less exaltation, had no right to look on his sublimity.

However there was a lamb on one of the western hills, in his innocent gambol among the flowers and verdure of temple June, that would cast his merry eyes upon creation and view the handy work of the Almighty; in doing which, the king of beasts, with all his blushing honors thick upon him, came under his eyes, as a "very little thing;" for this lamb was growing up as one of Nebaioth, and of the breed of Bashan; and according to the dicta of animals, and the heterogeneous laws by which they all claimed pre-eminence, power, privilege, pasture, peace and prosperity, a text might look upon a king, and a lamb could look on a lion! And lo, and behold! the old lion awoke, and one of his jackals, told him, that the "and" of this west without the fear of lions before his eyes, had looked upon his sublimity while he was in his nap; and the old lion, shook his awful mane; twined his serpentine tail, and growled, and not a beast moved his tongue and the lamb looked upon his sublimity with his eyes open, and the old lion in his anger, for it burned in his proud heart to think a lamb had courage enough to look into the terrible den of a lion and view the height and depth, the length and breadth of pomposity, brawn and all the bonsts of the field shuddered at the sound, and even the dogs barked for they verily thought there "was a beggar coming to town!" but the lamb, in his innocence, continued to sport upon the lawn and upon the summit of his own favorite hill, as independent of the lion, as virtue is of vice, or heaven is of hell. And the lion, all red with his badges of war, and hot with the fire of ambition, while the fleas of dishonor were filling his ears, and the flies of disgrace were biting his hide, growled a horrible growl and rolled up the white of his eyes towards the bone heaps and fish scales of his sumptuousity, and seemed to breathe a part of a sentence, like—"if the lesser beasts and cattle unadvised, black-mail, or the flesh pots as well as I, we would make mutton of that lamb!" and he licked his gracious chops. And all flesh, (as grass,) seemed to whisper one another, save us from the friendship of that lion when he is hungry; and he licked his gracious chops, and growled again!

For the Neighbor.

Mr. Paul M. Closky—

Dear Sir—Yours of May 13th by the hand of Mr. Nelson, was received this day. All I have learned about the memorial I sent to the Legislature of Pennsylvania, was that it was presented to the Senate by a Mr. Wilcox, and after reading was referred to the Committee on the judiciary, since which I have heard nothing from it. What disposition was farther made of it I cannot tell, as I live a great distance from there, and am not a subscriber for any paper in that state; I presume, however, that it was passed over as easily as possible, so as not to effect the pending presidential election, which it might have done if the Legislature had done their duty.

I am with respect your friend and fellow citizen
PAUL M. CLOSKEY.

PROCLAMATION.

By virtue of my office as Mayor of the City of Nauvoo, I do hereby strictly enjoin it upon the Municipal Officers, and Citizens of said city, to use all honorable and lawful means in their power, to assist me in maintaining the public peace and common quiet of said city. As at

Our government has come to this that our lives and property can be sacrificed at pleasure, and no redress can be had, unless granting redress may favor the promotion of aspirant or aspirants to some office. Our country is ruled for the people have ceased to command their public servants, and their servants rule them—by aspirants of two great political parties, regardless of the public good or the people's interest; each aspirant seeking for the office which he thinks within his reach, through the lowest political intrigues and most humiliating duplicity; in open contempt of every sacred principle of hallowed institutions. The constitution, the bulwark of our liberties is prostituted by these demagogues to favor their unchastened, ambitious designs; and they have the effrontery to say, in the face of the people and in the halls of our national legislature, that though a people's cause is just and their case such as calls for public commiseration, yet we can do nothing for you; as they have said to us when appealing to the authorities of our country for redress: the constitution does not afford you the protection required, when we asked merely for the protection of life and property. We have been thus insulted by both State and National Legislatures, and our last appeal will be to the people, sensible that the demagogues now in authority do in so saying and so doing, not represent the wishes and will of their constituents.

Let me ask you dear sir, what can be more humiliating to a native son of Pennsylvania, inspired by the spirit of his fathers than to witness the stain of corruption which every where shades the glory of our national escutcheon? to have to call to recollection the degrading pilfering abominations, of the so called, Glentworth affair; the sickening disclosures made by Dr. Duncan of Ohio in his late speech in Congress, and the more vile, if possible, corruptions, of Judge Elliot of Louisiana, who sir can look on those scenes and not say that the worm of corruption is gnawing at the very root of the tree of liberty, and unless the destroyer is removed the tree must fall and our liberties sink to rise no more. Office seeking and president making employ the whole demagogism of the nation; every interest of the people must be sacrificed to crown the unhallowed ambitious designs of these demagogues with success, it matters not who sinks or who swims, so those degraded miscreants can get into office; and though they have to walk over the dead bodies of unoffending females, and hear the cries of infant innocents agonizing in the pangs of death, victims to a spirit of hellish persecution, all is well, if they can but get into office, and stay after they get there. No interest of the people too great to be sacrificed, no life too precious to be destroyed without remorse or feeling, except that of gratification, if it only tends to moor them in their haven of ambition. Such sir, every observer must say is the condition of our country. Not Sir, that the people, as such, are corrupt; but they are suffering themselves to be led by a brood of political mercenaries who are plundering them of their earthly all, to fatten their own ambition.

Nothing could have been more gratifying to me than your letter, the name bespeaks a stranger, and one whom I have no recollection of ever seeing, but your letter is the voice of a pure patriotic son of Pennsylvania, speaking forth the sentiments of earlier times and better days, before demagogues ruled, and political miscreants blotted the fair character of our nation with infamy.

Permit me Dear Sir to subscribe myself a lover and admirer of honorable men and of yourself in particular SIDNEY RIGDON.

Coop Town, May 13th 1844.

Mr. Sidney Rigdon—

Dear Sir—Having read your petition to the Legislature of Pennsylvania setting forth the cruelty and injustice you and your people received from the hands of the people of Missouri. I am anxious to know the fate and treatment that petition has or may receive by the Legislature of Pennsylvania; my hope is large that that body by their silence will not look on with indifference, to such high-handed robbery and murder, but bring the culprit to justice, as the national government is bound by every principle of moral justice to restore to your people their land or their money and punish those who have violated the law of the land although they should be found in high places, this I say, the government is bound to do; and when the people become more generally acquainted with what you have suffered, they will enlighten the understanding of political aspirants as to the meaning of the constitution, on the protection of life and property, by giving them a chance for retirement, that will help their discernment. This is my opinion, and as an independent Pennsylvanian. You can make such use of this letter as you may think proper. You will please to inform me in relation to that petition and they Legislature of Pennsylvania, by letter or otherwise.

I am with respect your friend and fellow citizen
PAUL M. CLOSKEY.

PROCLAMATION.

By virtue of my office as Mayor of the City of Nauvoo, I do hereby strictly enjoin it upon the Municipal Officers, and Citizens of said city, to use all honorable and lawful means in their power, to assist me in maintaining the public peace and common quiet of said city. As at tempts have already been made to excite the jealousy and prejudice of the people of the surrounding country, by libels and slanderous articles upon the citizens and City Council, for the purpose of destroying the "Charter" of said city, and for the purpose of raising suspicion, which, and indignation among a certain class of the less honorable portion of mankind, to commit acts of violence upon the innocent and unsuspecting, in a certain newspaper called the "Nauvoo Expositor," recently established, for such purposes in said city, and which has been destroyed as a nuisance according to the provisions of the Charter. I further call upon every Officer, authority and citizen to be vigilant in preventing by wisdom, the promulgation of false statements, libels, slanders, or any other malicious designed concerns that may be put in operation to excite and ferment the passions of men to rebel against the rights and privileges of the city, citizens or laws of the land: to be ready to suppress the gathering of mobs to rebel, by gentle means and noble exertion, every foul scheme of unprincipled men, to disgrace and dishonor the city, or state, or any of their legally constituted authorities, and finally to keep the peace, by being cool, considerate, virtuous, unoffending, manly and patriotic as the true sons of liberty ever have been, and honorably maintain the precious boon our illustrious fathers won.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand & affixed the [J.S.] seal of said Corporation at the City of Nauvoo, this 11th day of June, 1844.

AN ORDINANCE CONCERNING LIBELS, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

Whereas the saints in all ages of the world, have suffered persecution and death, by wicked and corrupt men under the garb of a more holy appearance of religion; and whereas the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from the moment that its first truths sprang out of the earth, till now, has been persecuted with death, destruction, and extermination; and whereas men, to fulfill the scriptures, that a man's enemies are they of his own household, have turned traitors in the church and combined and leagued with the most corrupt scoundrels and villains that disgrace the earth unkind, for the heaven daring and damnable purpose of revenge on account of disappointed lust; disappointed projects of speculation, fraud, and unlawful designs, to rob and plunder mankind with impunity; and whereas such wicked and corrupt men have greatly facilitated their unlawful designs; horrid intentions and murderous plans by polluting, degrading and converting the blessings and utility of the press, to the sin-smoking and blood-stained ruin of innocent communities; by publishing lies, false statements; coloring the truth, slandering men, women, children, societies, and countries; by poisoning the characters of black legs, highwaymen and murderers, as virtuous; and whereas a horrid, bloody, secret plan, upheld, sanctioned, and largely patronized by men, in Nauvoo and out of it, who boast that all they want for the word "go," to exterminate or ruin the Latter day Saints, is, for them to do "one" unlawful act, and the work shall be done, is now fostered, cherished, and maturing in Nauvoo, by men too, who helped to obtain the very charter they would break; and some of them drew up and voted for the very ordinances they are striving to use as a "sacred crown" to frighten the surrounding country in rebellion; mobbing and war; and whereas, while the blood of our brethren, from wells, holes, and naked prairies, and the ravishment of female virtue, from Missouri, and the smoke from the altars of infamy, prostituted by J. C. Bennett, and continued in the full tide of experiment and disgraceful damnation, by the very self called fragments of a body of degraded men that have got up a press in Nauvoo, to destroy the charter of the city; to destroy Mormonism, men, women, and children, as Missouri did, by force of arms; by fostering lies that emanate from corruption, and betray with a kiss; wherefore to honor the State of Illinois, and those patriots, who gave the charter, and for the benefit, convenience, health, and happiness of said city:

Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the City Council of the city of Nauvoo, That if any person or persons shall write or publish, in said city, any false statement, or libel any of the citizens, for the purpose of exciting the public mind against the chartered privileges, peace, and good order of said city, or shall slander, (according to the definition of slander or libel by Blackstone or Kent, or the act in the statute of Illinois,) any portion of the inhabitants of said city, or bribe any portion of the citizens of said city, for malicious purposes; or in any manner or form, excite the prejudice of the community against any portion of the citizens of said city, for evil purposes, he, she, or they, shall be deemed disturbers of the peace and upon conviction before the Mayor or Municipal Court, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned six months, or both, at the discretion of said Mayor or Court.

Sec. 2. Be it further ordained that nothing in the foregoing section shall be so construed as to interfere with the right of any person to be tried by a jury of his vicinage; with the freedom of speech or the liberty of the press, according to the most liberal meaning of the constitution; the dignity of freemen; the voice of truth; and the rules of virtue.

Sec. 3. And be it further ordained that this ordinance shall be in force, from and after its passage.

Passed, June 10, 1844.

AFFIDAVITS.

State of Illinois,) ss.
City of Nauvoo,) On the 20th day of May 1844, came W. W. Phelps before me, Willard Richards Recorder of said city, and after being duly sworn, depose and says, that the statements purporting to be his testimony against Joseph Smith, and others, as taken before some great Court in Missouri, is a sham; no legal court was held there, and the thing that was fixed, was guarded by mob soldiers; and the witnesses examined amid the firing of cannon, threats, imprecations and vengeance of said mob; continually echoing the diabolical power of said mock-tribunal, or inquisition; that there was no law for a Mormon in Missouri; that in such horrid duress your affiant used prudence to save life, having saved it thrice, before by a power above Missouri; wherefore the statement written by Missourians, sanctioned by Missourians; published by Missourians, and swallowed by apostates is a hoax just fit for mean men.

W. W. PHELPS.

WILLARD RICHARDS Recorder C. N. Nauvoo, June 4th, 1844.

We whose names are undersigned do certify and solemnly swear that the foregoing statement of a pretended Court, or inquisition in Missouri, and mode of compelling witnesses to swear under "duress," is correct; and that the witnesses were compelled to swear at the point of the bayonet, as directed by the mob, to save life; and thus we give full confidence to Mr. Phelps statement; we having been eye and ear witnesses of the facts set forth.

THE OREGON EXPEDITION.
The following letter from a member of the Great Emigrating Party will be read with interest, though we trust few of our readers will profit by its advice to future emigrants. It will be seen that this was written in the Rocky Mountains early in August, when the emigrants had encountered little hardship; we have had advice a month later, when the party passed Fort Hall, on the Saptin, in a sadder plight. The real difficulties of this long and perilous journey commence in the Rocky Mountains, whence for a thousand miles the barrenness and desolation are fearful. "Cut stone" volcanic lava and wild wormwood are poor entertainment for man or beast; and game is scarcer there than in Connecticut. We await with painful solicitude further advice from the Emigrants.—Tribune

EFFECTS OF PERPETUAL DAY.
Nothing made so deep an impression upon our senses as the change from alternate day and night to which we had been habituated from our infancy to the continued daylight to which we were subjected as soon as we crossed the Arctic circle. Where the ground is but little trodden, even trifles are interesting; and I do not, therefore, hesitate to describe the feeling with which we regarded this change. The novelty, it must be admitted, was very agreeable; and the advantage of constant daylight, in an unexplored and naturally monstrous sea, was too great to allow us ever to wish for a return of the alterations above alluded to; but the reluctance we felt to quit the deck when the sun was shining bright upon our sails and to retire to our cabin, or necessary rest; and when we returned to the deck to keep our night watch, if it may be so called, and still found the sun guiding the sky, it seemed as if the day would never finish.

What, therefore, at first promised to be so gratifying, soon threatened to become extremely irksome; and would, indeed, have been a serious inconvenience, had we not followed the example of the feathered tribe, which we daily observed winging their way to roost, with a clock-work regularity, and retired to our cabin at the prayer hour, where shutting out the rays of the sun, we obtained that repose which the exercise of our duties required.

At first sight, it will no doubt, appear to many persons that constant daylight must be a valuable acquisition in every country; but a little reflection will, I think, be sufficient to show that the reverse is really the case; and to satisfy a thinking mind, that we cannot overrate the blessings we derive from a wholesome alternation of labor and rest, which is in a manner forced upon us by the succession of day and night. It is impossible by removing to a high latitude, to witness the difficulty there is in the regulation of time; the proneness that is felt by the indolent and careless, to rivet themselves to their occupations, and by the indolent and procrastinating to postpone their duties, with out being truly thankful for that all-wise and merciful provision with which Nature has endowed the more habitable portions of the globe.—Expedition towards the North Pole.

WHIG TESTIMONY AGAINST MR. CLAY.
The Boston Atlas, the leading Whig paper in Massachusetts, in Nov. 1838, made use of the following language towards Mr. Clay:

"That Mr. Clay is the chosen candidate of the aristocracy of the whig party, is unquestionable; and it is equally unquestionable that very earnest and zealous efforts will be made to impose him upon the whigs as their candidate. It is also certain that Mr. Clay is not the choice of the democracy of the whig party. Apart from other sufficient reasons, therefore, which we shall give hereafter, the very fact that Mr. Clay is the darling of the aristocratic whigs, or rather the very cause which makes him so, operates, in the nature of things, to prejudice him in the eyes of the democratic whigs."

A PICTURE FOR CONTEMPLATION.
The Pennsylvania describes, the Sabbath after the recent riots, thus: "Sunday in Philadelphia—soldiers marching and countermarching through the streets, not for display or peaceful purposes, but prepared for actual battle—marines under arms—sailors of the United States Navy, with cutlasses, pistols, boarding pikes, and all the appurtenances of war, ready for deadly use upon the instant—the echoes awakened by the hoofs of cavalry, and around the closed churches, which still remain, are seen waving plumes and flashing bayonets. Such is a Sunday of the nineteenth century in the city of Philadelphia. Religious toleration when thus enforced by loaded muskets, drawn sabres, and at the cannon's mouth—charity secured through dread of grape and canister."

GEN. JACKSON.
The editor of the Gallatin (Tenn.) Union is giving an account of a recent visit which he made to the Hermitage, makes the following allusion to a scene of deep solemnity that he was brought to witness on the occasion: "There was an interesting but solemn scene presented on the Sabbath. It was communion season in the Hermitage church. The General and his friend were there early at the morning prayer meeting. And at the close of the sermon preceding the breaking of bread, Andrew Jackson took his seat at the table. B. F. Butler by his left side, and an affectionate daughter on the other, with his neighbors and friends seated around and on either side, and there partook, perhaps for the last time, of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of their Lord and Savior. Beautiful contrast! The man whose voice had often been heard leading on armies to battle in defence of his country, and then filling the highest political office in the gift of a nation and giving council to the world, now seated at the table of the Lord, in meek submission, celebrating his death and suffering. And like "The Lord's seamen, after boisterous storms, Lands on his country's breast," He seeks repose in retirement, and finds peace and consolation in that the world cannot give or take away."

EXTRAORDINARY MOVEMENT.
We copy the following, from the National Intelligencer, of the 16th inst.: "Late last evening, after an Executive session of several hours, the Senate removed the injunction of secrecy from the treaty, and documents accompanying it, for the annexation of Texas. We have not of course, had an opportunity of examining these papers, but we learn orally that, by a communication from the President yesterday, the Senate was informed that he had ordered a military force to repair to the frontier of Texas, to open a communication with the President of that Republic, and as circumstances might require; and had ordered a naval force to Vera Cruz, to remain off that port and prevent any naval expedition of Mexico, if any such should be attempted, from proceeding against Texas! This is the rumored stipulations with Texas confirmed."

Newport, May 4.
Trial of "Governor" Dorr.—The court have been occupied to-day with discussions upon points of law, as to whether treason against a State is not treason against the U. States—I do not think the trial will be completed until Tuesday.

The arguments to day have been very interesting. Mr. Dorr himself has taken a very active part in them.
The opinion here seems to be that Mr. Dorr will be convicted. If so, before the close of another week he will be the tenant of a State Prison, but for how long a time remains to be seen.

Death of the Earl of Londale.—This great nobleman died at his residence, York House, Twickenham, on Tuesday 19th, aged 87. His Lordship was the oldest member of the house of Peers, with the exception of the Archbishop of York, who is one month older. He held the Lord Lieutenancies of both Westmoreland and Cumberland, and his influence was very great in those counties. He defended successfully his family supremacy in Westmoreland, on three memorable occasions, when the late Mr. Brougham, now transfigured into Lord Brougham, and Vaux, attempted to secure one of the seats for himself. Lord Londale was a warm supporter and personal friend of Mr. Pitt, and an unchanged Tory to the old school to the day of his death. Report says that Sir James Graham has put in a claim to be Lord Lieutenant of Cumberland, and Lord Brougham of Westmoreland. The "Times" has come out strongly against both claims.

Here is a paragraph that should be read and be remembered.
"Take the right when you meet any person on the sidewalk, and never walk more than two abreast. Consider that others have some right to the sidewalk as well as yourself and immediate companions."

Fire.—The steamer Icolander was destroyed by fire on Saturday evening last, whilst lying at the ferry-landing, opposite St. Louis. She had on board at the time eighty-five cords of wood. The flames spread so rapidly as to render it impossible to send any assistance from the other side of the river, in season to be of service.

The Bank of England.—The amount of specie in the Bank of England, at the time of the last report, was £13,000,000 sterling—being £2,400,000 more than at the corresponding time the last year.

There are thousands and tens of thousands of young men among us, says the Hallowell Cultivator, whose only resource against the accumulated miseries of a degraded manhood, and a disgraced old age, is to go to sea or the farm. It is useless to say this day, for every young man to go to sea, or to the farm, for a lot of living by his wits, for it is a lot in which few who undertake it have the talent requisite to ensure success. How many there are at present leaving away the precious years of youth in our cities and villages who ought to be acquiring the rudiments of some honorable and useful trade. Learning is by no means incompatible with the practice of the arts; for the more one knows, the more likely will he be to succeed, and do honor both to himself and to the profession in which he is engaged.

The Petrified Forest in Cairo, in Egypt.—This was the subject of an interesting paper, (which we hope to see published,) read by Dr. A. Chaloner at the late Scientific Convention at Washington.

It was discovered by the celebrated M. Linant, chief engineer to Mohammed Ali, who has resided in Egypt since 1818, and has visited every part of that country, and in 1826, when returning to Cairo, and at a distance of about three leagues he discovered the "petrified forest." These trees are found on the surface of the sand, both broken and entire. The trunks of some are still standing; some are carbonized, but petrified; some resemble wood newly hewn; others look like fire-brands; some fragments are converted into yellow jasper and agatized. Dr. Chaloner gave a minute account of the geological formation of the country, and informed the audience, that specimens from the "petrified forest," and suite of specimens illustrating the geological formation of the country were in the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. Some of these petrified trees are dates, palm, fir, fig, oak, sycamore and bamboos of two feet in diameter.

"How many genders are there?" asked a school master.

"Three, sir," promptly replied little blue eyes.

"Pray give me an example of each," said the master.

"Masculine, feminine and neuter."

"Why, you are masculine, because you are a man, and I am feminine, because I am a girl."

"Very well—proceed."

"I don't know," said the little girl, "but I reckon Mr. Jenkins is neuter, as he is an old Bachelor."

Dickens, in his Martin Chuzzlewit, gives a touching incident between an intoxicated husband and a forgiving wife:

"She went up to him, and spoke lovingly, saying, she would refer to him in everything—and would consult his wishes, and obey him, and they might be very happy if he would be gentle with her. He answered with an imprecation, and a blow? Yes! Stern truth against the base-souled villain—with a blow. No angry cry, no loud reproaches—Even her weeping and her sobs were stifled by her clinging around him. She only said repeating it in an agony of heart—'Show could he, how could he?' and lost her utterance in an agony of tears.—Oh, confiding woman, the best among us need deal very lightly with thy faults, if only for the punishment, thy nature will endure, in bearing heavy evidence on the day of judgement."

"THE HAND WRITING ON THE WALL."

The United States Gazette, a Whig paper, records the following remarkably, and beautiful fact, connected with the recent Philadelphia outrages:

"We saw, on Saturday, the ruins in Kensington, the blackened crumbling walls of the Church of the School House, and of many dwelling houses, that the passions of men had, doomed to destruction. The heart sickens at such exhibitions, and inquires for the justice of man, that allowed of such unprovoked, unrelenting violence; or the justice of Heaven, which seemed to sleep amid the wrong doings of the wicked, both when the murders were committed, and the property wasted. We learned nothing there to answer that inquiry; but returning by the way of Fourth street, we went up and stood amid the smouldering ruins of St. Augustine's; and when we renewed our enquiry, our eye rested on the uppermost portion of the uppermost wall, from which the fire had peeled every particle of plastering, and flicked off the decorative paint; but as if in defiance of the wrath of man and the fury of the flames, there stood, in clear undimmed letters, the inscription, "THE LORD'S NAME." And we turned away satisfied in our heart, and exclaiming in quiet submission, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

"A thousand and one editors" at least, according to the estimate of the "Times" are out for immediate Annexation.

"A Lady," in the Journal of commerce, lectures the men for putting their hands in their coat pockets; she says it makes them stoop ungracefully.

A retrenchment has been made in the Queen's household by which an annual saving of $100,000 will be achieved. She should retrench in another important extravagance.

DEATH ON THE PALE HORSE.

A gentleman is now in our city who has for exhibition West's painting of Death on the Pale Horse. We have not seen the exhibition, but judging from the known celebrity of the artist, and from the number of testimonies we have seen, it must be worthy of attention. The exhibition opens to-day at Gen. Smith's Store and is to be continued for three days.

DEATHS.—For the week ending Monday 20th.

CAUTION.

HAVING once notified the Public against receiving a certain currency, called "Kirtland Safety Society," I again caution all persons against receiving or trading in said paper money as all that was issued as genuine was so deemed; after the first officers who signed said bills retired, a new set of officers were appointed; and the vault of the institution was broken open and robbed of several hundred thousand dollars; the signatures forged upon the said stolen bills, and those bills are being silyly offered or had in trade for the purpose of wilful and malicious prosecution and collection. In the first place, the bills are not collectable by law in an unchartered institution; in the second place, they are spurious, the signatures being a forgery, and every person passing or trading a bill is guilty of passing a counterfeit money, besides the barefaced act of swindling. And lastly, he that uses said bills in any way as a medium of trade, is guilty of fraud and shows a wicked and corrupt determination to wilfully, maliciously, and feloniously rob the Latter Day Saints; and if the executors of the laws, are as ready to mete out even handed justice to such men as to the Mormons, more indictments, will indicate more honesty. Time will show.

From the Boston Bee.

Destructive Fire at Philadelphia.—On Sunday morning says the Philadelphia Sun, just after the fire at Kaighn's Point, a fire broke out in a stone building on the wharf, directly south of Queen street. This building was pretty well filled with empty oil casks, and the flames spread with great fury until about five thousand barrels of tar, pitch, rosin and turpentine, were enveloped in a mass of dark red flame. At this juncture the fire large schooner Superb, was launched, just as the flames began to touch her windward side. A barque was also hauled out into the river. The fire by this time had enveloped several large piles of cord wood, the property of Levi Lingo, and also the rear of five large brick dwelling houses, fronting Swanson street, which were soon unroofed.—The persons who occupied these houses, as far as ascertained, are J. Douglas, Evans Jones, Capt. Skillinger, and about ten or twelve poor families, occupied the remainder. A poor sick woman was carried from one of the rooms, and soon after her bedstead was completely enveloped in the flames.

The rosin, turpentine, &c., belonged to Messrs. Albion & Troutbat. Messrs Simpson & Neil lost a lot of lumber, a boat shed, oakum, caulking tools, amounting to about six hundred dollars. This was undoubtedly, the work of design, and the incendiaries are supposed to be known.

Punishment.—A southern paper advertises a black runaway by the following description:—"He is about 25 years of age, his nose turns up six feet high, had on, &c. What a noxious that must be!! If that fellow comes among us, we will certainly secure him or his nose—he shall not come among our ladies of color—a six foot nose is not to be sneezed at!—It is worse than the nose which frightened Sancho Panza—we suppose it takes about two pair of blacksmith's hammers to blow it!"

Savage and Fatal Affray.—The Niagara Chronicle, published at Canada West, furnishes the following:—

"A dreadful, savage, and fatal affray took place in the vicinity of Allenburgh, one night last week. From the information which has reached us, it appears that two canal laborers occupied adjoining shanties; both were married, one having children, the other none. One of the children threw a chip or something of that sort into the shanty of his father's neighbor, which so enraged him that he gave the child a severe thrashing. The father was absent at the time; on his return he was informed of the circumstance and it put him into such a passion that he seized an axe and sallied out, threatening to cut down the shanty of the offender, who met him, being armed with a similar weapon.—With these axes they fought and the sad result was that the father of the child was killed dead on the spot, while his wife, who had thrown herself upon his body to protect it, had one of her legs broken, and was otherwise so seriously injured that it was feared she would not recover. The other man and his wife absconded, and nothing has been heard of them since."

The Post Office Bill.—By the new post office bill, which has just passed the Senate and been sent to the House, all newspapers under 1900 square inches in size are to pass through the post office to within thirty square miles of the place of publication free of charge—over thirty miles and under one hundred, a half cent postage on each sheet, will be required; over one hundred, one cent.

Dandy.—What is more hateful than puffed dandies, stepping like a wax doll on wire, and talking as if the English language was too vulgar to be spoken. We heard one of them thus address his companion:—

Voice: "weathea this mawning, Oondah how the themometah stand to day. Such a volutuous atmosphere is most delicious. I say, Petah, bring me a most delighful punch and chugsegars, will you? Baa-ah!"

Wonderful Escape from Poisoning.—On Friday morning, as we learn from the New York Courier & Enquirer, a diabolical attempt was made to poison a respectable family in that city, by a little negro servant girl, but most providentially it was frustrated by a timely discovery. The servant out of mere wickedness, (says the Courier) as she herself subsequently confessed, had poured about four ounces of quinine into about three quarts of water, a part of which had been poured into a tea-kettle, to make tea for the head of the family, who was unwell. One of the daughters, a beautiful and accomplished young lady had filled a tumbler with the water, and had drank a portion of it, when the color and singular taste attracted her attention and alarmed her.

She was soon afterwards seized with slight nausea, and apprehending that the water had been poisoned, the family physician was sent for, and on examining the water thus impregnated, he declared that there was sufficient to have destroyed the whole family. The wicked authorities of the crime thus happily foiled, had concealed herself in an out-house, upon the first discovery of her guilt, but was dragged forth, and locked up in a chamber, while a person was despatched for a police officer, but she managed to effect her escape through the windows, before his arrival, and has thus far eluded pursuit. She acknowledged that she had put the quinine into the water for the purpose of poisoning the family, but when asked what could have induced her to act so toward those who had always treated her with kindness, she could only say she believed the devil must be in her. This vindictive little wretch is only twelve years old, and what tends to aggravate her crime, is that she had previously made every effort to induce a little child who was on a visit to the family, to drink some poisoned water, and it was only about a year since, she gave a large quantity of salaratus to an infant out of mere mischief. It is to be hoped she will be arrested and brought to punishment.

Beautiful Extract.—'Twas night!—darkness had thrown its sable mantle o'er fair Creation's form, making without cold and forbidding—but within the spacious hall all was brilliancy and splendor—fair faces met faces fairer still—glittering lamps were vieing with eyes far brighter than the diamond's flash, while sweet music sent its thrill to the soul of every guest. Pensive, but not with silence, sadness oft but in that reverie of pleased new thought, when now the girl pouted on sweet womanhood, fair Anna stood, the envy of the buoyant throng, leaning upon her lover's arm—on her broad clear brow the clustering curls were glorious—her form seemed wrought in compliment of Beauty's mould, while in her placid eye there lived attractive light—her voluptuous bosom, half exposed, heaved in unison with the harp's twang, and the continuous motion of her fairy feet bespoke her heart's desire to join the merry waltz. But alas! at a moment when the joy of the lovely girl seemed highest, a change came o'er the scene—her admiring face, that before was eloquent with pleasure, looked wan and wishful—no sigh the maiden breathed, but leaning her head upon her lovers stately shoulder, and with her calm blue eyes looking him mildly in the face, in a faltering voice she said—"Tom, give us a cut of that spruce gum, or I'll pull your noddle."

Alligator Fishing.—I soon became tired of and disgusted with this butchering occupation, and requested that an intelligent blacksmith might be sent to me from Gallia, to whom I explained, after a good deal of trouble, what I wanted; and, by making a pattern in wood, I got him to fashion for me, for next day's sport, a small trident-shaped spear or harpoon, which had a socket to receive a long handle, made of tough and pliable wood, which could be easily disengaged when the alligator was struck. In this way I fully expected to have the fellow fairly caught and held fast by the barbs. I also hoped that, by means of a line fastened to the harpoon, I should be able to play him; as we do pike or salmon at home. Thor's apparently little satisfied with my contrivance, and inclined to laugh at the idea of my thus catching alligators, the people assembled in great numbers at one of the deepest and more distant lakes, where alligators were known to be numerous, in order to see how I was to proceed, but they at the same time, assured me, that their mode of despatching them was by the far the best and safest.—I took with me in the canoe a Cingalese, whom I remarked the day before, to be dexterous in using the spear, and who seemed to know where to look for alligators. Encouraged by me, he had not long been poking about among some tall reeds which grew in the tolerably deep and dark colored water, before he drove the instrument into a good sized one. The wounded animal instantly twitched the long plant handle out of his hands; and away he went, dragging along the canoe, with us in it, in fine style, causing the water, as it were, to boil around him. In a few minutes, however, he became sluggish, and at last, lay like a log at the bottom. We then paddled to the shore, and giving the greatly astonished and amused people the end of the line, they hauled him out of his oozy bed, already almost dead: the harpoon having been forced notwithstanding the hardness of his back, nearly through his body, in which it held fast, as I expected, by the long and strong barbs. He was nearly eighteen feet in length.—Campbell's Excursions in Ceylon.

Body stealing has become quite a common offence in Albany. The Medical College is in a flourishing condition!

The River is now open the entire distance from New York to Albany. [True Sun.]

TO THE PUBLIC.

As a soft breeze in a hot day mellow the air, so does the simple truth calm the feelings of the irritated; and so we proceeded to give the proceedings of the city council relating to the removal of the Nauvoo Expositor as a nuisance. We have been robbed, mobbed and plundered with impunity some two or three times, and as every heart is more apt to know its own sorrows, the people of Nauvoo had ample reason, when such characters as the proprietors and abettors of the Nauvoo Expositor proved to be before the city council, to be alarmed for their safety. The men who got up the press were constantly engaged in resisting the authority or threatening something. If they were fined an appeal was taken, but the slander went on, and when the paper came; the course and the plan to destroy the city was marked out. The destruction of the city charter and the ruin of the saints; was the all commanding topic. Our lives, our city, our charter and our characters are just as sacred, just as dear and just as good as other people's; and while no friendly arm has been extended from the demolition of our press in Jackson county Missouri; without law, to this present day, the city council with all the law of nuisance, from Blackstone down to the Springfield charter, knowing that if they exceeded the law of the land, a higher court could regulate the proceedings—abated the Nauvoo Expositor.

The proceedings of the council show, as sketched, that there was cause of alarm. The people when they reflect, will at once say that the feelings and rights of men ought to be respected. All persons otherwise, and, without recourse, to justice, mercy or humanity to come out with inflammatory publications, destructive resolutions or more especially extermination shows, a want of feeling; and a want of respect; and a want of religious toleration, that honorable men will deprecate among Americans, as they would the pestilence, famine, or horrors of war. It cannot be that the people are so lost to virtue as to coolly go to murdering men, women, and children. No—Candour and common sense forbid it.

TO THE PUBLIC.

We whose names are undersigned having seen in the Warsaw Signal, containing the proceedings of a meeting held at Carthage on the 13th inst., many statements, calculated to arouse the indignation and wrath of the people against the citizens of Nauvoo, do certify that Hyrum Smith did not make any threats nor offer any reward against the Signal, or its Editor, in the City Council.

For the Neighbor.

Mr. Editor:
In your last week's paper I proposed giving your readers an account of the proceedings of the City Council, but time forbids any thing more than a brief SYNOPSIS of the PROCEEDINGS of the MUNICIPALITY of the City of Nauvoo, relative to the destruction of the press and fixtures of the "Nauvoo Expositor."

and his right hand man Francis M. Higbee, who had confessed to him that he had had the P * *.

Washington Peck, sworn, said soon after Joseph H. Jackson, came here, he came to witness to borrow money, which witness loaned him, and took some jewelry as security. Soon after a man from across the river came after the jewelry,—Jackson, had stolen the jewelry from him. At another time wanted to get money of witness, asked witness if he would do any thing dishonorable, to get a living. Witness said he would not. Jackson, said witness was a damned fool, for he could get a living a deal easier than he was then doing by making Bogus, and some men high in the church, was engaged in the business. Witness asked if it was Joseph, No? said Jackson, I dare not tell it to Joseph, Witness understood him the Laws was engaged in it. Jackson said he would be the death of witness, if he ever went to Joseph or any one else to tell what he had said.

P. M.
Ordered by the council that, Sylvester Emmons, be suspended until his case could be investigated for slandering the City Council, that the Recorder notify him of his suspension, and that his case would come up for investigation at the next regular session of the council. [The order is in the hands of the marshal.]

Counsellor J. Taylor, said that counsellor Emmons, helped to make the ordinances of the city, and had never lifted his voice against them in the council, and was now trying to destroy the ordinances and the charter.

Lorenzo Wasson, sworn, said Joseph H. Jackson, told witness, that Bogus making was going on in the city;—but it was too damned small business. Wanted witness to help him to procure money, for the general, (Smith) was afraid to go into it, and with $500 he could get an engraving for bills, on the bank of Missouri, and one on the state of New York, and could make money,—said many times witness did not know him;—believed the General had been telling witness something. God damn him if he has I will kill him,—swore he would kill any man that should prove a traitor to him. Jackson said if he could get a company of men to suit him, he would go into the frontiers and live by high way robbery, had got sick of the world.

Mayor suggested that the Council pass an ordinance to prevent misrepresentation and libelous publications, and conspiracies against the peace of the city; and referring to the reports that Dr. Foster had set afloat, said he had never made any proposals to Foster to come back to the church. Foster proposed to come back; came to Mayor's house and wanted a private interview; had some conversation with Foster in the Hall, in presence of several gentlemen, on the 7th inst.; offered to meet him and have an interview in presence of friends, three or four to be selected by each party,—which Foster agreed to; and went to bring his friends for the interview, and the next notice he had of him was the following letter:

June 7th 1844.

NAUVOO NEIGHBOR EXTRA.

Monday Morning, June 17, 1844.

Mayor said he wished it distinctly understood that he knew nothing about Dimick Huntington going to see Foster. Woodworth said he sent Dimick Huntington to Foster, and Joseph knew nothing about it.

Counsellor H. Smith said Dimick Huntington came to him on the 7th inst. and said he had had an interview with Dr. Foster, and thought he was about ready to come back, and a word from him to Joseph would bring it about.

Mayor said, the conduct of such men, and such papers are calculated to destroy the peace of the city; and it is not safe that such things should exist, on account of the mob spirit which they tend to produce; he had made the statements he had, and called the witnesses to prepare the council to act in the case.

Emmons was blackguarded out of Philadelphia, and dubbed with the title of judge (as he had understood from citizens of Philadelphia) was poor, and Mayor helped him to cloth for a coat before he went away last fall, and he labored all winter to get the post office from Mr. Rigdon, (as informed.)

Mayor referred to a writing from Dr. Goforth, showing that the laws presented the communication from the "Female Relief Society" in the Nauvoo Neighbor, to Dr. Goforth, as the bone of contention, and said, if God ever spoke by any man, it will not be five years before this city is in ashes and we in our graves, unless we go to Oregon, California, or some other place, if the city does not put down every thing which tends to mobocracy, and put down their murderers, bogus makers and scoundrels; all the sorrow he ever had in his family has arisen through the influence of Wm. Law.

C. H. Smith spoke in relation to the Laws, Fosters, Higbees, Editor of the Signal, &c., and of the importance of suppressing that spirit which has driven us from Missouri &c., that he would go in for an effective ordinance.

Mayor said, at the time Gov. Cadin was pursuing him with his writs, Wm. Law came to his house with a band of Missourians for the purpose of betraying him. Came to his gate, and was prevented by Daniel Cairns, who was set to watch; Law came within his gate, and called mayor, and the mayor reproved Law for coming at that time of night, with a company of strangers.

Daniel Cairns, sworn, said that about 10 o'clock at night, a boat came up the river with about a dozen men. Wm. Law came to the gate with them, witness on guard. Stopped them. Law called Joseph to the door, and said you know better than to come here at this hour of the night, and Law retired—next morning Law wrote a letter to apologize, which witness heard read—which was written apparently to screen himself from the censure of a conspiracy and the letter betrayed a company on the face of it.

Adjourned at half past 6, P. M., till Monday 10th at 10 o'clock A. M. Adjourned session June 10th, 10 o'clock, A. M. Alderman Harris Presiding.

Mayor, referred to Dr. Foster—and again read his letter of the 7th inst., (as before quoted.) Cyrus Hills, a stranger sworn; said one day last week, believed it Wednesday, a gentleman, whom witness did not know, came into the sitting room of the "Nauvoo Mansion" and requested the Hon. Mayor to step aside—he wanted to speak with him, Mayor stepped through the door into the entry, by the foot of the stairs, and the Gen. (Mayor) asked him what he wished? Foster (as witness learned since the Gen's name) said he wanted some conversation on some business witness did not understand at the time, the

for such conduct and he had promised to do better, and told witness to reprove Foster if he saw any thing out of the way. That evening Foster refused to join the company, and walked through the town till about 8 o'clock when he came in and interrupted Pres. Smith, who was expounding some passages of scriptures, and changed the conversation. Soon after the company was invited to Mr. Brown's at the next door, whither they all repaired, while at Mr. Browns conversation going on, and the room much crowded, Dr. Foster and one of the ladies he had paid so much attention to before took their seats in one corner of the room, witness heard her state to Dr. Foster that she supposed she had been enciente for some time back, but had been disappointed, and supposed it was on account of her weakness, and wanted Foster to prescribe something for her, Foster said he could do it for her, and dropped his hand to her feet, and began to raise it, she gave him a slight push and threw herself close to the wall.

He laid his hand on her knee, and whispered so low that witness could not hear, next morning witness went in and found Foster and others were at breakfast, and related what he had seen, Foster denied it, Pres. Smith told him not to deny it for he saw it himself and was ashamed of it. Foster confessed it was true, and promised to reform.

Peter Haws sworn—Said that he came to Nauvoo before the Laws and brought considerable property; it was a short time after the church had been driven out of Missouri and had arrived in this place. The families having been robbed of all in Missouri were in a starving condition. By the council of the Presidency, witness converted his funds to feeding the poor, bringing in meat and flour &c. and while thus engaged drew upon the Laws, who were at that time engaged in merchandise to the amount of some six hundred dollars, which, on account of expenditure for the poor, he was not able to pay, to within some 70 or 80 dollars—which they pressed him for as soon as they wanted it—although he offered them good property at considerable less than the market value, as witness was obliged to leave the city on church business for a little season. Wm. Law threatened and intimidated witness' family during his absence for the pay.

Dr. Foster made a public dinner on the 4th of July. Witness was obliged to be absent and deposited meat, flour, &c., with Wm. Law, to give to the poor at that dinner, and Law handed it out as his own private property—witness carried a load of wheat to Law's mill to be ground—Law would not grind it only to give a certain quantity of flour in return by weight. Law used up the flour, promising from time to time he would refund it. As witness was about to start on a mission to the south, with he had forgot to mention concerning a Mr. Smith who came from England and soon after died—the children had no one to protect them; there was one girl 16 or 17 years old and a younger sister—witness took these girls into his family out of pity. Wilson Law, then Major General of the Nauvoo Legion, was familiar with the eldest daughter—Witness cautioned the girl—Wilson was soon there again and went out in the evening with the girl, who when charged by the witness's wife confessed that Wilson Law had seduced her. Witness told her he could not keep her—the girl wept, made much ado, and many promises—witness told her if she would do right, she might stay, but she did not keep her promise—Wilson came again and she went out with him—witness required her to leave his house.

Mayor said certain women came to complain to his wife—that they had caught Wilson Law with the girl on the floor at Mr. Hawes in the night.

Counsellor C. H. Smith proceeded to shew the falsehood of Austin Cowles in the "Expositor," in relation to the revelation referred to, that it was in reference to former days, and not the present time as related by Cowles. Mayor said he had never preached the revelation in private, as he had in public—had not taught it to the anointed in the church in private, which statement many present confirmed, that on enquiring concerning the passage in the resurrection concerning "they neither marry nor are given in marriage, &c.," he received for answer, men in this life must marry in view of eternity, otherwise they must remain as angels, or be single in heaven, which was the amount of the revelation referred to, and the Mayor spoke at considerable length in explanation of this principle and was willing for one to subscribe his name, to declare the "Expositor" and whole establishment a nuisance.

2 o'clock p. m.
The clerk of the Council bore testimony of the good character and high standing of Mr. Smith and his family, whose daughter was seduced by Wilson Law, as stated by the last witness before the morning Council—that Mrs. Smith died near the mouth of the Mississippi, and the father and eldest daughter died soon after their arrival in this place and that the seduction of such a youthful, fatherless, and innocent creature by such a man in high standing as the Major General of the Nauvoo Legion, was one of the darkest, damndest and foulest deeds on record.

Counsellor Hyrum Smith concurred in the remarks made by the clerk concerning the excellent character of Mr. Smith and his family.

Mayor said the constitution did not authorize the press to publish libels and proposed that the Council make some provision for putting down the "Nauvoo Expositor."

Counsellor Hyrum Smith called for a prospectus of the "Expositor."

Counsellor Phelps read article 8, section 1, Constitution of Illinois.

Mayor called for the charter.

The clerk read the prospectus of the "Nauvoo Expositor."

Mayor read the statements of Francis M. Higbee from the "Expositor" and asked, "is it not treasonable against all chartered rights and privileges, and against the peace and happiness of the city?"

Counsellor H. Smith was in favor of declaring the "Expositor" a nuisance.

Counsellor Taylor—said no city on earth would bear such slander, and be to prosecute, and read a libel from the "Expositor" concerning the imprisonment of Jeremiah Smith.

Counsellor H. Smith spoke of the Warsaw Signal and disapproved its libelous course.

Mayor remarked he was sorry to have one dissenting voice in declaring the "Expositor" a nuisance.

Counsellor Warrington did not mean to be understood to go against the proposition; but would not be in haste in declaring it a nuisance.

Counsellor H. Smith referred to the mortgages and property of the proprietors of the "Expositor" and thought there would be little chance of collecting damages for libels.

Aldermen E. Smith considered there was but one course to pursue that the proprietors were out of the reach of the law; that our course was to put an end to the thing at once; believed by what he had heard that if the city did not do it, others would.

Counsellor Hunter believed it to be a nuisance; referred to the opinion of Judge Pope on habeas corpus and spoke in favor of the charter &c.; asked Francis M. Higbee before the grand jury, if he was not the man he saw at Joseph's house making professions of friendship; Higbee said he was not; [Hundreds know this statement to be false; he also asked R. D. Foster if he did not state before hundreds of people that he believed Joseph to be a prophet; 'no' said Foster. They were under oath when they said it. [Many hundreds of people are witness to this perjury.]

Alderman Spencer accorded with the views expressed, that the "Nauvoo Expositor" is a nuisance, did not consider it wise to give them time to trumpet a thousand lies, their property could not pay for it, if we pass only a fine or imprisonment, have we any confidence that they will desist? none at all! we have found these men covenant breakers with God! with their wives! &c., have we any hope of their doing better? their characters have gone before them, shall they be suffered to go on, and bring a mob upon us; and murder our women and children, and burn our beautiful city? No! I had rather my blood would be spilled at once, and would like to have the press removed as soon as the ordinance would allow—and wish the matter might be put into the hands of the mayor, and every body stand by him, in the execution of his duties—and hush every murmur.

Counsellor Levi Richards, said he had felt deeply on this subject, and concurred fully in the view General Smith had expressed of it this day, thought it unnecessary to repeat what the council perfectly understood; considered private interest as nothing in comparison with the public good;—every time a line was formed in Far West he was there, for what? to defend it against just such scoundrels, and influence as the Nauvoo Expositor and its supporters; were directly calculated to bring against us again.—Considered the doings of the council this day of immense moment, not to this city alone, but to the whole world,—would go in to put a stop to the thing at once, let it be thrown out of this city, and the responsibility of countenancing such a press, be taken off our shoulders, and fall on the state, if corrupt enough to sustain it.

Counsellor Phineas Richards said that he had not forgotten the transactions at Hays mills, and that he rec-correct synopsis of the proceedings of the City Council of the City of Nauvoo, on the 8th and 10th days of June, 1844, in relation to the Nauvoo Expositor and proprietors, as taken from the minutes of said council.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and the corporation seal, at Nauvoo, this 17th day of June, 1844.

Mr. Editor:—In your last week's paper I proposed giving your readers an account of the proceedings of the City Council, but time forbids any thing more than a brief SYNOPSIS of the PROCEEDINGS of the MUNICIPALITY of the City of Nauvoo, relative to the destruction of the press and fixtures of the "Nauvoo Expositor."

City Council, Regular Session.
June 8th, 1844.

In connection with other business, as stated in last week's paper, the Mayor remarked that he believed it generally the case, that when a man goes to law, he has an unjust cause and wants to go before some one who wants business, and that he had very few cases on his docket, and referring to counsellor Emmons, editor of the Nauvoo Expositor, suggested the propriety of first purging the City Council; and referring to the character of the paper and proprietors, called up Theodore Turley, a mechanic, who being sworn, said that the Laws, (Wm. and Wilson,) had brought Bogus Dies to him to fix;

Councillor Hyrum Smith, enquired what good Foster, and his brother, and the Higbees, and Laws, had ever done; while his brother Joseph was under arrest, from the Missouri persecution, the Laws, and Foster, would have been rode on a rail, if he had not stepped forward to prevent it, on account of their oppressing the poor.

Mayor said, while he was under arrest by writ from Gov. Carlin, Wm. Law, pursued him for $40.00 he was owing Law, and it took the last expense money he had to pay it.

Councillor H. Smith, referred to J. H. Jackson's coming to this city, &c. Mayor said, Wm. Law, had offered Jackson, $500.00 to kill him.

Councillor H. Smith, continued, Jackson, told him, he (Jackson,) meant to have his daughter; and threatened him if he made any resistance, Jackson, related to him a dream; that Joseph and Hyrum were opposed to him, but that he would execute his purposes; that Jackson, had laid a plan with four or five persons to kidnap his daughter, and threatened to shoot any one that should come near, after he had got her in the skiff; That Jackson, was engaged in trying to make Bogus, which was his principle business,—referred to the revelation, read to the High Council of the Church, which has caused so much talk about a multiplicity of wives; that said Revelation was in answer to a question concerning things which transpired in former days, and had no reference to the present time. That when sick, Wm. Law, confessed to him that he had been "guilty of adultery," and "was not fit to live," and had "sinned against his own soul," &c. and enquired, who was Judge Emmons? When he came here he had scarce two shirts to his back, but he had been dandied by the authorities of the city, &c. and was now editor of the "Nauvoo Expositor," to come back to the church. Foster proposed to come back; came to Mayor's house and wanted a private interview; had some conversation with Foster in the Hall, in presence of several gentlemen, on the 7th inst.; offered to meet him and have an interview in presence of friends, three or four to be selected by each party,—which Foster agreed to; and went to bring his friends for the interview, and the next notice he had of him was the following letter:

June 7th 1844

To Gen J. Smith,

Sir, I have consulted my friends in relation to your proposals of settlements, and they as well as myself are of the opinion that your conduct and that of your unworthy, unprincipled, clan is so base that it would be morally wrong & detract from the dignity of Gentlemen to hold any conference with you, the repeated insults and abuses I as well as my friends have suffered from your unlawful course towards us demands honorable resentment we are resolved to make this our motto, nothing on our part has been done to provoke your anger but have done all things as become men, you have trampled upon every thing we hold dear and sacred, you have set all law at defiance and profaned the name of the most high to carry out your damnable purposes—and I have nothing more to fear from you than you have already threatened, & I as well as my friends will stay here & maintain and magnify the law as long as we stay—and we are resolved never to leave until we sell or exchange our property that we have here, the proposals made by your agent Demie Huntington as well as the threats you sent to intimidate me, I disdain and despise as I do their unhallowed author, the right of my family and my friends, demand at my hand a refusal of all your offers, we are united in virtue and truth, and we set hell at defiance and all her agents adieu.

R. D. FOSTER,

Gen. J. Smith

Mayor continued:—And when Foster left his house, he went to a shoe shop on the hill and reported, that "Joseph said to him if he would come back he would give him Law's place in the church, and a hat full of specie."

Lucian Woodworth, sworn, said that the conversation as stated by the Mayor was correct, was at the Mansion June 7th when Dr. Foster rode up and enquired if Gen. Smith was at home,—Dr. Foster went into the house—witness followed, Dr. Foster was there, the Gen. and others looking at some specimens of penmanship, something was said respecting a conversation at that time, between the Gen. and Dr.—Gen. Smith observed to Foster, if he had a conversation he would want others present. The Dr. said he would have a word with him by himself; and went into the Hall, Witness went to the door, that he might see and hear what was passing. They still continued to talk on the subject of a conversation that they might have afterwards with others present, whom Mr. Smith might choose and Foster might choose, Foster left, and went for them that he said he wanted present, and would return soon with them—thinks he heard all the conversation, heard nothing about Gen. Smith's making any offers to Foster to settle, was present all the time. Dimick Huntington said he had seen Foster and talked with him.

Cyrus Hills, a stranger sworn; said one day last week, believed it Wednesday, a gentleman, whom witness did not know, came into the sitting room of the "Nauvoo Mansion" and requested the Hon. Mayor to step aside—he wanted to speak with him, Mayor stepped through the door into the entry, by the foot of the stairs, and the Gen. (Mayor) asked him what he wished? Foster, (as witness learned since the Gents. name,) said he wanted some conversation on some business witness did not understand at the time, the Gen. refused to go any farther, and said he would have no conversation in private, what should be said should be in public; and told Foster if he would choose three or four men, he would meet him with the same number of men, (among whom was his bro. Hyrum.) And they would have a cool and calm investigation of the subject, and by his making a proper satisfaction, things should be honorably adjusted, Witness judged from the manner in which Foster expressed himself that he agreed to the Mayors proposals, and would meet him, the same day, in presence of friends, heard no proposals made by mayor to Foster, for settlement, heard nothing about any offers of dollars, or money, or any other offer except those mentioned before, nothing said about Wm. Law, was within hearing of the parties at the time conversation was going on.

O. P. Rockwell, sworn. Some day last week, said week Dr. Foster rode up to the Nauvoo Mansion and go in, witness went in and found the Mayor and Dr. Foster in conversation. Gen. Smith was naming the men he would have present, among whom was Hyrum Smith, Wm. Marks, Lucian Woodworth, and Peter Hawes, and Dr. Foster had leave to call an equal number of his friends, as witness understood, for the purpose of having an interview on some matters in conversation.

The Dr's. Bro. was proposed. Gen. said he had no objections, wanted him present, Dr. Foster started, saying he would be back shortly. Before Dr. F. left, the men whom Gen. Smith had named to be present, at the conversation were sent for,—cross examined witness went into the house as Mayor and Dr. Foster were coming out of the Bar Room into the Hall; nothing said by the Mayor to Dr. Foster about his coming back,—made no offer to Foster about a settlement.

Mayor said the first thing that occurred when he stepped into the Hall with Foster was that he wanted to assassinate him, he saw something shining below his vest; Mayor put his finger on it and said, what is that? Foster replied it is my pistol, and immediately took out the pistol, and showed it openly, and wanted the Mayor to go with him alone. May or said he would not go alone, Mayor never saw the pistol before; had a hook on its side, to hang on its waist-coat.

Andrew L. Lamaroux, sworn. said that in 1839 or 40 while President Joseph Smith, Elder Rigidon, Judge Higby, O. P. Rockwell and Dr R. D. Foster, while on their way to Washington, called at witness house in Dayton, Ohio, that the evening was spent very agreeably except some dissatisfaction on the part of certain females with regard to the conduct of Dr. Foster,—on their return from Washington witness informed President Smith of Fosters conduct, Pres. Smith said he had frequently reproved Foster to step aside. A stranger sworn; said one day last week, believed it Wednesday, a gentleman, whom witness did not know, came into the sitting room of the "Nauvoo Mansion" and requested the Hon. Mayor to step aside—he wanted to speak with him, Mayor stepped through the door into the entry, by the foot of the stairs, and the Gen. (Mayor) asked him what he wished? Foster, (as witness learned since the Gents. name,) said he wanted some conversation on some business witness did not understand at the time, the Gen. refused to go any farther, and said he would have no conversation in private, what should be said should be in public; and told Foster if he would choose three or four men, he would meet him with the same number of men, (among whom was his bro. Hyrum.) And they would have a cool and calm investigation of the subject, and by his making a proper satisfaction, things should be honorably adjusted, Witness judged from the manner in which Foster expressed himself that he agreed to the Mayors proposals, and would meet him, the same day, in presence of friends, heard no proposals made by mayor to Foster, for settlement, heard nothing about any offers of dollars, or money, or any other offer except those mentioned before, nothing said about Wm. Law, was within hearing of the parties at the time conversation was going on.

Councillor H. Smith said he recollected the time and circumstance.

Hawes said when he returned, found his family must have starved if they had not borrowed money to get food somewhere else—could not get it of Law. And Law was preaching punctuality, punctuality, PUNCTUALITY, as the whole drift of his discourses to the saints—and abusing them himself all the time, and grinding the poor.

Mayor said if he had a city council who felt as he did, the establishment (referring to the Nauvoo Expositor) would be a nuisance before night—and he then read an editorial from the Nauvoo Expositor. He then asked who ever said a word against Judge Emmons until he has attacked this council—or even against Joseph H. Jackson or the Laws, until they came out against the city? Here is a paper (Nauvoo Expositor) that is exciting our enemies abroad. Joseph H. Jackson has been proved a murderer before this council and declared the paper a nuisance, a greater nuisance than a dead carcass—they make a criminality, for a man to have a wife on the earth, while he has one in heaven, according to the keys of the holy Priesthood—and he then read a statement of William Law's from the Expositor, where the truth of God was transformed into a lie concerning this thing—He then read several statements of Austin Cowles in the Expositor concerning a private interview, and said he never had any private conversation with Austin Cowles on these subjects—that he preached on the stand from the bible, shewing the order in ancient days, having nothing to do with the present times. What the opposition party want, is to rouse a mob on us and take the spoil from us, as they did in Missouri—he said it was as much as he could do, to keep his clerk, Thompson, from publishing the proceedings of the Law's and causing the people to rise up against them—said he would rather die to-morrow and have the thing smashed, than live and have it go on, for it was exciting the spirit of mobocracy among the people and bringing death and destruction upon us.

Peter Hawes, recalled a circumstance, which

1. Constitution of Illinois.

Mayor called for the charter.

The clerk read the prospectus of the "Nauvoo Expositor."

Mayor read the statements of Francis M. Higbee from the "Expositor" and asked, "is it not treasonable against all chartered rights and privileges, and against the peace and happiness of the city?"

Councillor H. Smith was in favor of declaring the "Expositor" a nuisance.

Councillor Taylor—said no city on earth would bear such slander, and he would not bear it, and was decidedly in favor of active measures.

Mayor made a statement of what Wm. Law said before the City Council under oath, that he was a friend to the Mayor &c. &c. and asked if there were any present who recollected his statement when scores responded, yes!

Councillor Hunter "was one of the grand jury," said Wm. Law stated before the grand jury that he did not say to the Council that he was Joseph's friend.

Councillor Taylor continued—Wilson Law was president of this Council during the passage of many ordinances, and referred to the Records; Wm. Law and Emmons were members of the Council; and Emmons has never objected to any ordinance while in the Council; but has been more like a cypher, and is now become Editor of a libellous paper, and is trying to destroy our charter and ordinances; he then read from the constitution of the United States on the freedom of the press, and said, "we are willing they should publish the truth;" but it is unlawful to publish libels; the "Expositor" is a nuisance and stinks in the nose of every honest man.

Mayor read from Illinois constitution, Article 8. Section 2. touching the responsibility of the press for its constitutional liberty.

Councillor Stiles said a nuisance was any thing that disturbs the peace of a community and read Blackstone on private wrongs, Vol. 2, page 4, and "the whole community has to rest under the stigma of these falsehoods; referring to the 'Expositor' and if we can prevent the issuing of any more slanderous communications, he would go in for it; it is right for this community to show a proper resentment, and he would go in for suppressing all further communications of the kind.

Councillor H. Smith believed the best way was to smash the press and 'pi' the type.

Councillor Johnson concurred with the councillors who had spoken.

Alderman Bennett referred to the statement of the "Expositor" concerning the Municipal Court in the case of Jeremiah Smith as a libel, and considered the paper a public nuisance.

Councillor Warrington considered his a peculiar situation, as he did not belong to any church or any party; though it might be considered rather harshly for the council to declare the paper a nuisance, and proposed giving a few days' limitation and assessing a fine of $3,000 for every libel and if they would not cease publishing libels to declare it a nuisance, and said the statutes made provisions for a fine of $500.

Mayor replied that they threatened to shoot him when at Carthage and the women and others dare not go to Carthage calculated to bring us again. Considered the doings of the council this day of immense moment, not to this city alone, but to the whole world,—would go in to put a stop to the thing at once, let it be thrown out of this city, and the responsibility of countenancing such a press, be taken off our shoulders, and fall on the state, if corrupt enough to sustain it.

Councillor Phineas Richards said that he had not forgotten the transactions at Hauns mills, and that he recollected that his son George Spencer, then lay in the well referred to, on the day previous, without a winding-sheet, shroud, or coffin, he said he could not sit still when he saw the same spirit raging in this place; he considered the publication of the Expositor as much murderous at heart as David was before the death of Uriah, was for making a short work of it, was prepared to take his stand by the Mayor and whatever he proposes, would stand by him to the last. The quicker it is stopt the better.

Councillor Phelps had investigated the constitution, charter, and laws; the power to declare that office a nuisance is granted to us, in the Springfield charter, and a resolution declaring it a nuisance is all that is required.

John Birney sworn—said Francis M. Higbee, and Wm. Law, declared they had commenced their operations and would carry them out, law or no law.

Stephen Markham, sworn, said that Francis M. Higbee said the interest of this city is done, the moment a hand is laid on their press.

Councillor Phelps continued, and referred to Wilson Law in destroying the character of a child, an orphan child, who had the charge of another child.

Warren Smith sworn, said, F. M. Higbee came to him, and proposed to have him go as a partner in making bogus money. Higbee said he would not work for a living; that witness might go in with him, if he would advance fifty dollars and shew him (witness) a half a dollar he said was made in his dies.

Councillor Phelps continued and said, he felt deeper this day than ever he felt before, and wanted to know, by yes; if there was any present, who wanted to avenge the blood of that innocent female, who had been seduced by the then Major General of the Nauvoo Legion, Wilson Law; when yes! resounded from every quarter of the house; he then referred to the text put, at Boston, and asked if any body's rights were taken away with that transaction, and are we offering, or have we offered to take away the rights of any one, these two days? (No!! resounded from every quarter.) He then referred also to Law's grinding the poor during the scarcity of grain, while the poor had nothing but themselves to grind; and spoke at great length in support of active measures to put down iniquity, and suppress the spirit of mobocracy.

Alderman Harris spoke from the chair, and expressed his feelings that the press out to be demolished.

The following resolution was then read and passed unanimously, with the exception of Councillor Warrington:

Resolved by the City Council of the City of Nauvoo, that the printing office from whence issues the "Nauvoo Expositor" is a public nuisance, and also all of said Nauvoo Expositors, which may be, or exist in said establishment, and the Mayor is instructed to cause said printing establishment and papers to be removed without delay, in such manner as he shall direct. Proclamation.

Mayor's Office, Nauvoo, June 16, 1844.

As there are a number of statements in circulation which have for their object, the injury of the "Latter day Saints," all of which are false and prompted by blackhearted villains: I therefore deem it my duty to disabuse the public mind in regard to them, and to give a plain statement of facts which have taken place in the city within a few days past, and which has brought upon us the displeasure of the unprincipled and the unenlightened, and seems to afford an opportunity to our enemies, to unite and arouse themselves to mob; and already they have commenced their hellish operations by driving a few defenceless Mormons from their houses and homes in the vicinity of Warsaw and Carthage.

A short time since a press was started in this city which had for its object the destruction of the institutions of the city, both civil and religious; its proprietors are a set of unprincipled scoundrels who attempted in every possible way to defame the character of the most virtuous of our community, and change our peaceful and prosperous city into a place as evil and polluted as their own black hearts. To rid the city of a paper so filthy and pestilential is, I become the duty of every good citizen, who loves good order and morality; a command, was made before the City Council, and after a full and impartial investigation it was voted—without one dissenting voice, a public NUISANCE, and to be immediately destroyed; the peace and happiness of the place demanded it, the virtue of our wives and daughters demanded, and our consciences demanded it at our hands as conservators of the public peace. That we acted right in this matter we have the assurance of one of the ablest expounders of the constitution of the State of Illinois, and the constitution of the State of Illinois, and the own chartered rights. If then our charter gives us the power to decide what shall be a nuisance and cause it to be removed, where is the offence? What law is violated? If then no law has been violated, why this ridiculous excitement and bandying with lawless ruffians to destroy the happiness of a people whose religious motto is "peace and good will toward all men!"

Our city is infested with a set of blacklegs, counterfeiters and debauchees, and that the proprietors of this press were of that class, the minutes of the Municipal Court fully testify, and in ridiculing them, we are abused by not only villainous demagogues, but by some who from their station and influence in society, ought rather to raise than depress the standard of human excellence. We have no disturbance or excitement among us, save what is made by the thousand and one idle rumors afloat in the country. Every one is protected in his person and property, and but few cities of a population of twenty thousand people, in the United States, have less of dissipation or vice of any kind, than the city of Nauvoo.

Of the correctness of our conduct in this affair, we appeal to every high court in the state, and to its ordeal we are willing to appear at any time that His Excellency, Governor Ford shall please to call us before it. I therefore, in behalf of the Municipal Court of Nauvoo, warn the lawless, not to be precipitate in any interference in our affairs, for as sure as there is a God in Israel, we shall ride triumphant over all oppression.

FOR THE NEIGHBOR.

Lines suggested on seeing an ancient fortification in Wayne County, N. Y.
What thoughts do in my mind abound,
Whilst I behold these aged towers,
Upon this ancient battle ground,
Which has survived time's ravages.
Tho' age on age has roll'd its space,
Since this fort here may date its birth;
The eye can still distinctly trace—
Its gateway, and its banks of earth.
Oh! could these banks but speak and tell,
What scenes to sight they might unfold;
Things that they would remember well,
Which did transpire in days of old.
The men are gone, their works remain,
Much labor has been spent to know—
What race they were, and how they came,
On this part of the earth below.
The ancient prophecies will view,
To see what light they will afford;
Which speak in strains forever new,
And tell the wonders of the Lord.
Said Jacob to Joseph his son;
Thy branches shall run o'er the wall,
A fruitful bough thou shalt become,
A fruitful bough e'en by a well.
Isaiah saw in vision—clear,
A nation should to dust be brought;
Forts should be raised—we find them here,
Upon the land our fathers sought—
When o'er the sea they made their way,
Drove from their tents the sons of Sem;
And then recrossed to Africa—
For Canaan sons to toil for them.
Then Shem's descendants, Joseph's seed,
The ancient owners of our soil;
Did cross the sea in very deed,
And rear these works with pain and toil.

Curious Relics.—Among the relics of the Historical Society at New Haven, Conn., there is a cane manufactured from the root of the tree on which the Salem witches were hung; the old oak chest formerly in the possession of Aaron Burr; the arm chair of Roger Williams, the camp stool of the Rev. Col. Elisha Williams, once President of the Yale College; Gen. Putnam's old Tavern sign, with a portrait of Gen. Wolfe, painted thereon, and a part of the keel of Capt. Cook's old ship "Endeavor," that passed round the world, and finally ended her days at Newport R. I.; the basket and glass found with Captain Nathan Hale, who was hung by the British, on Long Island, as a spy, during the Revolution; as a celebration for the death of Andrew and last, but not least, the order book of a British Adjutant, containing the "orders of the British army on the day of the memorable battle of Blenheim Hill, on the 11th of July, 1704, which was signed and stamped for eternal endurance with a single drop of human blood!

From the (New York) Prophet.

Mr. Editor, Sir—I perceive that New York has hoisted her Ensign, and cast her banner on the breeze, as an Advocate for equal rights and a supporter of our new candidate for the Presidency, the renowned and mysterious Prophet of the West, General Joseph Smith. I have lately perused a work published in your city entitled the Travels and adventures of Monsieur Violet, which gives a general view of the strength, resources, powers and purposes of our Modern Hero and his Mormon followers, from which it would seem that the entire Indian tribes, and their vast territories, were already under his jurisdiction in a great measure, and ready to co-operate with him, and that some of our western states, together with Texas and Mexico were in a fair way to strike hands politically at least with the Prophet. This together with the astounding fact of his coming out for the presidency of this republic, and his singular and extraordinary political views as published of late, in which with a master spirit he gives the outlines of a bold and somewhat original plan for the emancipation of the entire race of man, and for the prevalence of universal freedom and brotherhood. These things I say, bursting at once upon the public mind like peaks of thunder, or like the trumpet of mount Sinai, has startled us from our dreaming slumbers, and we begin to enquire what all these things mean. We have heretofore been accustomed to look upon the Prophet and his followers with a sneer of contempt, as if their system and movements were beneath our notice, but this feeling is all at once beginning to give place to a strange mixture of wonder, admiration, fear, jealousy and alarm.

Who is the extraordinary personage, who is represented in such a variety of characters, from grave to gay, from lively to severe?

We have been told that he is an ignorant fool and an unlearned blockhead, and that he is wiser than Solon and more learned than Socrates; that he is a greater legislator than Moses, a deeper politician than now exists in our realm, while at the same time he is despised for his madness, envied for his greatness, feared for his power, and admired for his success.

We begin to suspect that the press and prophet have been deceiving, and playing the fool with us—that we have been duped, in regard to the real character of this man, and of his principles and purposes. We are half inclined to think that he is some knight in disguise, some Wallace wrapped up in a yankee skin or one of the old prophets newly born, for the purpose of playing the Sampson with us all, and that stooping to the lowest condition of life, he intends to soar on high, and to alight on the highest pinnacle of human greatness, where, in the decline of life he can look down upon a world, regenerated; and reflect with joy that his own arm, nerved by power from the Gods, had struck the first blow, won the day, laid the foundation, and placed the top-stone in the new and perfect Temple of freedom.

Who is this man? It is time we made his acquaintance, and informed ourselves of his real character and principles.

Come Mr. Prophet, the public have a right to claim at your hands a full development of this singular man, and his movements; or will he be induced to come down east and pay a visit to our Atlantic cities; I think the Boston common would almost be too small to convene the concourse of gentlemen and ladies who would gladly make his acquaintance or even have a glimpse of his person.

Have the western wilds of America actually given birth to one who is destined to rule a world, and dictate laws to universal man? If not what means it! His own right hand would grasp a nation's helm,
His left, control the boundless Indian realm,
Renowned Republics tremble at his power,
While savage tribes revere, and saints adore.

It would really seem as if the world were never to lose their wonder and admiration of this singular and original genius, who seems possessed of some magic power, some mysterious influence, some wand whose motion sways the destiny of things, and works the wheels of nature to his will.

This influence seems alike adapted to all classes and conditions of men, from the most intelligent and refined, to the most barbarous and uncivilized. The renowned cities of our Atlantic states, the halls of Congress, and the remotest savage tribes, of our island plains and mountains have alike felt its power and been sensibly wrought upon by its irresistible influence.

The vast cities and towns of England and Scotland have been penetrated with equal success; their halls, their courts, and their temples have echoed with the name of Mormon. It has resounded amid the splendors of royalty in the court of St. James. It has penetrated itself into the feet of the throne, and claimed the attention of the Queen and Prince.

While on the other hand the low and obscure cells of the humble poor, the dark alleys, the gloomy cells, the highways, lanes and hedges have not been forgotten.

The learned circles of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and the remote glens which once echoed with the name of Wallace are now familiar with the name of our modern prophet, and have not been able to resist his influence.

The remotest crags of the North of Scotland have not been too obscure for its penetration; nor the recluses of Norway too remote and retired to feel its effects. The mountains and valleys of Wales have been agitated in turn at the same mysterious sound; while Germany, Constantinople, Egypt and Jerusalem, the distant plains of India, and the Pacific Isles have already echoed and re-echoed with the name of Jo Smith and the "Mormons."

No nation so remote, no tribe so obscure, no tongue so strange as not to be familiar with the sound. The great war chiefs of the Prairies; the wild tribes of the Rocky mountains; the noble shores of the California and Oregon, the Camanches of Upper Texas and Santafee; the Dahcotahs of Northern Iowa, and the Chipeways of Wisconsin and Lake Superior, each

Hail with joy the auspicious morn,
In which another prophet's born.

While a gleam of hope kindles in their despairing bosoms. Angels of light glance before these in their night dreams, of better times; the spirits of their fathers speak low in the gentle breeze, while some powerful and mysterious influence comes o'er them, causing their bosoms to heave with new emotions, and their dark eyes to sparkle with animated joy, as if the Great Spirit had spoken from above and caused them to hope for redemption.

Nor is this all the same mysterious influence which seems working in so wide and varied a field, and combining ten thousand discordant elements, all suddenly put in motion from the most distant and opposite points, and all urging forward a common centre of focus, is also working in the complicated machineries of American politics; not only holding the balance of power, and thus influencing the elections; but actually grasping for the presidential chair of this republic. What means all this! What master spirit it has put all these things in motion in so unusual and sudden a manner, and while mankind have been dreaming! And what is to be the final result of so strong a movement!

Who is this modern Knight with his magic lamp?

It is the Green Mountain Boy of Old Vermont—the ignorant farmer of western New York, the unlettered fool of sectarian tales; the scourge and terror of out-lawed Missouri, the favorite Military Chief-tain of Illinois, the Chief Magistrate of the Prairie city of the west, the prophet of a numerous and increasing people, and last of all a candidate for the Presidency of a great and powerful nation.

He is the favorite of thousands, the beloved of tens of thousands, the admired of millions, the hate of sectaries, the scorn of fools, the disgrace of drunkards, the fear of priests, the hiss of clowns, the dread of politicians, the revered of savages; the stumbling block of nations, and the wonder of the world; and to cap the climax, he is JO SMITH THE MORMON PROPHET, an American youth in the full bloom of early manhood, and apparently in the very infancy of his career, just budding into public life, and just launching upon the foaming billows of the deep and boundless ocean of human enterprise.

If then his obscure beginning and progress thus far have been marked by events so passing strange what we ask may be the consummation?

Is not the political, moral and religious destiny of our nation—of our continent—nay, of the world itself suspended on the answer!!!

Are we not evidently living in the very dawn of a new and important era, which may yet wend up the affairs of Old Nimrod's Babel, of Nebuchadnezzar's complicated image, and cause old confused and discordant elements and things to pass away, and all things to become new.

Editor, in behalf of myself and the public, I claim right on this all absorbing subject, and hope you will spare no pains to give us from time to time, every thing of interest in relation to the prophet and his principles and movements. In so doing your paper will be highly useful and interesting. Go ahead then, with your New-York PROPHET, and give us the truth in relation to the past, the present, and the future, for this is the calling of a Prophet. Perhaps you may hear from me often. Wishing you much success, I take the liberty to subscribe myself yours, &c.

Warning to Mothers.—We copy from the Banner Wing the following eloquent suggestions, which we hope will not be disregarded:—

"Cold weather is approaching, and the sitting room fire has also become necessary in the morning and evening. It is time to think of the appropriate clothing for children and infants. Let the mother see to it, that the infant is not exposed to the pains and dangers of disease, by following fashions set by those whose vanity outruns their judgement, or whose ignorance makes sacrifice of their offspring. Let the round, plump arms and delicate breasts of their children, be well covered with warm clothing. Let the little ones, who can trot about the house, be clad in woolen garments, to shield them from the cold and as a protection against fire. We have been connected with the public press more or less, for nine years, and during that time not a year has passed but we have recorded more or less deaths of children by their clothes taking fire. What a warning to mothers who love their children—what a sacrifice of life is annually made to neglect in clothing children!

Steaming it.—"Talk about your Northern steamboats," said a Mississippi fireman, the other day: "you haint had a biler burst for five years. Don't require no spunk to navigate them waters—any fool can do it. But it takes a man, stranger, to ride one of these ere alligator boat's head on to a sawyer, high pressure, and the valve soddered down, and six hundred passengers aboard."

Curiosities.—An antiquarian correspondent of the Philadelphia "Home Journal" has furnished for that paper an interesting chapter of curiosities in the shape of titles of books published in the olden times. The titles of some of the religious plays are here annexed, from which it will be seen that notwithstanding the opposition of our pious people to the modern drama, the saints of yore made great use of the Stage in teaching Christianity and converting unbelievers:—

God Hys Promise.—A Tragedie Interlude, manifestinge the chiefe promises of God unto man in all ages, from the begynnyng of the world to the Death of Jesus Christe, a Myserie. 1538.

The same year was also published—"A Tragedie or Interlude, manifestynge the chiefe promises of God unto Man in all ages, from the fall of Adam to the incarnacyon of the Lorde Jesus." 1538.

Johan. Bale wrote several moral plays in 1538; some of the titles are very curious: one is called, "A Breffe Comedy or Interlude concernynge the Temptation of our Lorde and Saver Jesus Christ, by Sathan in the Desert." A comedy, "Of Christ when he was twelve years old"—is also attributed to Bale.

In 1661, was published a tragedy called "Hell's High Court of Justice, or the Tryal of the Political Ghosts, viz., Oliver Cromwell, the king of Sweden, and Cardinal Mazarine."

Thomas Preston, L. L. D. who flourished in the reign of Elizabeth, wrote a dramatic piece in long metre, entitled—"A lamentable Tragedie, mixed full of Pleasant Mirth, containing the life of Cambyses, King of Persia, from the beginning of his kindome unto his death, his own good deed of execution, after the many wicked deeds and tyrannous murders committed by and through him, and last of all his odious death by God's justice appointed, doom on such order as followeth."

In the 10th century, a nun by the name of Roswitha, wrote plays in Lower Saxony; one is entitled "Mary Magdalen," and one of the stage directions in it is as follows:—"Here enters the Prynce of the Devylls in a phaeton, with Hell underneath the Sige!"

One of the old miracle plays was called "The Harrowing of Hell."

Appropriate Rebuke.—One of our Paris letters states, that at Lady Cowley's soiree on Wednesday night last, occurred an incident which occupies all the world at present. Among the guests was a Mr. L., who, having that noon been a friend when he addressed a meeting, said, "And they call this a party!" Why, never say anything so dull in my life! It is not worth the trouble of dressing for such an affair; and then the room are intolerably hot." Unfortunately the noble hostess was standing near, and overheard him, and immediately said, "Mr. L., there (pointing to the anti room) is a cooler room, and beyond it, the hall, one still cooler. This prompt and significant rebuke and hint was felt, understood and taken.—Times.

The following correspondence is given to the public, to show the humanity of mankind, when "clothed with a little brief authority," and the heavenly kindness of woman upon the most trying circumstances, and her never ceasing application of the mental powers, to ameliorate the condition of suffering innocence.

There is one portion of the governor's letter relative to the habeas corpus, that merits censure. To suppose that the charter did not contain the power of the writ of habeas corpus over any body, and all lands, where any ordinance existed to that effect, and the charter granted the power to make all laws that might be necessary for the benefit and convenience of said city, and not repugnant to the constitution of the State and United States, is certainly an exhibition of thought in Governor Carlin, that will cost him more REPENTANCE than his office ever yielded him pleasure.

LETTERS OF MRS. EMMA SMITH TO GOVERNOR THOMAS CARLIN, AND HIS ANSWERS.

Nauvoo, August 16, 1842.

To His Excellency, Thomas Carlin:
SIR.—It is with feelings of no ordinary cast, that I have retired after the business of the day, and evening too, to address your honor. I am at a loss how to commence; my mind is crowded with subjects too numerous to be contained in one letter. I find myself almost destitute of that confidence necessary to address a person holding the authority of your dignified and responsible office; and I would now offer, as an excuse for intruding upon your time and attention, the justice of my cause. Was my cause the interest of an individual, or of a number of individuals, then perhaps I might be justified in remaining silent. But it is not! Nor is it the pecuniary interest of a whole community alone, that prompts me again to appeal to your Excellency. But, dear sir, it is for the peace and safety of hundreds, I may safely say, of this community, who are not guilty of any offence against the laws of the country; and also the life of my husband, who has not committed any crime whatever; neither has he transgressed any of the laws, or any part of the constitution of the United States; neither has he at any time, infringed upon the rights of any man, or of any class of men, or community of any description. Need I say he is not guilty of the crime alleged against him by Governor Boggs? Indeed it does seem entirely superfluous for me, or any of his friends in this place, to testify to his innocence of that crime, when so many of the citizens of your place, and of many other places in this state, as well as in the territory; do know positively (that the statement of Governor Boggs is without the least shadow of truth; and we do know, and so do many others, that the prosecution against him, has been conducted in an illegal manner; and every act demonstrates the fact, that all the design of the prosecution, is to throw him into the power of his enemies without the least ray of hope that he would ever be allowed to obtain a fair trial, and that he would be indignantly and ferociously murdered. No person having a knowledge of the existing circumstances, has one remaining doubt; and your honor will, I believe, collect that you said to me, that you would not advise Mr. Smith, ever to trust himself in Missouri. And, dear sir, you cannot for one moment judge one unfriendly feeling toward him, if he should by your council. Then sir, why is it that he should be thus cruelly pursued? Why not give him the privilege of the laws of this state. When I reflect upon the many cruel and illegal operations of Lilburn W. Boggs, and the consequent sufferings of myself and family, and the incalculable losses and sufferings of many hundreds who survived, and the many precious lives that were lost, all the effect of unjust prejudices and misguided ambition, produced by misrepresentation and calumny; my bosom heaves with unutterable anguish. And who that is as well acquainted with the facts as the people of the city of Quincy would censure me, if I should say that my heart burned with just indignation towards our estimations, as well as the perpetrators of those horrid crimes! So how happy would I now be to pour out my full heart in gratitude to Governor Boggs, if he had rose up with the dignity and authority of the chief executive of the state, and put down every illegal usurpation and protected the peaceable citizens and supererogating emigrants from the violence of plundering out-laws, who have ever been a disgrace to the state, and always will, so long as they go unpunished. Yes, I say, my heart would be a tender and ready ally to our estimations, as well as the perpetrators of those horrid crimes! What thoughts do in my mind abound,
Behold these aged towers!

From the (New York) Prophet.

MR. EDITOR, SIR—I perceive that New York has hoisted her Ensign, and cast her banner on the breeze, as an Advocate for equal rights and a supporter of our new candidate for the Presidency, the renowned and mysterious Prophet of the West, General Joseph Smith. I have lately perused a work published in your city entitled the Travels and adventures of Monsieur Violet which gives a general view of the strength, resources, powers and purposes of our Modern Hero and his Mormon followers, from which it would seem that the entire Indian tribes, and their vast territories, were already under his jurisdiction in a great measure, and ready to co-operate with him, and that some of our western states, together with Texas and Mexico were in a fair way to strike hands politically at least with the Prophet. This together with the astounding fact of his coming out for the presidency of this republic, and his singular and extraordinary political views as published of late, in which with a master spirit he gives the outlines of a bold and somewhat original plan for the emancipation of the entire race of man, and for the prevalence of universal freedom and brotherhood. These things I say, bursting at once upon the public mind like peals of thunder, or like the trumpet of mount Sinai, has startled us from our dreaming slumbers, and we begin to enquire what all these things mean. We have heretofore been accustomed to look upon the Prophet and his followers with a sneer of contempt, as if their system and movements were beneath our notice, but this feeling is all at once beginning to give place to a strange mixture of wonder, admiration, fear, jealousy and alarm.

Who is the extraordinary personage, who is represented in such a variety of characters, 'from grave to gay, from lively to severe'?

We have been told that he is an ignorant fool and an unlearned blockhead, and that he is wiser than Solon and more learned than Socrates; that he is a greater legislator than Moses, a deeper politician than now exists in our realm, while at the same time he is despised for his madness, envied for his greatness, feared for his power, and admired for his success.

We begin to suspect that the press and prophet have been deceiving, and playing the fool with us—that we have been duped, in regard to the real character of

While on the other hand the low and obscure cells of the humble poor, the dark alleys, the gloomy cells, the highways, lanes and hedges have not been forgotten.

The learned circles of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and the remote glens which once echoed with the name of Wallace are now familiar with the name of our modern prophet, and have not been able to resist his influence.

The remotest crags of the North of Scotland have not been too obscure for its penetration; nor the recluse of Norway too remote and retired to feel its effects. The mountains and valleys of Wales have been agitated in turn at the same mysterious sound; while Germany, Constantinople, Egypt and Jerusalem, the distant plains of India, and the Pacific isles have already echoed and re-echoed with the name of 'Jo Smith' and the 'Mormons.'

No nation so remote, no tribe so obscure, no tongue so strange as not to be familiar with the sound. The great war chiefs of the Prairies; the wild tribes of the Rocky mountains, the noble shores of the California and Oregon, the Camanches of Upper Texas and Santafee; the Dahcotahs of Northern Iowa, and the Chipaways of Wisconsin and Lake Superior, each

Hail with joy the auspicious morn,

In which another prophet's born.

While a gleam of hope kindles in their despairing bosoms. Angels of light glance before these in their night dreams, of better times; the spirit's of their fathers speak low in the gentle breeze, while some powerful and mysterious influence comes o'er them, causing their bosoms to heave with new emotions, and their dark eyes to sparkle with animated joy, as if the Great Spirit had spoken from above and caused them to hope for redemption.

Nor is this all, the same mysterious influence which seems working in so wide and varied a field, and combining ten-thousand discordant elements, all suddenly put in motion from the most distant and opposite points, and all urging forward a common centre or focus, is also working in the complicated machines of American politics; not only holding the balance of power, and thus influencing the elections; but actually grasping for the presidential chair of this republic.—What means all this! What master spirit it has put all these things in motion in so unusual and sudden a manner, and while eloquent suggestions, which we hope will not be disregarded:—

"Cold weather is approaching, and the sitting room fire has also become necessary in the morning and evening. It is time to think of the appropriate clothing for children and infants. Let the mother see to it, that the infant is not exposed to the pains and dangers of disease, by following fashions set by those whose vanity outruns their judgement, or whose ignorance makes sacrifice of their offspring. Let the round, plump arms, and delicate breasts of their children, be well covered with warm clothing. Let the little ones, who can trot about the house, be clad in woolen garments, to shield them from the cold and as a protection against fire. We have been connected with the public press more or less, for nine years, and during that time not a year has passed but we have recorded more or less deaths of children by their clothes taking fire. What a warning to mothers who love their children—what a sacrifice of life is annually made to neglect in clothing children!

Steaming it.—"Talk about your Northern steamboats," said a Mississippi fireman, the other day: "you haint had a biler burst for five years. Dont require no spunk to navigate them waters—any fool can do it.—But it takes a man, stranger, to ride one of these ere alligator boat's head on to a sawyer, high pressure, and the valve soddered down, and six hundred passengers aboard."

Curiosities.—An antiquarian correspondent of the Philadelphia "Home Journal" has furnished for that paper an interesting chapter of curiosities in the shape of titles of books published in the olden times. The titles of some of the religious plays are here annexed, from which it will be seen that notwithstanding the opposition of our pious people to the modern drama, the saints of yore made great use of the Stage in teaching Christianity and converting unbelievers:—

are so intolerably hot.' Unfortunately the noble hostess was standing near, and overheard him, and immediately said,—Mr. L.—, there (pointing to the anti room) is a cooler room, and beyond it (the hall) one still cooler. This prompt and significant rebuke and hint was felt, understood and taken.—Times.

The following correspondence is given to the public, to show the humanity of mankind, when 'clothed with a little brief authority'; and the heavenly kindness of woman under the most trying circumstances; and her never ceasing application of the mental powers, to ameliorate the condition of suffering innocence.

There is one portion of the governor's letter relative to the habeas corpus, that merits censure. To suppose that the charter did not contain the power of the writ of habeas corpus over any body, and all lands, where any ordinance existed to that effect, and the charter granted the power to make all laws that might be necessary for the benefit and convenience of said city, and not repugnant to the constitution of the State and United States, is certainly an ebullition of thought in Governor Carlin, that will cost him more REPENTANCE than his office ever yielded him pleasure.

LETTERS OF MRS. EMMA SMITH TO GOVERNOR THOMAS CARLIN, AND HIS ANSWERS.

NAUVOO, August 16, 1842.

To His Excellency, Thomas Carlin:

SIR:—It is with feelings of no ordinary cast, that I have retired after the business of the day and evening too, to address your honor. I am at a loss how to commence; my mind is crowded with subjects too numerous to be contained in one letter. I find myself almost destitute of that confidence necessary to address a person holding the authority of your dignified and responsible office; and I would now offer, as an excuse for intruding upon your time and attention, the justice of my cause. Was my cause the interest of an individual, or of a number of individuals, then perhaps I might be justified in remaining silent. But it is not! Nor is it the pecuniary interest of a whole community alone, that prompts me again to appeal to your Excellency. But, dear sir, it is for the peace and safety of hundreds, I may safely say, of this community, who are not guilty of any offence against the laws of the country; and also the life of my husband; who has not committed any crime whatever; neither has he transgressed any of the laws, or any part of the constitution of the United States; neither has he at any time, infringed upon the rights of any man, or of any class of men, or community of men.

Respectfully, your most obedient,
EMMA SMITH.

dependant upon the prosecution and success of Mr. Smith's temporal business for their support. And if he is prevented from attending to the common avocations of life, who will employ those innocent and industrious poor people, and provide for their wants. But, my dear sir, when I recollect the interesting interview, I and my friends had with you when at your place, and the warm assurances you gave us of your friendship and legal protection from every encroachment upon our legal rights, as loyal citizens, as we always have been, still are, and are determined always to be a law-abiding people; and I still assure myself that when you are fully acquainted with illegal proceedings practiced against us in the suit of Governor Boggs, you will recall those writs which have been issued against Mr. Smith and Rockwell, as you must be aware that Mr. Smith was not in Missouri, and of course he could not have left there; with many other considerations which if duly considered will justify Mr. Smith in the course he has taken. And now I appeal to your excellency as I would unto a father, who is not only able but willing to shield me and mine from every unjust prosecution. I appeal to your sympathies and beg you to spare me and my helpless children; I beg you to spare my innocent children the heart rending sorrow of again seeing their father unjustly dragged to prison or to death; I appeal to your affections as a son, and beg you to spare our aged mother, the only surviving parent we have left, the unsupportable affliction of seeing her son, who she knows to be innocent of the crimes laid to his charge, thrown again into the hands of his enemies, who have so long sought for his life; in whose life and prosperity she only looks for the few remaining comforts she can enjoy. I entreat of your excellency to spare us these afflictions, and many sufferings which cannot be uttered; and secure to yourself the pleasure of doing good, and vastly increasing human happiness; secure to yourself the benediction of the aged, and the gratitude of the young, and the blessing and veneration of the rising generation.

Respectfully, your most obedient,
EMMA SMITH.

P. S. Sir, I hope you will favor me with an answer.

QUINCY, August, 24, 1842.

DEAR MADAM:—Your letter of this date has just been handed to me, which recalls to my mind your great solicitude in reference to the security and welfare of your husband; but I need not say, it recalls to my mind the subject matter of your solicitude, because that subject, except at short intervals, has not been absent from my mind. I can scarcely furnish you a justifiable apology for delaying a reply so long.

For the Neighbor.

Lines suggested on seeing an ancient fortification in Wayne County, N. Y.

What thoughts do in my mind abound,
Whilst I behold these aged trees;
Upon this ancient battle ground,
Which has survived times ravages.

Tho' age on age has roll'd apace;
Since this fort here may date its birth;
The eye can still distinctly trace—
It's gateways, and it's banks of earth.

Oh! could these banks but speak and tell—
What scenes to us they might unfold;
Things that they would remember well,
Which did transpire in days of old.

The men are gone, their works remain,
Much labor has been spent to know—
What race they were, and how they came,
On this part of the earth below.

The ancient prophecies will view,
To see what light they will afford;
Which speak in strains forever new,
And tell the wonders of the Lord.

Said Jacob to Joseph his son;
Thy branches shall run o'er the wall,
A fruitful bough thou shalt become,
A fruitful bough e'en by a well.

Isaiah saw in vision—clear,
A nation should to dust be brought;
Forts should be raised—we find them here,
Upon the land our fathers sought—

When o'er the sea they made their way,
Drove from their tents the sons of Shem;
And then recrossed to Africa—
For Canaan's sons to toil for them.

Then Shems descendants, Josephs seed,
The ancient owners of our soil;
Did cross the sea in very deed,
And rear these works with pain and toil.

Curious Relics.—Among the relics of the Historical Society at New Haven, Conn., there is a cane manufactured from the root of the tree on which the Salem witches were hung; the old oak chest formerly in the possession of Aaron Burr; the arm chair of Roger Williams, the camp stool of the Rev. Col. Elisha Williams, once President of the Yale College; Gen. Putnam's old Tavern sign, with a portrait of Gen. Wolfe, painted thereon, and a part of the keel of Capt. Cook's old ship 'Endeavor,' that passed round the world, and finally ended her days at Newport, R. I.; the basket and glass found with Captain Nathan Hale, who was hung by the British, on Long Island, as a spy, during the Revolution, as a retaliation for the death of Andre; and last, but not least, the order book of a British Adjutant, containing the 'orders' of the British army on the day of the memorable battle of Bunker Hill, one sheet of which was stained and stamped, for eternal endurance with—a single drop of human blood!

We have been told that he is an ignorant fool and an unlearned blockhead, and that he is wiser than Solon and more learned than Socrates: that he is a greater legislator than Moses, a deeper politician than now exists in our realm, while at the same time he is despised for his madness, envied for his greatness, feared for his power, and admired for his success:

We begin to suspect that the press and prophet have been deceiving, and playing the fool with us—that we have been duped, in regard to the real character of this man, and of his principles and purposes. We are half inclined to think that he is some knight in disguise, some Wallace wrapped up in a yankee skin or one of the old prophets newly born, for the purpose of playing the Sampson with us all, and that stooping to the lowest condition of life, he intends to soar on high and to alight on the highest pinnacle of human greatness, where, in the decline of life he can look down upon a world, regenerated; and reflect with joy that his own arm, nerved by power from the Gods, had struck the first blow, won the day, laid the foundation, and placed the top-stone in the new and perfect Temple of freedom.

Who is this man? it is time we made his acquaintance, and informed ourselves of his real character and principles.

Come Mr. Prophet, the public have a right to claim at your hands a full development of this singular man, and his movements; or will he be induced to come down east and pay a visit to our Atlantic cities; I think the Boston common would almost be too small to convene the concourse of gentlemen and ladies who would gladly make his acquaintance or even have a glimpse of his person.

Have the western wilds of America actually given birth to one who is destined to rule a world, and dictate laws to universal man? If not what means it!

His own right hand would grasp a nation's helm,

His left, control the boundless Indian realm,
Renowned Republics tremble at his power,
While savage tribes revere, and saints adore.

It would really seem as if the world were never to lose their wonder and admiration of this singular and original genius, who seems possessed of some magic power, some mysterious influence, some wand whose motion sways the destiny of things, and works the wheels of nature to his will.

This influence seems alike adapted to all classes and conditions of men, from the most intelligent and refined, to the most barbarous and uncivilized. The renowned cities of our Atlantic states; the halls of Congress, and the remotest savage tribes, of our inland plains and mountains have alike felt its power and been sensibly wrought upon by its irresistible influence.

The vast cities and towns of England and Scotland have been penetrated with equal success; their halls, their courts and their temples have echoed with the name of Mormon. It has resounded amid the splendors of royalty in the court of St. James. It has presented itself at the feet of the throne, and claimed the attention of the Queen and prince.— wide and varied a field, and combining ten-thousand discordant elements, all suddenly put in motion from the most distant and opposite points, and all urging forward a common centre or focus, is also working in the complicated machines of American politics; not only holding the balance of power, and thus influencing the elections; but actually grasping for the presidential chair of this republic.—What means all this! What master spirit it has put all these things in motion in so unusual and sudden a manner, and while mankind have been dreaming! And what is to be the final result of so strong a movement!

Who is this modern Knight with his magic lamp?

It is the Green Mountain Boy of Old Vermont—the ignorant farmer of western New-York, the unlettered fool of sectarian tales; the scourge and terror of out-lawed Missouri, the favorite Military Chieftain of Illinois, the Chief Magistrate of the Penal city of the west, the prophet of a numerous and increasing people; and last of all a candidate for the Presidency of a great and powerful nation.

He is the favorite of thousands, the beloved of tens of thousands, the admired of millions, the hate of sectaries, the scorn of fools, the disgrace of drunkards, the fear of priests, the hiss of clowns, the dread of politicians, the revered of savages; the stumbling block of nations, and the wonder of the world; and to cap the climax, he is JO SMITH THE MOR-MON PROPHET, an American youth in the full bloom of early manhood, and apparently in the very infancy of his career, just budding into public life, and just launching upon the foaming billows of the deep and boundless ocean of human enterprise.

If then his obscure beginning and progress thus far have been marked by events so passing strange what we ask may be the consummation?

Is not the political, moral and religious destiny of our nation—of our continent—nay, of the world itself suspended on the answer!!!!

Are we not evidently living in the very dawn of a new and important era, which may yet wind up the affairs of Old Nimrod's Babel, of Nebuchadazer's complicated image, and cause old confused and discordant elements and things to pass away, and all things to become new.

Mr. Editor, in behalf of myself and the public, I claim light on this all absorbing subject, and hope you will spare no pains to give us from time to time, every thing of interest in relation to the prophet and his principles and movements. In so doing your paper will be highly useful and interesting. Go ahead then, with your New-York 'PROPHET,' and give us the truth in relation to the past, the present, and the future, for this is the calling of a 'Prophet.' Perhaps you may hear from me often. Wishing you much success, I take the liberty to subscribe myself your Journal" has furnished for that paper an interesting chapter of curiosities in the shape of titles of books published in the olden times. The titles of some of the religious plays are here annexed, from which it will be seen that notwithstanding the opposition of our pious people to the modern drama, the saints of yore made great use of the Stage in teaching Christianity and converting unbelievers:—

God Hys Promises.—A Tragedie Interlude, manyfestyng the chyef promises of God unto man in all ages, from the begynnynge of the world to the Death of Jesus Christe, a Mysterie. 1538.

The same year was also published—“A Tragedie or Interlude, manyfestyng the chyefe promises of God unto Man in all ages, from the fall of Adam to the incarnacyon of the Lorde Jesus.”

Johan Bale wrote several moral plays in 1533; some of the titles are very curious: one is called, “A Brefe Comedy or Interlude concernynge the Temptation of our Lord and Saver Jesus Christ, by Sathan in the Desert.” A comedy, “Of Christ when he was twelve years old”—is also attributed to Bale.

In 1661, was published a tragedy called “Hell's High Court of Justice, or the Tryal of the Political Ghosts, viz., Oliver Cromwell, the king of Sweden, and Cardinal Mazarine.”

Thomas Preston, L. L. D. who flourished in the reign of Elizabeth, wrote a dramatic piece in long metre, entitled—“A lamentable Tragedie, mixed full of Pleasant Mirth, containynge the life of Cambisses, King of Persia, from the beginning of his kink-dome unto his death, his own good deed of execution, after the many wicked deeds and tyrannous murders committed by and through him, and last of all his odious death by God's justice apponited, doom on such order as followeth.”

In the 10th century, a nun by the name of Roswetha, wrote plays in Lower Saxony; one is entitled “Mary Magdalen,” and one of the stage directions in it is as follows:—“Here enters the Pryse of the Devylls in a phaeton, with Hell underneath the Stage!!!”

One of the old miracle plays was called “The Harrowing of Hell.”

Appropriate Rebuke.—One of our Paris letters states, that “at Lady Cowley's soiree, on Wednesday night last, occurred an incident which occupied all the world at present. Among the guests was a Mr. L., who, believing that none but a friend whom he addressed was within hearing, said, ‘And they call this a party! Why, I never saw anything so dull in my life. It is not worth the trouble of dressing for such an affair; and then the rooms individuals, then perhaps I might be justified in remaining silent. But it is not! Nor is it the pecuniary interest of a whole community alone, that prompts me again to appeal to your Excellency. But, dear sir, it is for the peace and safety of hundreds, I may safely say, of this community, who are not guilty of any offence against the laws of the country; and also the life of my husband, who has not committed any crime whatever; neither has he transgressed any of the laws, or any part of the constitution of the United States; neither has he at any time, infringed upon the rights of any man, or of any class of men, or community of any description. Need I say he is not guilty of the crime alleged against him by Governor Boggs? Indeed it does seem entirely superfluous for me, or any of his friends in this place, to testify to his innocence of that crime, when so many of the citizens of your place, and of many other places in this state, as well as in the territory; do know positively that the statement of Governor Boggs is without the least shadow of truth; and we do know, and so do many others, that the prosecution against him, has been conducted in an illegal manner; and every act demonstrates the fact, that all the design of the prosecution, is to throw him into the power of his enemies without the least ray of hope that he would ever be allowed to obtain a fair trial, and that he would be inhumanly and ferociously murdered. No person having a knowledge of the existing circumstances, has one remaining doubt; and your honor will recollect that you said to me, that you would not advise Mr. Smith, ever to trust himself in Missouri. And, dear sir, you cannot for one moment indulge one unfriendly feeling toward him, if he abides by your council. Then sir, why is it that he should be thus cruelly pursued?—Why not give him the privilege of the laws of this state. When I reflect upon the many cruel and illegal operations of Lilburn W. Boggs, and the consequent sufferings of myself and family, and the incalculable losses and sufferings of many hundreds who survived, and the many precious lives that were lost, all the effect of unjust prejudice and misguided ambition, produced by misrepresentation and calumny; my bosom heaves with unutterable anguish. And who that is as well acquainted with the facts as the people of the city of Quincy would censure me, if I should say that my heart burned with just indignation towards our calumniators, as well as the perpetrators of those horrid crimes! But how happy would I now be to pour out my full heart in gratitude to Governor Boggs, if he had rose up with the dignity and authority of the chief executive of the state, and put down every illegal transaction and protected the peaceable citizens and enterprising emigrants from the violence of plundering out-laws, who have ever been a disgrace to the state, and always will, so long as they go unpunished. Yes, I say, how happy would I be to render him not only the gratitude of my own heart, but the cheering effusions of the joyous souls of fathers and mothers, of brothers and sisters, widows and orphans, whom he might have saved by such a course, from now drooping under the withering hand of adversity, brought upon them by the persecutions of wicked and corrupt men.—And how may I entreat your excellency to lighten the hand of oppression and persecution, which is laid upon me and my family, which materially affect the peace and welfare of this whole community; for, let me assure you that there are many whole families that are entirely

Respectfully, your most obedient,
EMMA SMITH.
P. S. Sir, I hope you will favor me with an answer.

Quincy, August, 24, 1842.

DEAR MADAM:—Your letter of this date has just been handed to me, which recalls to my mind your great solicitude in reference to the security and welfare of your husband; but I need not say, it recalls to my mind the subject matter of your solicitude, because that subject, except at short intervals, has not been absent from my mind. I can scarcely furnish you a justifiable apology for delaying a reply so long, but be assured Madam, it is not for want of regard for you, and your peace of mind, that I have postponed; but a crowd of public business, which has required my whole time, together with very ill health since the receipt of your former letter, and it would be most gratifying to my feelings now, if due regard to public duty would enable me to furnish such a reply as would fully conform to your wishes—but my duty in reference to all demands made by executives of other states, for the surrender of fugitives from justice, appears to be plain and simple; consisting entirely of an executive, and not a judicial character, leaving me no discretion, or adjudication, as to the innocence or guilt of persons so demanded and charged with crime, and it is plain that the constitution and laws of the United States in reference to fugitives from justice, presumes and contemplates, that the laws of the several states, are ample to do justice to all who may be charged with crime, and the statute of this state simply requires, “That whenever the executive of any other state, or of any territory of the United States, shall demand of the executive of this state, any person as a fugitive from justice, and shall have complied with the requisitions of the act of Congress in that case made and provided, it shall be the duty of the executive of this state to issue his warrant under the seal of this state, to apprehend the said fugitive” &c. With the Constitution and laws before me, my duty is so plainly marked out, that it would be impossible to err, so long as I abstain from usurping the rights of adjudication. I am aware of the strict enforcement of the laws by an executive, or a rigid administration of them by a judicial tribunal, often results in the hardship to those involved, and to you, it doubtless appears to be peculiarly so, in the present case of Mr. Smith. If however, as you allege, he is innocent of any crime, and the proceedings are illegal, it would be the more easy for him to procure an acquittal. In reference to the remark you attributed to me that “I would not advise Mr. Smith ever to trust himself in Missouri,” I can only say as I have heretofore said on many occasions, that I have never entertained a doubt that if Mr. Smith should submit to the laws of Missouri, that the utmost latitude would be allowed him in his defence, and the fullest justice done him, and I only intended to refer (in the remark made to you when at my house,) to the table, and not to the laws of Missouri.

Very much has been attributed to me in reference to General Smith, that is without foundation in truth, a knowledge of which fact enables me to receive what I hear as coming from him, with great allowance.

In conclusion, dear madam, I feel conscious when I assure you that all my official acts in reference to Mr. Smith, have been prompted by a strict sense of duty, and in discharge of that duty have studiously pursued that course, least likely to produce excitement and alarm, both in your community and the surrounding public, and I will here add that I much regret being called upon to act at all, and that I hope he will submit to the laws, and that justice will ultimately be done.

Be pleased to present my best respects to Mrs. Smith and Miss Snow, your companions while at Quincy, and accept of my highest regard for yourself, and best wishes for your prosperity and happiness.

Your obedient servant,

THOMAS CARLIN.

MRS. EMMA SMITH.

To the foregoing letter, Mrs. Smith sent the following by way of answer.

NAUVOO, August 27, 1842.

To His Excellency, Thomas Carlin:—

DEAR SIR—I received your letter of the 24th in due time, and now tender you the sincere gratitude of my heart, for the interest which you have felt in my peace and prosperity; and I assure you, that every act of kindness, and every word of consolation have been thankfully received and duly appreciated by me and by my friends also; and I much regret your ill health, and still hope you will avail yourself of sufficient time to investigate our cause, and thoroughly acquaint yourself of the illegality of the prosecution instituted against Mr. Smith; and I now certify that Mr. Smith, myself, nor any other person, to my knowledge, has ever, nor do we at this time wish your honor to swerve from your duty, as an executive, in the least. But we do believe that it is your duty to allow us in this place, the privilege and advantages guaranteed to us by the laws of this state and the United States; this is all we ask, and if we ever enjoy these rights unmolested, it will be the ultimate end of all our ambition; and the result will be peace and prosperity to us and all the surrounding country, as far as we are concerned. Nor do we wish to take any undue advantage of any intricate technicalities of law; but honorably and honestly fulfil all of the laws of this state, and of the United States, and then, in turn, to have the benefit resulting from an honorable execution of those laws. And now, your excellency will not consider me assuming any unbecoming dictation, but recollect that the many persecutions that has been got up unjustly, and pursued illegally, obliged me to know something for myself;—therefore, let me refer you to the eleventh section of our City Charter; "All power is granted to the City Council, to make, ordain, establish and execute all ordinances not repugnant to the Constitution of the state, or of the United States, or, as they may deem necessary for the peace and safety of said city." Accordingly, there is an ordinance passed by the City Council to prevent our people from being carried off by an illegal process; and if any one thinks he is illegally seized, under this ordinance he claims the right of habeas corpus, under section seventeenth of the charter, to try the question of identity, which is strictly constitutional. These powers are positively granted in the charter over your own signature;—and now, dear sir, where can be the justice in depriving us of these rights which are lawfully ours, as well as they are the lawful rights of the inhabitants of Quincy and Springfield and many other places where the citizens enjoy the advantages of such ordinances, without controversy. With these considerations, and many more which might be adduced, give us the privilege and we will show your Honor, and the world besides, if required, that the Mr. Smith referred to in the demand from Missouri respects and considerations to your wife and family, and tell them I greatly desire to see them, with yourself, in our place as soon as can be convenient.

E. S.

QUINCY, September 7th, 1842.

DEAR MADAM:—Your letter of the 27th ult. was delivered to me on Monday the 5th inst.; and I have not had time to answer it until this evening, and I now appropriate a few moments to the difficult task of replying satisfactorily to its contents, every word of which evinces your devotedness to the interest of your husband and pouring forth the effusions of a heart wholly his. I am thus admonished that I can say nothing that does not subserve his interest that can possibly be satisfactory to you; and before I proceed I will here repeat, my great regret that I have been officially called upon to act in reference to Mr. Smith, in any manner whatever. I doubt not, your candor, when you say, you do not desire me, "to swerve from my duty as executive in the least;" and all you ask is to be allowed the privileges, and advantages guaranteed to you by the constitution and laws. You then refer me to the 11th section of the charter of the city of Nauvoo, and claim for Mr. Smith, the right to be heard by the Municipal Court of said city, under a writ of Habeas Corpus emanating from said court; when he was held in custody under an executive warrant. The charter of the city of Nauvoo, is not before me at this time, but I have examined both the charters, and city ordinances upon the subject, and must express my surprise at the extraordinary assumption of power by the board of Aldermen as contained in said ordinance; from my recollection of the charter it authorizes the Municipal Court to issue writs of Habeas Corpus in all cases of imprisonment, or custody, arising from the authority of the ordinances of said city, but that the power was granted, or intended to be granted, to release persons held in custody under the authority of writs issued by the courts, or the executive of the State, is most absurd and ridiculous; and an attempt to exercise it, is a gross usurpation of power, that cannot be tolerated. I have always expected, and desired, that Mr. Smith, should avail himself of the benefits of the laws of this State, and of course he would be entitled to a writ of Habeas Corpus issued by the Circuit Court, and entitled to a hearing before said court, but to claim the right of a hearing before the Municipal Court of the city of Nauvoo, is a burlesque upon the charter itself. As to Mr. Smith's guilt, or innocence of the crime charged upon him, it is not my province to investigate or determine; nor has any court on earth jurisdiction of his case, but the courts of the state of Missouri; and as stated in my former letter, both the constitution and laws presume that each and every State in this Union, are competent to do justice to all who may be charged with crime committed in said State.

Your information of twelve men from Jackson County Mo. were lying in wait for Mr. Smith, between Nauvoo and Warsaw, for the purpose of taking him out of the hands of the officers who might have him in custody, and murdering him, is like many other marvellous stories that you hear in reference to him not one word of it true, but I doubt not that your mind has been continually harrowed up with fears produced by that, and other equally groundless stories; that that statement is true is next to impossible, and your own judgment if you will but give it scope will soon set you

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT,

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT:

SIDNEY RIGDON, ESQ.,

OF PENNSYLVANIA.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

It will be seen by a communication from Sidney Rigdon, Esq., P. M., that the mail that left this place on Friday, the 14th instant, was lost and afterwards recovered; we obtained our papers; but as they were completely saturated with wet and bedaubed with dirt, they were not in a fit state to forward, and as we had no others to supply their place, we dried and re-wrapped the recovered papers, and have forwarded them as they are:—

Notwithstanding the angry appearance of some portions of this country, still up to this time, the sober, honest portions of mankind, seem well disposed and so do we. All is peace at Nauvoo.

Those evil disposed persons who were secretly trying to destroy the chartered privileges of Nauvoo and her citizens, left the city last week, as a matter of their own choice. "The wicked flee when no man pursueth."

Further proceedings concerning the destruction of the Nauvoo Expositor.—On Thursday the 18th, Joseph Smith and sixteen others were arrested on a warrant issued by Daniel H. Wells, a justice of the peace, for the County of Hancock, for the crime of committing a riot on Monday the 10th inst., in the destruction of the Nauvoo Expositor printing press and types, as a nuisance. After a long and close examination they were all discharged.

ANNEXATION OF TEXAS.

This seems to be the most important question now before the American people. Mr. Clay is opposed to her admission and raises, what he is pleased to term, constitutional objections;—but the objection urged as strenuously as any other, is that of Mexico's opposition to the formation of a treaty. In the event of Texas' being received into the Union, he urges that Mexico will assume the character of a belligerent nation—that the United States would be involved in a bloody war with her, &c. Well, suppose Texas is annexed, Mexico takes exceptions and es that would bar her admission, why not have them judiciously modified by Congress? Congress has the power and conceded right thus to alter or amend for the benefit of the Union.

At all hazards, he objects to her annexation previous to the presidential election. Now, with our powers of discrimination, we cannot conceive way the election should be an impediment to clog the wheels of government and effect such detention of our national operations.

As well might he go to suspend the reception of Ministers Plenipotentiary from foreign Courts, or close up all the financial concerns of the Government, until the clamor of election has subsided, as to suppose that such suspense is advisable and politic. This dallying with the interests of our nation, for the flimsy reason that Clay has the ambition to seek an elevation to the Presidency, is but the juggling of demagogues and the prating of hydra-headed torism. If the British Navy was bombarding our coast and thundering down the walls of our defence, it is reasonable to suppose that such men as Clay—with trophies of patriotism clattering thick around him—would ask the people to witness the devastation with composure until after they had elected him President! Shades of antiquated demagogues!—your history affords no parallel! Clay has outstripped the magicians of all ages, and placed a climax upon hoary-headed Presumption, that outdazzles the legerdemain of ambition's devotees who flourish in the political history of nations!

Speaking upon the policy of annexation, Gen. Smith, in his 'views of the powers and policy of the Government,' makes the following remarks:

"When the people petitioned to possess the territory of Oregon or any other contiguous territory; I would lend the influence of a chief magistrate to grant so reasonable a request, that they might extend the mighty efforts and enterprise of a free people from the east to the west sea; and make the wilderness blossom as the rose; and when a neighboring realm petitioned to join the union of the sons of liberty, and my voice would be, come: yeu Texas; come Mexico; come Canada; and come all the world—let us be brethren: let us be one great family: and let there be universal peace."

TO THE PUBLIC.

As a soft breeze in a hot day mellows the air, so does the simple truth calm the feelings of the irritated; and so we proceed to give the proceedings of the city council relating to the removal of the Nauvoo Expositor as a nuisance. We have been robbed, mobbed and plundered with impunity some two or three times, and as every heart is more apt to know its own sorrows, the people of Nauvoo

For the Neighbor.

Mr. Editor:

In your last week's paper I proposed giving your readers an account of the proceedings of the City Council, but time forbids any thing more than a brief SYNOPSIS of the PROCEEDINGS of the MUNICIPALITY of the City of Nauvoo, relative to the destruction of the press and fixtures of the "Nauvoo Expositor."

City Council, Regular Session)
June 8th, 1844.)

In connection with other business, as stated in last week's paper, the Mayor remarked that he believed it generally the case, that when a man goes to law, he has an unjust cause and wants to go before some one who wants business, and that he had very few cases on his docket, and referring to councillor Emmons, editor of the Nauvoo Expositor, suggested the propriety of first purging the City Council; and referring to the character of the paper and proprietors, called up Theodore Turley, a mechanic, who being sworn, said that the Laws, (Wm. and Wilson.) had brought Bogus Dies to him to fix;

Councillor Hyrum Smith, enquired what good Foster, and his brother, and the Higbee's, and Laws, had ever done; while his brother Joseph was under arrest, from the Missouri persecution, the Laws, and Foster, would have been rode on a rail, if he had not stepped forward to prevent it, on account of their oppressing the poor.

Mayor said, while he was under arrest by writ from Gov. Carlin, Wm. Law, pursued him for $40.00 he was owing Law, and it took the last expense money he had to pay it.

Councillor H. Smith, referred to J. H. Jackson's coming to this city, &c. Mayor said, Wm. Law, had offered Jackson, $500.00 to kill him.

Councillor, H. Smith, continued, Jackson, told him, he (Jackson,) meant to have his daughter; and threatened him if he made any resistance, Jackson, related to him a dream; that Joseph and Hyrum were opposed to him, but that he would execute his purposes; that Jackson, had laid a plan with four or five persons to kidnap his daughter, and threatened to shoot any one that should come near, after he had got her in the skiff; That Jackson, was engaged in trying to make Bogus, which was his principal business,—referred to the revelation, read to the High Council of the Church, which has caused so much talk about a multiplicity of wives; that said Revelation was in answer to a question concerning things which transpired in former days, and had no reference to the present time. That when sick, Wm. Law, confessed to him that he had been "guilty of adultery," and "was not fit to live," and had "sinned against his own soul," &c. and enquired, who was Judge him;—believed the General had been telling witness something. God damn him if he has I will kill him,—swore he would kill any man that should prove a traitor to him. Jackson said if he could get a company of men to suit him, he would go into the frontiers and live by high way robbery, had got sick of the world.

Mayor suggested that the Council pass an ordinance to prevent misrepresentation and libelous publications, and conspiracies against the peace of the city; and referring to the reports that Dr. Foster had set afloat, said he had never made any proposals to Foster to come back to the church. Foster proposed to come back; came to Mayor's house and wanted a private interview; had some conversation with Foster in the Hall, in presence of several gentlemen, on the 7th inst.; offered to meet him and have an interview in presence of friends, three or four to be selected by each party—which Foster agreed to; and went to bring his friends for the interview, and the next notice he had of him was the following letter:

June 7th 1844

To Gen J. Smith,

Sir, I have consulted my friends in relation to your proposals of settlement, and they as well as myself are of the opinion that your conduct and that of your unworthy, unprincipled, clan is so base that it would be morally wrong & detract from the dignity of Gentlemen to hold any conference with you, the repeated insults, and abuses, I as well as my friends have suffered from your unlawful course towards us demands honorable resentment we are resolved to make this our motto, nothing on our part has been done to provoke your anger but have done all things as become men, you have trampled upon every thing we hold dear and sacred, you have set at law at defiance and profaned the name of the most high to carry out your damnable purposes—and I have nothing more to fear from you than you have already threatened & I as well as my friends will stay here & maintain and magnify the law as long as we stay—and we are resolved never to leave until we sell or exchange our property that we have here, the proposals made by your agent Demic Huntington as well as the threats you sent to intimidate me, I disdain and despise as I do their unhalloved authority, the right of my family and my friends demand at my hand a refusal of all your offers, we are united in virtue and truth, and we set hell at defiance and all her agents adieu.

R. D. FOSTER.

Gen. J. Smith

Mayor continued:—And when Foster left his house, he went to a shoe shop on the hill and reported, that "Joseph said to him if he would come back he would give him Law's place in the church, and a hat full of specie."

Lucian Woodworth, sworn, said that the conversation as stated by the Mayor was correct, was at the Mansion June 7th when Dr. Foster rode up and enquired if Gen. Smith was at home,—and then went into the house,—witness purpose of betraying him. Came to his gate, and was prevented by Daniel Carn, who was set to watch; Law came within his gate, and called Mayor and the Mayor reproved Law for coming at that time of night, with a company of strangers.

Daniel Carn, sworn, said that about 10 o'clock at night, a boat came up the river with about a dozen men. Wm. Law came to the gate with them, witness on guard, stopped them. Law called Joseph to the door, and wanted an interview. Joseph said, Bro. Law you know better than to come here at this hour of the night, and Law retired—next morning Law wrote a letter to apologize, which witness heard read—which was written apparently to screen himself from the charge of a conspiracy and the letter betrayed a conspiracy on the face of it.

Adjourned at half past 6 P. M., till Monday 10th at 10 o'clock A. M. Adjourned session June 10th, 10 o'clock, A. M. Alderman Harris presiding.

Mayor referred to Dr. Foster—and again read his letter of the 7th inst., (as before quoted.)

Cyrus Hills, a stranger sworn, said one day last week, believed it Wednesday, a gentleman, whom witness did not know, came into the sitting room of the 'Nauvoo Mansion' and requested the Hon. Mayor to step aside—he wanted to speak with him, Mayor stepped through the door into the entry, by the foot of the stairs, and the Gen. (Mayor) asked him what he wished? Foster (as witness learned since the Gen. name.) said he wanted some conversation on some business witness did not understand at the time, the Gen. refused to go any farther, and said he would have no conversation in private, what should be said should be in public; and told Foster if he would choose three or four men, he would meet him with the same number of men, (among whom was his bro. Hyrum.) And they would have a cool and calm investigation of the subject, and by his making a proper satisfaction, things should be honorably adjusted. Witness judged from the manner in which Foster expressed himself that he agreed to the Mayor's proposals, and would meet him, the same day, in presence of friends, heard no proposals made by Mayor to Foster, for settlement, heard nothing about any offers of dollars, or money, or any other offer except those mentioned before, nothing said about Wm. Law. Was within hearing of the parties at the time conversation was going on.

O. P. Rockwell, sworn, Some day last week, saw Dr. Foster ride up to the Nauvoo Mansion and go in, witness went in and found the Mayor and Dr. Foster in conversation. Gen. Smith was naming the men he would have present, among whom was Hyrum Smith, Wm. Marks, Lucian Woodworth, and Peter Hawes, and Dr. Foster had leave to call an equal number of his friends, as witness understood, for the purpose of having an interview on some matters in connection.

The Dr's. Bro. was proposed. Gen. said he had no objections, wanted him present, Dr. Foster started, saying he would be back shortly. Before Dr. F. left, the men whom Gen. Smith had named to be present, at the conversation, were sent for, across examined witness went into the house as Mayor and Dr. Foster were coming out of the Bar Room into the Hall; nothing said by the Mayor to Dr. Foster about his coming back, made no offer to Foster about a settlement.

Mayor said the first thing that occurred to his mind when he stepped into the Hall with Foster was that he wanted to assassinate him, he saw something shining below his vest; Mayor put his finger on it and said, what is that? Foster replied it is my pistol, and immediately took out the pistol, and showed it openly, and wanted the Mayor to go with him alone. Mayor said he would not go alone, Mayor never saw the pistol before; had a hook on its side, to hang on his waistband.

Andrew L. Lamarau, sworn, said that in 1839 or 40 while President Joseph Smith, Elder Rigdon, Judge Higbee, O. P. Rockwell and Dr. R. D. Foster, while on their way to Washington, called at witness' house in Dayton, Ohio, that the evening was spent very agreeably except some dissatisfaction on the part of certain females with regard to the conduct of Dr. Foster, on their return from Washington witness informed President Smith of Foster's conduct, Pres. Smith said he had frequently reproved Foster for such conduct and he had promised to do better, and told witness to reprove Foster if he saw any thing out of the way. That evening Foster refused to join the company, and walked through the town till about 9 o'clock when he came in and interrupted Pres. Smith, who was expounding some passages of scriptures, and changed the conversation. Soon after the company were invited to Mr. Brown's at the next door, whether they all repaired, while at Mr. Brown's conversation going on, and the room much crowded, Dr. Foster and one of the ladies he had paid so much attention to before took their seats in one corner of the room, witness heard her's late to Dr. Foster that she supposed she had been envious for some time back, but had been disappointed, and supposed it was on account of her weakness, and wanted Foster to prescribe something for her, Foster said he could do it for her, and dropped his hand to her feet, and began to raise it she gave him a slight push and threw herself close to the wall.

He laid his hand on her knee, and whispered so low that witness could not hear, next morning witness went in while Foster and others were at breakfast, and related what he had seen. Foster denied it, Pres. Smith told him not to deny it for he saw it himself and was ashamed of it. Foster confessed it was true, and promised to reform.

Peter Hawes sworn, said that he came to Nauvoo before the Law, and brought considerable property, it was a short time after the church had been driven out of Missouri, and had arrived in this place. The families having been robbed of all in Missouri were in a starving condition. By the council of the Presidency, witness converted his funds to feeding the poor, bringing in meat and flour &c., and while thus engaged drew upon the Law, who were at that time engaged in merchant, due to the amount of some six hundred dollars, which, on account of expenditures for the poor, he was not able to pay, to within some 70 or 80 dollars—which they pressed him for as soon as they wanted it—although he offered them good property at considerable less than the market value, as witness was obliged to leave the city on church business for a little season. Wm. Law threatened and intimidated witness' family during his absence for the pay.

Dr. Foster made a public dinner on the 4th of July. Witness was obliged to be absent and deposited meat, flour, &c., with Wm. Law, to give to the poor at that dinner, and Law handed it out as his own private property. Witness carried a load of wheat to Law's mill to be ground—Law would not grind it only to give a certain quantity of flour in return by weight. Law used up the flour, promising from time to time he would refund it. As witness was about to start on a mission to the south, with his valise in hand, saw Law before his door, talking with Hyrum Smith, called on Law and told him he was going away, and his family wanted the flour: Law promised on the honor of a gentleman, and a saint, his family should have the flour when they wanted.

Councillor H. Smith said he recollected the time and circumstance.

Hawes said when he returned, found his family must have starved if they had not borrowed money to get food somewhere else—could not get it of Law. And Law was preaching punctuality, PUNCTUALITY, PUNCTUALITY, as the whole drift of his discourses to the saints—and abusing them himself all the time, and grinding the poor.

Mayor said if he had a city council who felt as he did, the establishment (referring to the Nauvoo Expositor) would be a nuisance before night—and he then read an editorial from the Nauvoo Expositor. He then asked who ever said a word against Judge Emmons until he has attacked this council—or even against Joseph H. Jackson or the Laws, until they came out against the city? Here is a paper (Nauvoo Expositor) that is exciting our enemies abroad. Joseph H. Jackson has been proved a murderer before this council, and declared the paper a nuisance, a greater nuisance than a dead carcass—they make a criminality, for a man to have a wife on the earth, while he has one in heaven, according to the keys of the holy Priesthood—and he then read a statement of William Law's from the Expositor, where the truth of God was transformed into a lie concerning this thing—He then read several statements of Austin Cowles in the Expositor concerning a private interview, and said he never had any private conversation with Austin Cowles on these subjects—that he preached on the stand from the bible, showing the order in ancient days, having nothing to do with the present times. What the opposition party want, is to raise a mob on us and take the spoil from us, as they did in Missouri—he said it was as much as he could do, to keep his clerk, Thompson, from publishing the proceedings of the Law's and causing the people to rise up against them—said he would rather die to-morrow and have the thing smashed, than live and have it go on, for it was exciting the spirit of mobocracy among the people and bringing death and destruction upon us.

Peter Hawes, recalled a circumstance, which he had, forgot to mention concerning a Mr. Smith who came from England and soon after died—the children had no one to protect them; there was one girl 16 or 17 years old and a younger sister—witness took these girls into his family out of pity. Wilson Law, then Major General of the Nauvoo Legion, was familiar with the eldest daughter—Witness cautioned the girl—Wilson was soon there again and went out in the evening with the girl, who when charged by the witness's wife confessed that Wilson Law had seduced her. Witness told her he could not keep her—the girl wept, made much ado, and many promises—witness told her if she would do right, she might stay, but she did not keep her promise—Wilson came again and she went out with him—witness required her to leave his house.

Mayor said certain women came to complain to his wife—that they had caught Wilson Law with the girl on the floor at Mr. Hawes in the night.

Councillor H. Smith proceeded to show the falsehood of Austin Cowles in the "Expositor," in relation to the revelation referred to, that in reference to Foster's wife, and not the present time as related by Cowles.

Mayor said he had never preached the revelation in private, as he had in public—had not taught it to the members in the church in private, which statement many present confirmed, that on enquiring concerning the passage in the revelation concerning "they shall marry nor are given in marriage, &c." he received for answer, men in this life must marry in view of eternity, otherwise they must remain as angels, or be single in heaven, which was the essence of the revelation referred to, and the Mayor spoke at considerable length in explanation of this principle, and was willing for one to subscribe his name, to declare the "Expositor" and whole establishment a nuisance.

2 o'clock P. M.

Peter Hawes sworn, said that he came to Nauvoo before the Law, and brought considerable property, it was a short time after the church had been driven out of Missouri, and had arrived in this place. The families having been robbed of all in Missouri were in a starving condition. By the council of the Presidency, witness converted his funds to feeding the poor, bringing in meat and flour &c., and while thus engaged drew upon the Law, who were at that time engaged in merchant, due to the amount of some six hundred dollars, which, on account of expenditures for the poor, he was not able to pay, to within some 70 or 80 dollars—which they pressed him for as soon as they wanted it—although he offered them good property at considerable less than the market value, as witness was obliged to leave the city on church business for a little season. Wm. Law threatened and intimidated witness' family during his absence for the pay.

Dr. Foster made a public dinner on the 4th of July. Witness was obliged to be absent and deposited meat, flour, &c., with Wm. Law, to give to the poor at that dinner, and Law handed it out as his own private property. Witness carried a load of wheat to Law's mill to be ground—Law would not grind it only to give a certain quantity of flour in return by weight. Law used up the flour, promising from time to time he would refund it. As witness was about to start on a mission to the south, with his valise in hand, saw Law before his door, talking with Hyrum Smith, called on Law and told him he was going away, and his family wanted the flour: Law promised on the honor of a gentleman, and a saint, his family should have the flour when they wanted.

Councillor H. Smith said he recollected the time and circumstance.

Hawes said when he returned, found his family must have starved if they had not borrowed money to get food somewhere else—could not get it of Law. And Law was preaching punctuality, PUNCTUALITY, PUNCTUALITY, as the whole drift of his discourses to the saints—and abusing them himself all the time, and grinding the poor.

Mayor said if he had a city council who felt as he did, the establishment (referring to the Nauvoo Expositor) would be a nuisance before night—and he then read an editorial from the Nauvoo Expositor. He then asked who ever said a word against Judge Emmons until he has attacked this council—or even against Joseph H. Jackson or the Laws, until they came out against the city? Councillor H. Smith proceeded to show the falsehood of Austin Cowles in the "Expositor," in relation to the revelation referred to, that in reference to Foster's wife, and not the present time as related by Cowles.

Mayor said he had never preached the revelation in private, as he had in public—had not taught it to the members in the church in private, which statement many present confirmed, that on enquiring concerning the passage in the revelation concerning "they shall marry nor are given in marriage, &c." he received for answer, men in this life must marry in view of eternity, otherwise they must remain as angels, or be single in heaven, which was the essence of the revelation referred to, and the Mayor spoke at considerable length in explanation of this principle, and was willing for one to subscribe his name, to declare the "Expositor" and whole establishment a nuisance.

2 o'clock P. M.

as stated by the last witness before the morning Council—that Mrs. Smith died near the mouth of the Mississippi, and the father and eldest daughter died soon after, their arrival in this place—and that the seduction of such a youthful, fatherless, and innocent creature by such a man to high standing as the Major General of the Nauvoo Legion, was one of the darkest, damndest and foulest deeds on record.

Councillor Hyrum Smith concurred in the remarks made by the clerk concerning the excellent character of Mr. Smith and his family.

Mayor said the constitution did not authorize the press to publish libels and proposed that the Council make some provision for putting down the 'Nauvoo Expositor.'

Councillor Hyrum Smith called for a prospectus of the 'Expositor.'

Councillor Phelps read article 8, section 1, 'Constitution of Illinois.'

Mayor called for the charter.

The clerk read the prospectus of the 'Nauvoo Expositor.'

Mayor read the statements of Francis M. Higbee from the 'Expositor' and asked, 'is it not treasonable against all chartered rights and privileges, and against the peace and happiness of the city.'

Councillor H. Smith was in favor of declaring the 'Expositor' a nuisance.

Councillor Taylor—said no city on earth would bear such slander, and he would not bear it, and was decidedly in favor of active measures.

Mayor made a statement of what Wm. Law said before the City Council under oath, that he was a friend to the Mayor &c. &c. and asked if there were any present who recollected his statement when scores responded, yes!

Councillor Hunter was one of the grand jury. Said Wm. Law stated before the grand jury that he did not say to the Council that he was Joseph's friend.

Councillor Taylor continued—Wilson Law was president of this Council during the passage of many ordinances, and referred to the Records; Wm. Law and Emmons were members of the Council, and Emmons has never objected to any ordinance while in the Council; but has been more like a cypher, and is now become Editor of a libellous paper, and is trying to destroy our charter and ordinances; he then read from the constitution of the United States on the freedom of the press, and said, 'we are willing they should publish the truth,' but it is unlawful to publish libels; the 'Expositor' is a nuisance and stinks in the nose of every honest man.

Mayor read from Illinois constitution, Article 8, Section 2, touching the responsibility of the press for its constitutional liberty.

Councillor Stiles said a nuisance was any thing that disturbs the peace of a community and read Blackstone on private wrongs, Vol. 2, page 4, and 'the whole community has to rest under the stigma of these falsehoods; referring to the 'Expositor' and if we can prevent the issuing of any more slanderous communications, he would go in for it; it is right for this community to show a proper resentment, and he would go in for suppressing all further communications of the kind.

Councillor H. Smith believed the best way was to smother the press and 'pi' the type.

Councillor Johnson concurred with the councillors who had spoken.

Alderman Bennett referred to the statement of the 'Expositor' concerning the Municipal Court in the case of Jeremiah Smith as a libel, and offered the paper a public nuisance.

Councillor Warrington considered his a peculiar situation, as he did not belong to any church or any party; though it might be considered rather harsh for the council to declare the paper a nuisance, and proposed giving a few days' limitation and assessing a fine of $3,000 for every libel and if they would not cease publishing libels to declare it a nuisance, and said the statutes made provisions for a fine of $500.

Mayor replied that they threatened to shoot him when at Carthage and the women and others dare not go to Carthage to prosecute, and read a libel from the 'Expositor' concerning the imprisonment of Jeremiah Smith.

Councillor H. Smith spoke of the Warsaw Signal and disapproved its libellous course.

Mayor remarked he was sorry to have one dissenting voice in declaring the 'Expositor' a nuisance.

Councillor Warrington did not mean to be understood to go against the proposition; but would not be in haste in declaring it a nuisance.

Councillor H. Smith referred to the mortgages and property of the proprietors of the 'Expositor' and thought there would be little chance of collecting damages for libels.

Alderman E. Smith considered there was but one course to pursue; that the proprietors were out of the reach of the law; that our course was to put an end to the thing at once; believed by what he had heard that if the city did not do it, others would.

Councillor Hunter believed it to be a nuisance; referred to the opinion of Judge Pope on habeas corpus and spoke in favor of the charter &c. asked Francis M. Higbee before the grand jury, if he was not the man he saw at Joseph's house making professions of friendship; Higbee said he was not; (Hunters know this statement to be false); he also asked R. D. Foster did he not state before hundreds of people that he believed Joseph to be a prophet, and that Foster—They were under oath when they said it. (Many hundreds of people are witnesses to this perjury.)

Warren Smith sworn, said, F. M. Higbee came to him, and proposed to have him go in as a partner in making bogus money. Higbee said he would not work for a living; that witness might go in with him, if he would advance fifty dollars and showed him (witness) a half dollar, he said was made in his die.

Councillor Phelps continued and said, he felt deeper this day than ever he felt before, and wanted to know, by yes; if there was any present, who wanted to avenge the blood of that innocent female, who had been seduced by the then Major General of the Nauvoo Legion, Wilson Law; when yes! resounded from every quarter of the house; he then referred to the tea plot, at Boston, and asked if any body's rights were taken away with that transaction, and are we offering, or have we offered to take away the rights of any one, these two days? (No!) resounded from every quarter. He then referred also to Law's grinding the poor during the scarcity of grain, while the poor had nothing but themselves to grind; and spoke at great length in support of active measures to put down iniquity, and suppress the spirit of mobocracy.

Alderman Harris spoke from the chair, and expressed his feelings that the press ought to be demolished.

The following resolution was then read and passed unanimously, with the exception of Councillor Warrington.

Resolved, That the printing office from whence issues the 'Nauvoo Expositor' is a public nuisance, and also all of said Nauvoo Expositors, which may be, or exist in said establishment, and the Mayor is instructed to cause said printing establishment and papers to be removed without delay, in such manner as he shall direct. Passed June 10th, 1844.

Proclamation.

Mayor's Office, Nauvoo, June 16, 1844.

As there are a number of statements in circulation which have for their object, the injury of the 'Latter Day Saints,' all of which are false and prompted by blackhearted villains; I therefore deem it my duty to disabuse the public mind in regard to them, and to give a plain statement of facts which have taken place in the city within a few days past, and which has brought upon us the displeasure of the unprincipled and the uninformed, and seems to afford an opportunity to our enemies, to unite and arouse themselves to mob; and already they have commenced their hellish operations by driving a few defenceless Mormons from their houses and homes in the vicinity of Warsaw and Carthage.

A short time since a press was started in this city which had for its object the destruction of the institutions of the city, both civil and religious: its proprietors are a set of unprincipled scoundrels who attempted in every possible way to defame the character of the most virtuous of our community, and change our peaceful and prosperous city into a place as evil and polluted as their own black hearts. To rid the city of a paper so filthy and pestiferous as this, became the duty of every good citizen, who loves good order and morality; a complaint was made before the City Council, and after a full and impartial investigation it was voted—without one dissenting voice, a public NUISANCE, and to be immediately destroyed; the peace and happiness of the place demanded it, the virtue of our wives and daughters demanded, and our consciences demanded it at our hands as conservators of the public peace. That we acted right in this matter we have the assurance of one of the ablest exponents of the laws of England, viz: Blackstone—the constitution of the State of Illinois, and our own chartered rights. If then our charter gives us the power to decide what shall be a nuisance and cause it to be removed, where is the offence? What law is violated? If then no law has been violated, why this ridiculous excitement and badging with lawless ruffians to destroy the happiness of a people whose religious motto is 'peace and good will toward all men'?

Our city is infested with a set of blackleg counterfeiter and debauchees, and that the proprietors of this press were of that class, the minutes of the Municipal Court fully testify and in riding our young and flourishing city of such characters, we are shamed by not only villainous demagogues, but by some who from their station and influence in society, ought rather to raise than depress the standard of human excellence. We have no disturbance or excitement among us; save what is made by the thousand and one idle rumors about in the country. Every one is protected in his person and property, and but few cities of a population of twenty thousand people, in the United States, bathed in dissipation of vice of any kind, than the city of Nauvoo.

On the correctness of our conduct in this affair, we appeal to every high court in the state, and to its order we are willing to appear at any time that His Excellency, Governor Ford shall please to call us before it. I therefore, in behalf of the Municipal Court of Nauvoo, warn the lawless, not to be precipitate in any interference in our affairs, for as sure as there is a God in Israel, we shall rise triumphant over all opposition.

Proclamation.

Mayor's Office, Nauvoo, June 16, 1844.

As there are a number of statements in circulation which have for their object, the injury of the 'Latter Day Saints,' all of which are false and prompted by blackhearted villains; I therefore deem it my duty to disabuse the public mind in regard to them, and to give a plain statement of facts which have taken place in the city within a few days past, and which has brought upon us the displeasure of the unprincipled and the uninformed, and seems to afford an opportunity to our enemies, to unite and arouse themselves to mob; and already they have commenced their hellish operations by driving a few defenceless Mormons from their houses and homes in the vicinity of Warsaw and Carthage.

A short time since a press was started in this city which had for its object the destruction of the institutions of the city, both civil and religious: its proprietors are a set of unprincipled scoundrels who attempted in every possible way to defame the character of the most virtuous of our community, and change our peaceful and prosperous city into a place as evil and polluted as their own black hearts. To rid the city of a paper so filthy and pestiferous as this, became the duty of every good citizen, who loves good order and morality; a complaint was made before the City Council, and after a full and impartial investigation it was voted—without one dissenting voice, a public NUISANCE, and to be immediately destroyed; the peace and happiness of the place demanded it, the virtue of our wives and daughters demanded, and our consciences demanded it at our hands as conservators of the public peace. That we acted right in this matter we have the assurance of one of the ablest exponents of the laws of England, viz: Blackstone—the constitution of the State of Illinois, and our own chartered rights. If then our charter gives us the power to decide what shall be a nuisance and cause it to be removed, where is the offence? What law is violated? If then no law has been violated, why this ridiculous excitement and badging with lawless ruffians to destroy the happiness of a people whose religious motto is 'peace and good will toward all men'?

Our city is infested with a set of blackleg counterfeiter and debauchees, and that the proprietors of this press were of that class, the minutes of the Municipal Court fully testify and in riding our young and flourishing city of such characters, we are shamed by not only villainous demagogues, but by some who from their station and influence in society, ought rather to raise than depress the standard of human excellence. JOSEPH SMITH, Mayor.

Public Meeting.

A public meeting was held in the City of Nauvoo, on Sunday Evening the 16th inst.

Mr. John Taylor was unanimously called to the chair and Wm. Clayton appointed clerk.

The Chairman stated briefly the object of the meeting, whereupon it was unanimously resolved, That inasmuch as many false reports are being circulated through this county, by designing characters, for the purpose

purpose of betraying him. Came to his gate, and was prevented by Daniel Carn, who was set to watch; Law came within his gate, and called Mayor, and the Mayor reproved Law for coming at that time of night, with a company of strangers.

Daniel Carn, sworn, said that about 10 o'clock at night, a boat came up the river with about a dozen men. Wm. Law came to the gate with them, witness on guard, stopped them. Law called Joseph to the door, and wanted an interview. Joseph said, Bro. Law you know better than to come here at this hour of the night; and, Law retired—next morning Law wrote a letter to apologize, which witness heard read—which was written apparently to screen himself from the ceasure of a conspiracy and the letter betrayed a conspiracy on the face of it.

Adjourned at half past 6, P. M., till Monday 10th at 10 o'clock A. M. Adjourned session June 10th, 10 o'clock, A. M. Alderman Harris Presiding.

Mayor, referred to Dr. Foster—and again read his letter of the 7th inst., (as before quoted.)

Cyrus Hills, a stranger sworn; said one day last week, believed it wednesday, a gentleman, whom witness did not know, came into the sitting room of the 'Nauvoo Mansion' and requested the Hon. Mayor to step aside—he wanted to speak with him. Mayor stepped through the door into the entry, by the foot of the stairs, and the Gen. (Mayor) asked him what he wished? Foster (as witness learned since the Gen's name.) said he wanted some conversation on some business witness did not understand at the time, the Gen. refused to go any farther, and said he would have no conversation in private, what should be said should be in public; and told Foster if he would choose three or four men, he would meet him with the same number of men, (among whom was his bro. Hyrum.) And they would have a cool and calm investigation of the subject, and by his making a proper satisfaction, things should be honorably adjusted. Witness judged from the manner in which Foster expressed himself that he agreed to the Mayors proposals, and would meet him, the same day, in presence of friends, heard no proposals made by Mayor to Foster, for settlement, heard nothing about any offers of dollars, or money, or any other offer except those mentioned before, nothing said about Wm. Law. Was with hearing of the parties at the time conversation was going on.

O. P. Rockwell, sworn. Some day last week, saw Dr. Foster ride up to the Nauvoo Mansion and go in, witness went in and found the Mayor and Dr. Foster in conversation. Gen. Smith was naming the men he would have present, among whom was Hyrum Smith, Wm. Marks, Lucian Woodworth, and Peter Hawes, and Dr. Foster had leave to call an equal number of his friends, as witness understood, for the purpose of having an interview on some matters in conversation.

The Dr's. Bro. was proposed. Gen. said he had no objections, wanted him present, Dr. Foster started, saying he would be back shortly. Before Dr. F. left, the men whom Gen. Smith had named to be present, at the conversation

Missouri and had arrived in this place. The families having been robbed of all in Missouri were in a starving condition. By the council of the Presidency, witness converted his funds to feeding the poor, bringing in meat and flour &c, and while thus engaged drew upon the Laws, who were at that time engaged in merchandise to the amount of some six hundred dollars, which, on account of expenditure for the poor, he was not able to pay, to within some 70 or 80 dollars—which they pressed him for as soon as they wanted it—although he offered them good property at considerable less than the market value, as witness was obliged to leave the city on church business for a little season. Wm. Law threatened and intimidated witness' family during his absence for the pay.

Dr. Foster made a public dinner on the 4th of July. Witness was obliged to be absent and deposited meat, flour, &c., with Wm. Law, to give to the poor at that dinner, and Law handed it out as his own private property. Witness carried a load of wheat to Law's mill to be ground—Law would not grind it only to give a certain quantity of flour in return by weight. Law used up the flour, promising from time to time he would refund it. As witness was about to start on a mission to the south, with his valise in hand, saw Law before his door, talking with Hyrum Smith, called on Law and told him he was going away, and his family wanted the flour: Law promised on the honor of a gentleman, and a saint, his family should have the flour when they wanted.

Councillor H. Smith said he recollected the time and circumstance.

Hawes said when he returned, found his family must have starved if they had not borrowed money to get food somewhere else—could not get it of Law. And Law was preaching punctuality, PUNCTUALITY, PUNCTUALITY, as the whole drift of his discourses to the saints—and abusing them himself all the time, and grinding the poor.

Mayor said if he had a city council who felt as he did, the establishment (referring to the Nauvoo Expositor) would be a nuisance before night—and he then read an editorial from the Nauvoo Expositor. He then asked who ever said a word against Judge Emmons until he has attacked this council—or even against Joseph H. Jackson or the Laws, until they came out against the city? Here is a paper (Nauvoo Expositor) that is exciting our enemies abroad. Joseph H. Jackson has been proved a murderer before this council, and declared the paper a nuisance, a greater nuisance than a dead carcass—they make a

as stated by the last witness before the morning Council—that Mrs. Smith died near the mouth of the Mississippi and the father and eldest daughter died soon after their arrival in this place and that the seduction of such a youthful, fatherless, and innocent creature by such a man in high standing as the Major General of the Nauvoo Legion—was one of the darkest, damndest and foulest deeds on record.

Councillor Hyrum Smith concurred in the remarks made by the clerk concerning the excellent character of Mr. Smith and his family.

Mayor said the constitution did not authorize the press to publish libels and proposed that the Council make some provision for putting down the 'Nauvoo Expositor.'

Councillor Hyrum Smith called for a prospectus of the 'Expositor.'

Councillor Phelps read article 8, section 1, Constitution of Illinois.

Mayor called for the charter.

The clerk read the prospectus of the 'Nauvoo Expositor.'

Mayor read the statements of Francis M. Higbee from the 'Expositor' and asked, 'is it not treasonable against all chartered rights and privileges, and against the peace and happiness of the city.'

Councillor H. Smith was in favor of declaring the 'Expositor' a nuisance.

Councillor Taylor—said no city on earth would bear such slander, and he would not bear it, and was decidedly in favor of active measures.

Mayor made a statement of what Wm. Law said before the City Council under oath, that he was a friend to the Mayor &c. &c. and asked if there were any present who recollected his statement when scores responded, yes!

Councillor Hunter was one of the grand jury; said Wm. Law stated before the grand jury that he did not say to the Council that he was Joseph's friend.

Councillor Taylor continued—Wilson Law was president of this Council during the passage of many ordinances, and referred to the Records; Wm. Law and Emmons were members of the Council, and Emmons has never objected to any ordinance while in the Council; but has been more like a cypher, and is now become Editor of a libellous paper, and is trying to destroy our charter and ordinances; he then read from the constitution of the United States on the freedom of the press, and said, 'we are willing they should publish the truth; but it is unlawful to publish libels; the Expositor' is a nuisance and stinks in the nose of every honest man.

Mayor read from Illinois constitution. Article 8, Section 2, touching the responsibility of the press for its constitutional liberty.

Councillor Stiles said a nuisance was any thing that disturbs the peace of a community and read Blackstone on private wrongs, Vol. 2, page 4, and the whole community has to rest under the stigma of these falsehoods; referring to

Alderman Spencer accorded with the views expressed, that the 'Nauvoo Expositor', is a nuisance, did not consider it wise to give them time to trumpet a thousand lies, their property could not pay for it, if we pass only a fine or imprisonment, have we any confidence that they will desist? none at all! we have found these men covenant breakers with God! with their wives!! &c., have we any hope of their doing better? their characters have gone before them, shall they be suffered to go on, and bring a mob upon us; and murder our women and children, and burn our beautiful city? No! I had rather my blood would be spilled at once, and would like to have the press removed as soon as the ordinance would allow—and wish the matter might be put into the hands of the mayor, and every body stand by him, in the execution of his duties—and crush every nuemur.

Councillor Levi Richards, said he had felt deeply on this subject, and concurred fully in the view General Smith had expressed of it this day, thought it unnecessary to repeat what the council perfectly understood; considered private interest as nothing in comparison with the public good—every time a line was formed in Far West he was there, for what? to defend it against just such scoundrels, and influence as the Nauvoo Expositor and its supporters; were directly calculated to bring against us again.—Considered the doings of the council this day of immense moment, not to this city alone, but to the whole world,—would go in to put a stop to the thing at once, let it be thrown out of this city, and the responsibility of countenancing such a press, be taken off our shoulders, and fall on the state, if corrupt enough to sustain it.

Councillor Phineas Richards said that he had not forgotten the transactions at Hanns mills, and that he recollected that his son George Spencer, then lay in the well referred to, on the day previous, without a winding-sheet, shroud, or coffin, he said he could not sit still when he saw the same spirit raging in this place; he considered the publication of the Expositor as much murderous at heart as David was before the death of Uriah; was for making a short work of it was prepared to take his stand by the Mayor and whatever he proposes, would stand by him to the last. The quicker it is stopt the better.

Councillor Phelps had investigated the constitution, charter, and laws: the power to declare that office a nuisance is granted to us, in the Springfield charter, and a resolution declaring it a nuisance is all that is required.

John Birney sworn—said Francis M. Higbee, and Wm. Law, declared they had commenced their operations stream; and it was with difficulty that the carrier saved his life. The mail bags had the mail in them for the river mail, going to New Orleans, as well as the land mail going south of this office. The mail carrier returned to this office, as soon as possible, after the accident, and gave information of the loss of the mail. On this morning I obtained the assistance of a number of gentlemen of this place, who readily offered their service to aid in recovering, if possible the lost mail bags. I provided the company with ropes and rakes for the purpose, as also the use of a small water craft to ply in the stream, with which we repaired to the place, and found the stream foaming with great violence, and threatening death to every one who should enter it. The party commenced passing along the banks of the stream: the water craft plying in the stream. O. P. Rockwell of Missouri persecution memory, discovered a something apparently black near the root of a tree, which stood on the bank of the stream, about the size of a man's fist; as the breaks in the water would lash against the roots of the tree it would be hid and when they receded it would again appear. He ploughed into the stream; and supporting himself by the bushes which overhung the stream, reached the place, and to the great gratification of the company, it proved to be the lost mail bags which he succeeded in bringing in triumph to the shore, by use of the same means by which he reached the place; where they were. I brought the bags to this office, and opening them, found the papers to be all ruined, but the letters can be saved by using care in drying, which is now in a state of progress.

I take this public manner, in behalf of the public, to tender my thanks to Messrs. Charles Warner, David Bryant, Joseph M. Cole, George W. Robinson, O. P. Rockwell, and Harrison Kimball, all of this city, for their aid in recovering the lost mail, which if not found must have been a serious loss to the public, and hope that their example may stimulate others to like acts for the public good.

naming the conversation. Gen. Smith was named the man who would have present, among whom was Hyrum Smith, Wm. Marks, Lucian Woodworth, and Peter Hawes, and Dr. Foster had leave to call an equal number of his friends, as witness understood, for the purpose of having an interview on some matters in conversation.

The Drs. Bro. was proposed. Gen. said he had no objections, wanted him present, Dr. Foster started, saying he would be back shortly. Before Dr. F. left, the men whom Gen. Smith had named to be present, at the conversation were sent for, across examined witness went into the house as Mayor and Dr. Foster were coming out of the Bar Room into the Hall; nothing said by the Mayor to Dr. Foster about his coming back, made no offer to Foster about a settlement.

Mayor said the first thing that occurred to his mind when he stepped into the Hall with Foster was that he wanted to assassinate him; he saw something shining below his vest; Mayor put his finger on it and said, what is that? Foster replied it is my pistol, and immediately took out the pistol, and showed it openly, and wanted the Mayor to go with him alone. Mayor said he would not go alone, Mayor never saw the pistol before; had a hook on its side, to hang on his waist band.

Andrew L. Lamaroux, sworn, said that in 1839 or 40 while President Joseph Smith, Elder Rigdon, Judge Higbee, O.P. Rockwell and Dr. R. D. Foster, while on their way to Washington, called at witness' house in Dayton, Ohio, that the evening was spent very agreeably except some dissatisfaction on the part of certain females with regard to the conduct of Dr. Foster, on their return from Washington witness informed President Smith of Foster's conduct, Pres. Smith said he had frequently reprov'd Foster for such conduct and he had promised to do better, and told witness to reprove Foster if he saw any thing out of the way. That evening Foster refused to join the company, and walked through the town till about 8 o'clock when he came in and interrupted Pres. Smith, who was expounding some passages of scriptures, and changed the conversation. Soon after the company were invited to Mr. Brown's at the next door, whither they all repaired, while at Mr. Brown's conversation going on, and the room much crowded, Dr. Foster and one of the ladies he had paid so much attention to before took their seats in one corner of the room, witness heard her state to Dr. Foster that she supposed she had been envious for some time back, but had been disappointed, and supposed it was on account of her weakness, and wanted Foster to prescribe something for her, Foster said he could do it for her, and dropped his hand to her feet, and began to raise it, she gave him a slight push and threw herself close to the wall.

He laid his hand on her knee, and whispered so low that witness could not hear, next morning witness went in while Foster and others were at breakfast, and related what he had seen, Foster denied it, Pres. Smith told him not to deny it for he saw it himself and was ashamed of it. Foster confessed it was true, and promised to reform.

Peter Hawes sworn—Said that he came to Nauvoo before the Laws and brought considerable property; it was a short time after the church had been driven out of and he then read an editorial from the Nauvoo Expositor. He then asked who ever said a word against Judge Emmons until he has attacked this council—or even against Joseph H. Jackson or the Laws, until they came out against the city? Here is a paper (Nauvoo Expositor) that is exciting our enemies abroad. Joseph H. Jackson has been proved a murderer before this council, and declared the paper a nuisance, a greater nuisance than a dead carcass—they make a criminality for a man to have a wife on the earth, while he has one in heaven, according to the keys of the holy Priesthood—and he then read a statement of William Law's from the Expositor, where the truth of God was transformed into a lie concerning this thing—He then read several statements of Austin Cowles in the Expositor concerning a private interview, and said he never had any private conversation with Austin Cowles on these subjects—that he preached on the stand from the bible, shewing the order in ancient days, having nothing to do with the present times. What the opposition party want, is to raise a mob on us and take the spoil from us, as they did in Missouri—he said it was as much as he could do, to keep his clerk, Thompson, from publishing the proceedings of the Law's and causing the people to rise up against them—said he would rather die to-morrow and have the things smashed, than live and have it go on, for it was exciting the spirit of mobocracy among the people and bringing death and destruction upon us.

Peter Haws, recalled a circumstance, which he had forgot to mention concerning a Mr. Smith who came from England and soon after died—the children had no one to protect them; there was one girl 16 or 17 years old and a younger sister—witness took these girls into his family out of pity. Wilson Law, then Major General of the Nauvoo Legion, was familiar with the eldest daughter—Witness cautioned the girl—Wilson was soon there again and went out in the evening with the girl, who when charged by the witness's wife confessed that Wilson Law had seduced her. Witness told her he could not keep her—the girl wept, made much ado, and many promises—witness told her if she would do right, she might stay, but she did not keep her promise—Wilson came again and she went out with him—witness required her to leave his house.

Mayor said certain women came to complain to his wife—that they had caught Wilson Law with the girl on the floor at Mr. Hawes in the night.

Councillor H. Smith proceeded to shew the falsehood of Austin Cowles in the "Expositor," in relation to the revelation referred to, that it was in reference to former days, and not the present time as related by Cowles.

Mayor said he had never preached the revelation in private, as he had in public—had not taught it to the anointed in the church in private, which statement many present confirmed, that on enquiring concerning the passage in the restoration concerning "they neither marry nor are given in marriage, &c., they received for answer, men in this life must marry in view of eternity, otherwise they must remain as angels, or be single in heaven, which was the amount of the revelation referred to, and the Mayor spoke at considerable length in explanation of this principle and was willing for one to subscribe his name, to declare the "Expositor" and whole establishment a nuisance.

2 o'clock p. m.
The clerk of the Council bore testimony of the good character and high standing of Mr. Smith and his family, whose name was produced by Wilson Law, of the press, and said, "we are willing that they should publish the truth" but it is unlawful to publish libels; the "Expositor" is a nuisance and stinks in the nose of every honest man.

Mayor read from Illinois constitution, Article 8, Section 2, touching the responsibility of the press for its constitutional liberty.

Councillor Stiles said a nuisance was any thing that disturbs the peace of a community and read Blackstone on private wrongs, Vol. 2, page 4, and the whole community has to rest under the stigma of these falsehoods; referring to the "Expositor" and if we can prevent the issuing of any more slanderous communications, he would go in for it; it is right for this community to show a proper resentment, and he would go in for suppressing all further communications of the kind.

Councillor H. Smith believed the best way was to smash the press and 'pi', the type.

Councillor Johnson concurred with the councillors who had spoken.

Alderman Bennett referred to the statement of the "Expositor" concerning the Municipal Court in the case of Jeremiah Smith as a libel, and considered the paper a public nuisance.

Councillor Warrington considered his a peculiar situation, as he did not belong to any church or any party; though it might be considered rather harsh for the council to declare the paper a nuisance, and proposed giving a few days' limitation and assessing a fine of $3,000 for every libel and if they would not cease publishing libels to declare it a nuisance and said the statutes made provisions for a fine of $500.

Mayor replied that they threatened to shoot him when at Carthage and the women and others dare not go to Carthage to prosecute, and read a libel from the "Expositor" concerning the imprisonment of Jeremiah Smith.

Councillor H. Smith spoke of the Warsaw Signal and disapproved its libelous course.

Mayor remarked he was sorry to have one dissenting voice in declaring the "Expositor" a nuisance.

Councillor Warrington did not mean to be understood to go against the proposition; but would not be in haste in declaring it a nuisance.

Councillor H. Smith referred to the mortgages and property of the proprietors of the "Expositor" and thought there would be little chance of collecting damages for libels.

Aldermen E. Smith considered there was but one course to pursue, that the proprietors were out of the reach of the law; that our course was to put an end to the thing at once; believed by what he had heard that if the city did not do it, others would.

Councillor Hunter believed it to be a nuisance; referred to the opinion of Judge Pope on habeas corpus and spoke in favor of the charter &c.; asked Francis M. Higbee before the grand jury, if he was not the man he saw at Joseph's house making professions of friendship; Higbee said he was not; [Hundreds know this statement to be false;] he also asked R. D. Foster if he did not state before hundreds of people that he believed Joseph to be a prophet; no said Foster. They were under oath when they said it. [Many hundreds of people are witness to this perjury.]

David was before the death of Uriah, was for making a short work of it, was prepared to take his stand by the Mayor and whatever he proposes, would stand by him to the last. The quicker it is stop the better.

Councillor Phelps had investigated the constitution, charter, and laws: the power to declare that office a nuisance is granted to us, in the Springfield charter, and a resolution declaring it a nuisance is all that is required.

John Birney sworn—said Francis M. Higbee, and Wm. Law, declared they had commenced their operations and would carry them out, law or no law.

Stephen Markham, sworn, said that Francis M. Higbee said the interest of this city is done, the moment a hand is laid on their press.

Councillor Phelps continued, and referred to Wilson Law in destroying the character of a child, an orphan child, who had the charge of another child.

Warren Smith sworn, said, F. M. Higbee came to him, and proposed to have him go in as a partner in making bogus money. Higbee said he would not work for a living; that witness might go in with him, if he would advance fifty dollars and shew him (witness) a half dollar he said was made in his day.

Councillor Phelps continued and said, he felt deeper this day than ever he felt before, and wanted to know, by yes; if there was any present, who wanted to avenge the blood of that innocent female, who had been seduced by the then Major General of the Nauvoo Legion, Wilson Law; when yes! resounded from every quarter of the house; he then referred to the tea plot, at Boston, and asked if any body's rights were taken away with that transaction, and are we offering, or have we offered to take away the rights of any one, these two days? [No!] resounded from every quarter. He then referred also to Law's grinding the poor during the scarcity of grain, while the poor had nothing but themselves to grind; and spoke at great length in support of active measures to put down iniquity, and suppress the spirit of mobocracy.

Alderman Harris spoke from the chair, and expressed his feelings that the press ought to be demolished.

The following resolution was then read and passed unanimously, with the exception of Councillor Warrington:

Resolved By the City Council of the City of Nauvoo, that the printing office from whence issues the "Nauvoo Expositor" is a public nuisance, and also all of said Nauvoo Expositors, which may be, or exist in said establishment, and the Mayor is instructed to cause said printing establishment and papers to be removed without delay, in such manner as he shall direct. Passed June 10th, 1844.

W. RICHARDS, Recorder.

6 o'clock, P. M., Council adjourned.
This certifies that the foregoing is a true and correct synopsis of the proceedings of the City Council of the City of Nauvoo, on the 8th and 10th days of June, 1844, in relation to the Nauvoo Expositor and proprietors, as taken from the minutes of said council.

Proclamation.

Mayor's Office, Nauvoo, June 16, 1844.

As there are a number of statements in circulation which have for their object, the injury of the "Latter day Saints," all of which are false and prompted by blackhearted villains: I therefore deem it my duty to disabuse the public mind in regard to them, and to give a plain statement of facts which have taken place in the city within a few days past, and, which has brought upon us the displeasure of the unprincipled and the uninformed, and seems to afford an opportunity to our enemies, to unite and arouse themselves to mob; and already they have commenced their hellish operations by driving a few defenceless Mormons from their houses and homes in the vicinity of Warsaw and Carthage.

A short time since a press was started in this city which had for its object the destruction of the institutions of the city, both civil and religious: its proprietors are a set of unprincipled scoundrels who attempted in every possible way to defame the character of the most virtuous of our community, and change our peaceful and prosperous city into a place as evil and polluted as their own black hearts. To rid the city of a paper so filthy and pestilential as this, became the duty of every good citizen, who loves good order and morality; a complaint was made before the City Council, and after a full and impartial investigation it was voted—without one dissenting voice, a public NUISANCE, and to be immediately destroyed; the peace and happiness of the place demanded it, the virtue of our wives and daughters demanded, and our consciences demanded it at our hands as conservators of the public peace. That we acted right in this matter we have the assurance of one of the ablest expounders of the laws of England, viz: Blackstone—the constitution of the State of Illinois, and our own chartered rights. If then our charter gives us the power to decide what shall be a nuisance and cause it to be removed, where is the offence? What law is violated? If then no law has been violated, why this ridiculous excitement and bandying with lawless ruffians to destroy the happiness of a people whose religious motto is "peace and good will toward all men?"

Our city is infested with a set of blacklegs, counterfeiters and debauchees, and that the proprietors of this press were of that class, the minutes of the Municipal Court fully testify, and in ridding our young and flourishing city of such characters, we are abused by not only villainous demagogues, but by some who from their station and influence in society, ought rather to raise than depress the standard of human excellence. We have no disturbance or excitement among us, save what is made by the thousand and one idle rumors afloat in the country. Every one is protected in his person and property, and but few cities of a population of twenty thousand people, in the United States, hath less of dissipation or vice of any kind, than the city of Nauvoo.

Of the correctness of our conduct in this affair, we appeal to every high court in the state, and to its ordeal we are willing to appear at any time that His Excellency, Governor Ford shall please to call us before it. I therefore, in behalf of the Municipal Court of Nauvoo, warn the lawless, not to be precipitate in any interference in our affairs, for as sure as there is a God in Israel, we shall ride triumphant over all oppression.

JOSEPH SMITH, Mayor

CAUTION.

HAVING once notified the Public against receiving a certain currency, called "Kirtland Safety Society", I again caution all persons against receiving, or trading in, said paper money as all that was issued as genuine was redeemed; after the first officers who signed said bills retired, a new set of officers were appointed; and the vault of the institution was broken open and robbed, of several hundred thousand dollars the signatures forged upon the said stolen bills, and those bills are being slyly bartered or had in trade for the purpose of willful and malicious prosecution and collection. In the first place, the bills are not collectable by law in an unchartered institution; in the second place they are spurious, the signatures being a forgery, and every person passing or trading a bill is guilty of passing counterfeit money, besides the barefaced act of swindling. And lastly, he that uses said bills in any way as a medium of trade, is guilty of fraud and shows a wicked and corrupt determination to wilfully, maliciously, and feloniously rob the Latter Day Saints; and if the executors of the laws, are as ready to mete out even handed justice to such men as to the Mormons, more indictments, will indicate more honesty. Time will show.

THORN HEDGE:

BY THOS. J. BROOKS.

To the Editors of the Prairie Farmer.—I have had and still do feel quite an interest in western affairs—and at this time in hedging particularly, which I have been trying for myself for four or five years, and now feel very confident of success, through the help of our Irish emigrants. I never could get our native haws or thorn apples to vegetate, till last year. The mode is to take red haws in the fall and place them on a loft, spread thin till late in the fall; and then when the ground is in workable order, to clear all grass and roots from a small patch, like a small tramping floor: then take about as much dry soil as seed, clear of grass roots, incorporate the seed and soil together, and pile in a round heap; then sprinkle a little more soil over it and let it lay till spring; then shovel the pile over each month through the summer, and keep the moles from it; the next spring take the whole mass and sow on a well prepared bed: sow them early or they will sprout and spoil—as I lost many last year; keep them clear of weeds, and transplant next spring to a nursery or hedge as you choose. Our Irish emigrants think they can make a hedge of the native thorns or haws, for less than we can a rail fence.—Mr. Pleasant, Martin co., Ind.

CUTTING WHEAT EARLY.

There is a growing conviction, among farmers, that it is advisable to cut wheat much earlier than has been usually the practice. We have hitherto published some experiments, which establish the fact conclusively, that wheat which is cut while in the milk, is much heavier and makes better flour than that which is cut when fully ripe. These experiments we advert to with the more confidence, as they are corroborated by a great number of experiments made by others, with the same results.

Nor are the incidental advantages of early cutting to be overlooked. A farmer may be able by early cutting, frequently to avoid the calamity of rust, which is often so destructive in large sections of country. Loss by shelling is almost wholly avoided; and the straw if used for feeding cattle, is much enhanced in value.

The grain should not be cut however as soon as it is in milk, as in such case it will shrink; but, while the milk can still be expressed between the thumb and finger; and when the straw has turned yellow a few inches above the roots. At this time, the milk of the grain, will be in the condition of starch or glue. After this, if the grain be allowed to stand, the straw will soon begin to draw upon

EARLY PRAIRIE BREAKING.

To the Editors of the Prairie Farmer: It being near the time of breaking prairie and willing that my experience so far as it goes may be of benefit to those about to enter our Prairie State as cultivators of the soil as well as all others, I give you the result thereof. In May, 1840, I had a few acres of prairie broke, and afterwards about the 1st of August, I had the balance of the field broken. I planted corn on the part broke in May which was about as good a crop as usual. I sowed the whole to wheat in the fall rather late, say about the 1st of October, using the harrow to put it in. Next season the crop on that broke in May was middling while that on the late breaking was not worth harvesting. I have raised a crop on this land every year since. The early breaking invariably fetching a good crop, and the late not more than half a one, last spring. I planted corn on both, the crop on the late breaking was an entire failure owing to the extreme drought of the season. While that on the early breaking was excellent.

Again last May, 1843, about the 20th, I had some prairie broke four inches deep, and about the middle of June some more broken about two and half inches deep, I sowed wheat on the deep and shallow breaking about the first of September, putting it in with the harrow. The wheat on both looked equally well during the fall and early part of winter. This spring the shallow breaking looks the best, the cause I conjecture, being that the shallow breaking was much torn up by the harrow, and thus affording a chance for the wheat to take a deeper root, while the sod on the deep breaking was totally unmoved by the harrow, although the seed seemed perfectly covered. I have cross ploughed some of this last breaking to put a crop in this spring, that is, some of that part that was broken four inches deep, and finding that the grass roots are nearly as well rotted as that broke in August, 1840, some of which I have ploughed this spring. I shall leave your readers to make their own inferences. [Observer.]

How to keep Butter fresh and Sweet for Years.—Among the mass of information furnished by the report of the Commissioner of patents, which is highly interesting to farmers, is an account of a process, hitherto a secret, by which butter may be kept sweet for years, fresh and sweet, in any climate. Most kinds of wool contain considerable quantities of pyroligneous acid, which decomposes salt in butter kept in such tubs. The tinden, or bass wood, is the only one which, it appears by careful experiment is free from it; others, it is stated, may be freed from it and thus rendered suitable, by boiling three or four hours, well pressed under water. Good butter is to be well churned and worked and packed hard and tight in kegs of seasoned white oak.

many will, at all events, make the experiment.

Domestic Silks.—We have just examined specimens of Domestic Silk, manufactured at J. W. Gill's, establishment, Mount Pleasant, Ohio, and for beauty of finish, flexibility of material and general appearance of the articles, we confidently believe it cannot be surpassed by any imported article. They comprise plain and figured velvet, satins and other goods for vestings; dress silks, &c., handkerchiefs, cravats, gloves, and a variety of other staple silks, &c.—Balt. Pat.

Fear.—Thousands through fear of want, want all their lives; and thousands every day, for fear of dying, suffer worse than the pangs of death. The demon fear, trembles at all times at impossible events. Why should we grow pale at the hideous fictions of our own imagination. We should at all times endeavor to be serene and masters of ourselves.

PENNMANSHIP.

MR. A. R. HUNTON, would inform the citizens of Nauvoo, and vicinity, that he is prepared to teach pennmanship to all who may wish to favor him with their patronage. Specimens of his skill can be seen at the Nauvoo Mansion, Masonic Hall and other public places in the city.

At this time, the milk of the grain, will be in the condition of starch or glue. After this, if the grain be allowed to stand, the straw will soon begin to draw upon the kernel for the nourishment which properly belongs to the latter. It was in this condition, that the wheat of Mr. Pell of New York, was cut last season, which weighed 65 pounds to the bushel; and of which he produced a little more than seventy-eight bushels to the acre.

We have been told, however, by an experienced farmer, that this mode of cutting does not answer so well for wheat which is intended for seed. This should be allowed, as he informed us, to ripen fully upon the ground.

As there will probably be an immense harvest this season, it is of additional interest to the farmer to know, that he can proceed to the business earlier than he has been accustomed to, not only without loss, but with decided profit.

LADDER FENCE.

The following more fully answers an inquiry made some time since in relation to this fence:

To the Sugar Grove Institute: I wish to submit for your consideration that I have drawn with a small pair of horses 30 rods of Frost's picket fence at one load a distance of 1 1/2 miles. This fence is the same as the model exhibited at one of our meetings about a year since, and is made of pickets 4 feet long, 2 1/2 inches wide and 1 inch thick, split from timber not long enough for rails. The pickets are inserted at each end in bars or rails 4 1/2 inches wide and 1 1/2 or 2 inches thick, and from 8 to 12 feet long according to convenience. So much is done in the shop in stormy or winter weather or at odd jobs. The fence is put up by crossing the corners as in Virginia fence and inserting a picket through both bars at the angles, which braces it quite strong, or it may be put up in one continuous straight line and secured by stakes each side of the fence and fastened by means of a cap across the top. The fence was drawn for the Messrs. Titus who are fencing a farm with this kind of fence. I am told by Mr. H. Titus, that with his team he can draw enough at one load in good sleighing for 50 rods of fence.

J. J. DENNEY

in August, 1840, so that I have ploughed this spring. I shall leave your readers to make their own inferences. [Observer.]

How to keep Butter fresh and Sweet for Years.—Among the mass of information furnished by the report of the Commissioner of patents, which is highly interesting to farmers, is an account of a process, hitherto a secret, by which butter may be kept sweet for years, fresh and sweet, in any climate. Most kinds of wool contain considerable quantities of pyroligneous acid, which decomposes salt in butter kept in such tubs. The inden, or bass wood, is the only one which, it appears by careful experiment is free from it; others, it is stated, may be freed from it and thus rendered suitable, by boiling three or four hours, well pressed under water. Good butter is to be well churned and worked and packed hard and tight in kegs of seasoned white oak; the head is then put in, leaving a small hole into which brine is poured to fill the vacant space; and of so much importance is it deemed to prevent any bad taste. That the plugs for the hole must not be made of cedar or pine, but of cypress or bass wood, as otherwise it would be injured. After which these kegs are placed in a hogshead, well filled with brine of full solution, that will bear an egg, which is then headed up tight and close. This is the mode pursued in Orange county, New York, and the butter will keep at sea and in warm climates, and commands a very high price.

Mode of Increasing the Growth of Potatoes.—The flowers being cut off as they appeared on the plants, the number of potatoes produced was much greater than where the blossoms had remained untouched. Early in October, the stems and leaves of the plants which had not bore flowers were strong and green—the others yellow and in a state of decay.—The plants which had been stripped of flowers produced (on the same space of ground) about four times the weight of large potatoes, very few small ones being found. Those on which the flowers and fruit were left produced but a small number of middle sized potatoes, with a great number of little ones, from the size of a common filbert to that of a walnut.

The Cut Worm.—Mr. Isaac Newton, an intelligent farmer of Delaware county, says the Germantown Telegraph, has discovered a remedy against the depredations committed by these worms on the young corn. He has tried it several seasons, and in all cases with entire success. It is simply by mixing fine Salt with plaster, in the proportion of one quart of salt to four quarts of plaster, and applying it to the corn after it has come up. Care must be taken not to sprinkle the plant itself with the mixture, otherwise the poisonous qualities of the salt may prove injurious. Mr. Newton states, such is the efficacy of this preparation, that the very next bill to those not thus protected, and left so to rest the remedy were totally destroyed.

The corn crop has no greater enemy than this destructive little animal. Where fields are frequently destroyed by its ravages. If the above remedy be as efficacious as the discoverer asserts, it is certainly one of great importance to the farmer. Its simplicity and cheapness brings it within the reach of all. We doubt not

march 27, 1844. no48-3m.

We wish to correct the false statement carried abroad, by our enemies that steamboats cannot land passengers at this city. Steamboats can land and take passengers as usual.

To disabuse the public mind, we wish briefly to state that the statements of the renegades from this place are false. They left the city at their own instance; they were not threatened or coerced. Their mill is not burned; their office is not burned; T. O. Sharp, editor of the "Warsaw Signal," has not had his life threatened by Hyrum Smith, nor has that gentleman offered a reward to any person who would destroy that office. All these statements are grossly false.

REASON MAKES US MEN.

Nothing is better calculated to exalt men, than, in the midst of vexations, adversity, poverty, or passions, to use reason. The ebullitions of passion, should always be cooled by reason; then the "sober second thought," brings us to reflection, and wisdom directs the mind, not to the comfort and happiness of one, but all. Under such a course of meditation, we have thought it advisable to re-publish a few of the Resolves and orders of the Carthaginians, Warsawians, &c., for the purpose of mobbing, plundering, murdering, and "utterly exterminating," the latter day Saints. Among a multiplicity of other belligerent and other unchristian, un-American, and very mobocratical proceedings, the following are specimens:

"Resolved, That we hold ourselves at all times in readiness to co-operate with our fellow-citizens in this State, Missouri, and Iowa, to exterminate, utterly exterminate, the wicked and abominable Mormon leaders, the authors of our troubles.

"Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed forthwith to notify all persons in our township suspected of being the tools of the Prophet, to leave immediately on pain of instant vengeance. And we do recommend the inhabitants of the adjacent townships to do the same, hereby pledging ourselves to render all the assistance they may require.

"Resolved, That the time, in our opinion has arrived, when the adherents of Smith, as a body, should be driven from the surrounding settlements, into Nauvoo. That the Prophet and his miscreant adherents, should then be demanded at their hands, and if not surrendered, a war of extermination should be waged, to their entire destruction, if necessary for our protection, of his adherents. And we do hereby recommend this resolution to the consideration of the several townships, to the Mass Convention, to be held at Carthage; hereby pledging ourselves to aid, to the utmost, complete consummation of the object in view, that we may thereby be utterly relieved of the alarm, anxiety, and trouble, to which we are now subjected."

"Utterly exterminate!" and "entire destruction, if necessary," are so much above the profession of freemen, and terms of enlightened nations, that we shall leave a candid community to judge what sort of stuff the "Mass Convention" of Carthage, Warsaw and the other allied powers were composed of; which on the 13th and 14th of June, thus liberally dealt out the destinies of the Latter day Saints. It is said somewhere that "sudden and violent resolutions often bring leisurely repentance," but here is a case beyond repentance. O Americans! O freemen! O Christians, what is liberty worth? O sages! O patriots! O professors! What is religion worth? Come out like men, and answer these two questions:—What is liberty and religion worth if you cannot enjoy them? Who is so high, who is so low, who is so sage, and who is so rude, that he cannot stop one moment to blush for the sin of his country!

On the 17th of June the mob issued as follows: their

"LATEST ORDERS.—The citizens of this county are ordered to assemble at their various places of rendezvous, on Wednesday next, by the officer, from whom Smith was rescued, and there to receive general orders to co-operate as a posse to aid in arresting Smith.

"Citizens of the adjoining State, Territory and Counties, who feel interested in bringing to justice the most depraved wretch on earth, will observe that they can join our standard, and act with the posse comitatus without violating any law. We are all prepared in this county to do our duty. If the Governor orders out the Militia, there will be no difficulty—if not we are determined to try the posse comitatus; being assured that the citizens of surrounding counties, and of Missouri and Iowa will join us. As soon as the day for a general co-operation is set, we will notify by a hand bill, all the citizens in the adjacent country."

"Posse comitatus"—with a vengeance! the limits of a county extended over two states and a territory, Governor or no Governor! Well, now, to sustain the constitution of the state and the constitution of the United States, to magnify the law and make it honorable, will not all honest men between the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans and adjoining Continents form a union and free the world from mobs and outlaws, that thus wantonly walk upon religious liberty—murder with impunity, as was the case at Hawn's mill in Missouri! Now is the time for honest men to show themselves! Now is the hour to test who is for constitutional law, and who for murder and robbery. Let patience have her perfect work.

WARSAW NEWS.

The following mobocratic ebullition is the latest news, from the seat of "appeal to arms" and the "We are too weak in this county, without aid to effect our object"; that has come to hand.

WARSAW SIGNAL.—EXTRA.

June 19, 1844.

LATEST NEWS.—The Iowa passed down (6 o'clock, Wednesday evening) and reported that she was not allowed to land her passengers at Nauvoo, the city having been declared by the prophet, under martial law.

THE PREPARATION.

Our town for the last week has been in a constant state of excitement. Business has been almost entirely suspended; and every able bodied man is under arms and almost constantly in drill.

Never did we see exhibited a more determined spirit. An injured and insulted community, suffering under their long born grievances, are determined by an appeal to arms, as a last resort, to redress wrongs that have become insupportable.

On Monday last, about 150 men mustered in this place under the command of General Knox. The attention paid by every man, and the anxiety manifested to acquire a knowledge of military movements, is a full guarantee for the good conduct of our men in the coming emergency.

In Carthage and Green Plains, the citizens are all in arms, and as far as we can hear throughout the county, every man is ready for the conflict.

We have assurances that our neighbors in Missouri and Iowa will aid us. In Clark county, Mo., we understand that many are holding themselves in readiness to march so soon as wanted. From Rushville we have just learned by express that 300 men have enlisted for the struggle. McDonough county, is all alive and ready for the word of command. From Keosauqua, Iowa, we have just received intelligence by a resident of that place, that the citizens are in arms in our behalf, and only wait our call. From Keokuk and the river towns we learn that all are arming. General Stapp of this Brigade, is requested to call out the militia, and hold himself in readiness.

Joe is evidently much alarmed, but he has gone too far to back out. He must toe the mark, or run. Compromise is out of the question. The delegates sent to the Governor have not yet returned. If they fail to procure his interference, a day will be set forthwith, for a general rally à la posse, to assist the officers of justice. As soon as this is done, we will issue a handbill giving notice of the fact. Our friends in surrounding communities, who desire to aid us, will please hold themselves in readiness for this general order. When the word is given, every thing depends on promptness.

Captain Grover last week obtained from Quincy 59 muskets. Men and arms are promised from St. Louis, and every thing betokens prosperity to our enterprise.

To our friends at a distance we say come! We are too weak in this county, without aid to effect our object. Come! you will be doing your God and your country service, in aiding us to rid earth of a most Heaven daring wretch.

6 o'clock, p. m.—D. W. Mathews, who was sent last Sunday to St. Louis, has just returned, by the Die Vernon. He has succeeded in procuring cannon; and has brought up a good supply of ammunition.

Mr. Sympton and Mr. Thompson, have just returned from their trip to Missouri, and report all right, and ready.

A gentleman who conversed with Governor Ford last week, reports, that his excellency said, that he would do all he could in case Joe again defied the laws to bring him to justice. This was before the news of our present difficulties reached him.

We expect a six pounder to-morrow night from Quincy.

8 o'clock, p. m.—We have just learned that Joe has ordered all his followers into Nauvoo. The settlements around are with all despatch obeying the order.

At Lima a company was formed to-day and reported themselves in readiness for orders.

E. A. Thompson, Esq., who saw Governor Ford last week states that an order has been granted by His Excellency, to try Joe Smith by Court Martial, for non-officer like conduct.

Preparations for an appeal to arms! Internal war! Mobbing and bloodshed; and for what! any outrage upon the community, committed with impunity? Not not verily not. But two Laws, two Posters, and two Higbees, with a few other discontented spirits, wish to wreak vengeance on a whole community because forsooth, that community will not lie still and let them destroy them and their rights. Now really if the baser sort of men rush out in war, and murder men, women, and children, for the supposed wrongs of others, they must be thirsty for blood. Where is common sense? where is humanity, and where is the efficient arm of the government, to shield the oppressed from such a tornado of internal wrath and persecution? We will see what the Governor of the State, and the President of the United States will say and do, in such an important, debasing, and power-defying case of "insurrection." If there is any virtue in the American institutions of government, now is the time to exercise it, in favor of law and liberty.

A QUESTION?

Who are the leaders of this mobocratic party? and who the instigators of this excitement is a question that we have often had propounded to us; and now as we have a little leisure, we feel free to take up the subject and to answer the question.

Most of the leaders engaged in this outrage, are men whose characters are so notorious, and whose conduct has been so infamous, that it is unnecessary for us to say any thing about them; among those are Dr. Foster, Francis Higbee, Chauncy Higbee, and Charles Foster. Dr. Foster and the Higbees as debauchees and gamblers, we believe have not a parallel in this city; they have long been a stink in the nostrils of this community; and so far from their being considered honorable, they have been looked upon as common disturbers of the peace, and a pest to society: this the records of our city, bear ample testimony of; and of this the parties themselves feel sufficiently convinced.

Francis Higbee, while being reasoned with by Sidney Rigdon Esq., (one of his old friends) as to the impropriety of his present mode of procedure, said, "I have no character to lose." And it is by this reckless band, without character, without influence, and despised where they are known, that our characters, our property, and our lives are assailed.

But are not William, and Wilson Law, honorable men? They have been looked upon as such, and generally treated as such, until within the last few months. We have been among the number of their friends, and when disclosure after disclosure of a suspicious character was being made, we trampled them under our feet, as unworthy of notice and could not believe that they would do any thing base, or dishonorable; until a full development of circumstances and a regular chain of evidence delivered under oath, forced us reluctantly to believe to the contrary. We had supposed that they were our friends, the friends of Joseph Smith, and the friends of this people, for they had been dandled on their lap and always made loud professions of friendship; but what friend? what patriot? what philanthropist? what honorable, and what but a debased bloodthirsty wretch, would try to excite a community to bring mob, bloodshed, and carnage upon a whole community for the crimes, or alleged crimes, of one or two individuals? Are the lives of fifteen or twenty thousand men, women and children, to be sacrificed indiscriminately to gluf the blood-thirsty appetite of this modern Moloch, this humble, meek man, who with the rankest hypocrisy declared, not much longer than two months ago, under oath, publicly before the city Council, "that he had never known any thing personally against Joseph Smith, that he always had been his friend; that he was now his friend, and that if Joseph Smith was not hurt, until he hurt him, he would live until he was as old as Methuselah." This we heard with our own ears, when we saw these things our eyes began to open, we saw that our confidence had been misplaced, we saw that we had been feeding a viper and cherishing an adder in the path. We certainly were very much disappointed, when we saw him unite with the Fosters, Higbees, and Jackson; we wondered that he could condescend to associate with such a gang; believing the old adage, that "birds of a feather will flock together;" we thought he was descending very low, but not until some recent developments, did the full truth rest upon our mind, that this people had long been cherishing one of the veriest scoundrels and hypocrites in their bosom that ever disgraced the footstool of God. That man is an honorable man who meets you in the highway, and robs you of your purse, in comparison to the wretch, who embraces you with a kiss and plunges a dagger to your heart. And however reluctantly we are obliged to believe, that William Law has long been the secret enemy of Joseph Smith, and of this people; and that whilst he has been one of Joseph Smith's counsellors and professing the most sacred friendship, that he has been secretly plotting with a gang of scoundrels to take away his life. Well may the inspired penman say, "curse is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm."

During the time that O. P. Rockwell, was confined in jail in Mo. for the alleged murder of Es-Governor Boggs, and at the time that a demand had been made by the executive of the State of Mo. upon the executive of this State, for the body of Gen. Joseph Smith, letters were sent by Mrs. Rockwell, (who was on a visit to her husband,) and conversations heard by her, to this effect, "that a plot was concocting to kidnap Joseph Smith and that one of Joseph Smith's nearest friends would lead them to him. Other developments of a similar kind were made, but no particular person identified. As there was some little misunderstanding between Sidney Rigdon, Esq. & Gen. Smith at the time, suspicion attached itself very strongly to him, Mr. Rigdon however cleared himself satisfactorily of the charge, and it was not known until recently who it was that was engaged in this diabolical plot. The following statement however, made before the city Council, shews clearly who the "BRUTUS" was!

Daniel Carns, sworn, said that about 10 o'clock at night, a boat came up the river with about a dozen men. Wm. Law came to the gate with them, witness on guard, stopped them. Law called Joseph to the door, and wanted an interview. Joseph said, Bro. Law you know better than to come here at this hour of the night, and Law retired—next morning Law wrote a letter to apologize, which witness heard read—which was written apparently to screen himself from the taint of a conspiracy, and the letter betrayed a conspiracy on the face of it.

A gentleman present at the city Council, when these disclosures were made, being in possession of facts relative to Wm. Law, but being as incredulous as ourselves relative to the dishonesty of Wm. Law, until he heard those disclosures has made the following affidavit.

State of Illinois, June 18th, 1844.

City of Nauvoo. Personally appeared Truman Gillet jun. before me Willard Richards, Recorder of the city of Nauvoo. And after being duly sworn, deposed and said, that on or about the first day of June 1842, while passing up the Ohio river on Steamboat Massachusetts, deponent overheard two men, one a resident of Missouri, and the other of Ohio, as reported, conversing together concerning incidents on the Upper Mississippi; when one said to the other, "if Law could have succeeded in getting an introduction for us to Joe Smith, dam him, we would have gagged him, or nabbed him and all hell could not have rescued him from our hands." The next morning deponent got into conversation with the man before mentioned from Missouri, who stated that he "had been on the upper Mississippi on business; that he stopped at Nauvoo on his way down, with some twelve or fourteen other men, who laid a plan to kidnap Joe Smith, that some of the company had about getting access to him; but that they said he knew they could if they could find Wm. Law; they called on Wm. Law, in the evening to get an interview to their great Prophet; and Law went with them to the gate, when they were stopped by the police, and it was well for him that we did not succeed in getting an introduction to him. Deponent said, did Wm. Law know your business? and he replied, yes! Deponent asked what have you against Joseph Smith? Did he ever injure you? The man replied "no, but he has others." Did you ever see him? Yes, I was one who helped to run the Mormons from Missouri;" and related many circumstances concerning the Missouri mob. Deponent said to the man, he was acquainted with Wm. Law, considered he was an honorable man, and was led to doubt his being engaged with them in a conspiracy against Joseph Smith. He replied "God dam you, it is true whether you believe it or not." And repeatedly affirmed it. Deponent did not believe the statements of the man from Missouri as mentioned above, until after hearing the recent developments before the city Council.

TRUMAN GILLET, Jun.

Sworn and subscribed at the time and place above written before me.

WILLARD RICHARDS,

Recorder, C. N. [L.S.]

What are we to conclude from the above? Add to these the following testimony delivered before the city council:

"Theodore Turley, a mechanic, who being sworn, said that the Laws, (Wm. and Wilson), had brought bogus dies to him to fix."

Couple this with the following oath:

"Lorenzo Wasson, sworn, said Joseph H. Jackson, told witness, that bogus making was going on in the city; but it was too damned small business. Wanted witness to help him to procure money, for the General (Smith) was afraid to go into it, and with $500 he could get an engraving for bills, on the bank of Missouri, and one on the state of New York, and could make money, said many times witness did not know him; believed the General had been telling witness something. God damn him if he has I will kill him,—swore he would kill any man that should prove a traitor to him. Jackson said if he could get a company of men to suit him, he would go into the frontiers and live by high-way robbery, had got sick of the world."

Now let us ask, who was William Law? who were the people with whom he was associated, and what is the nature of this band, organized against the Mormons?

Is it surprising with this testimony before them and a great deal more of a similar kind which we cannot now transcribe, that the city Council have taken the steps they have taken, evidence before them, and the Law and the Higbees, and the other mob men, and that the mob was libel from beginning to end?

Is not the above indubitable testimony concerning the character of Wm. Law? Are a virtuous people to be condemned because they have the moral courage to put a stop to blacklegs, counterfeiters, and the veriest scoundrels and snakes, that ever poisoned community. Good heavens what are we coming to! Has it come to this, that renegades, blacklegs, and counterfeiters, have sufficient influence to excite the feelings of a community, so as to come armed against a virtuous, innocent, and law-abiding people; and is there no power to check the torrent? Are there no persons to be found who have the moral courage to meet the hydra-headed monster, and stand up in defence of those institutions for which our fathers bled: to maintain free trade and sailors' rights?"

Answer, patriots, and republicans!—Shall the venerable fathers of our country speak? Shall human rights and republican institutions be trampled under foot, by lawless miscreants in the very temple of freedom, which yet reeks with the blood of our venerable sires? (M. Cannon.)

For the Neighbor.

State of Illinois, June 18th, 1844; Daniel H. Wells, Justice of the Peace presiding.

State of Illinois, vs Joseph Smith, Samuel Bennett, John Taylor Wm. W. Phelps, Hyrum Smith, John P. Green, Stephen Perry, Dimic B. Huntington, Jonathan Dunham, Stephen Markham, Jonathan Holmes, Jesse C. Harniss, John Lytle, Joseph W. Coolidge, Harvey D. Redfield, O. Porter Rockwell and Levi Richards.

Defendants were brought before the court by Joel S. Miles, constable of the county aforesaid, by virtue of a warrant issued by the court on complaint of W. G. Ware, for a 'Riot committed' in the city of Nauvoo, county aforesaid, on or about the 10th day of June, 1844, by forcibly entering a brick building, in said city occupied as a printing office, and taking therefrom by force, and with force of arms a printing press, types and paper, together with other property belonging to Wm. Law, Wilson Law, Robert D. Foster, Charles A. Foster, F. M. Higbee, Chauncy L. Higbee and Charles Ivins, and breaking in pieces and burning the same in the streets.

George P. Stiles Esq. appeared as counsel for the defence and Edward Bonney Esq. for the prosecution.

W. G. Ware sworn, said he was present when the city council passed an order for the destruction of the press; went up to the Temple and heard the Marshal read the order of the Mayor; did not know how they got into the building; the press was taken out and destroyed.

Defendant's council objected to witness stating what voted for the passage of the bill in the council, and read Burns' definition of a riot, and said there could be no necessary.

Counsellor Bonney read from the statute, page 173, and read there might be an accessory to a riot.

Court decided there might be an accessory to any crime either before or after the fact.

Witness knew some who voted for the order in the city council, heard Gen. Dunham give orders for the destruction of the press; Dunham, Redfield and Richards took an active part in the destruction of the press. Did not know all the persons.

Cross examined.—City Council considered the press a nuisance and ordered it to be abated; was present at the execution of the Mayor's orders; no unnecessary noise; all was done peaceably; saw no disorder; heard no language by the prisoners calculated to disturb the peace.

H. O. Norton sworn.—was at the printing office; heard Marshal Green give orders to open the door. Markham carried out the press and type; recollected Dunham; could not identify any others; no contention between the Marshal and Higbee; Marshal asked Chas. A. Foster for the key which he refused to give; heard no threats concerning the destruction of the press at any time.

O. E. Moessour sworn.—saw many people gather around the printing office; went over, back, and over again; could not identify any person; heard no loud talking or noise.

P. L. Rolfe sworn.—was at work in the printing office last Monday night; C. Higbee came in and said the council was about to destroy the press; took some papers from the desk; Marshal Green came with a company and demanded the key. Foster and Higbee forced him; door was opened by Lytle, as witness thought; the press and fixtures were destroyed; some paper and a desk belonging to Dr. Foster containing several thousand dollars of property, a good number of warrants and other valuable papers.

Cross examined.—Did not know the amount of warrants or papers; presumed they were destroyed; did not know whether they were destroyed; was from the office long enough to have them taken out. Saw Green, Dunham, Markham, Holmes, Perry, Edwards and Harniss helped move the press. Never knew any thing against Joseph Smith personally.

Dr. J. R. Wakefield, (of New York) said he went on the Hill after the order passed the Council, saw some portion of the Legion collected, walking quietly along as though they were walking to the dead march in 'San'; there was no noise or tumult. Higbee asked the Marshal his authority, Marshall stated his authority from the Mayor for abating the nuisance. Higbee set them all at defiance, some twelve men were called out who went up stairs and opened the door, did not know how the door was opened; there was not more than one thump; Marshall Green asked one of the officers if any thing was destroyed except what belonged to the Press and the officer replied no! All was done in perfect order, as peaceably as people move on a Sunday; was present all the time, all that was done, was done in their official capacity as officers of the city.

Counsellor Bonney objected to the testimony, as it was not before the court that there was any city.

Court decided that any knowledge in possession of the Court was testimony in the Court.

E. Wingott, (of Boston) concurred in Dr. Wakefield's statements, was by the door when it was opened, and knew that nothing more than a knee was put against it; all was done quietly; was present in city council when the order passed, nothing said in council except what was said in capacity of counsellor and aldermen,—was by the door all the time when the press and type and things used in connexion with the press was destroyed; There was no other property taken from the building.

Cross examined.—Did not know the name of the man who opened the door—knew O. P. Rockwell.

Willard Richards read the resolutions of the city council of the 10th inst., declaring the press a nuisance, &c., and the Mayor's order to the Marshal to destroy the press; and the Lieut. General's order to Major Gen. Dunham, to assist the Marshal with the Legion if needed, to abate the nuisance; and the Marshal's return that the press and type were destroyed; [as published in the "Neighbor" June 19.]

Court queried about the destruction of the desk.

Dr. Wakefield was again called up; heard Marshal tell the officers and men, to hurt no property except the press, type and fixtures; and after the abatement Marshall enquired if his order had been obeyed, and the officers said it had.

E. Wingott called again heard Mr. Foster ask Higbee for the key of the office, and afterwards saw him deliver the key to Mr. Higbee; there was nothing destroyed but what pertained to the press.

Addison Everett (of New York) sworn.—saw the press and type taken out and burned—saw no other property burned; desk might have been taken away before—should not have seen it if it had been—saw no desk burned—does not believe any desk was burned.

Joel S. Miles sworn.—Foster said his docket was not burned. Witness was sure that Dr. Foster said he had taken other papers out of the desk.

W. G. Ware called again saw Charles Foster coming from the office, and go into Foster's house, with books under his arm; looked like account books—saw nothing but the press and fixtures brought out and burnt in chains, and the Marshal ordered it carried back.

E. Wingott, recalled—stood close by the door; could see all that was done, did not believe a desk could be brought out and he not see it.

Dr. Wakefield recalled.—Joseph Smith and Hyrum were not on the Hill at all that evening.

Joseph W. Coolidge was deposed to the court, and sworn; Charles A. Foster, Francis Higbee, and F. M. Higbee, were called up and sworn.

Witness was present at the destruction of the press, and saw the press and type taken out and burned.

Cross examined.—Did not know the amount of warrants or papers; presumed they were destroyed; did not know whether they were destroyed; was from the office long enough to have them taken out. Saw Green, Dunham, Markham, Holmes, Perry, Edwards and Harniss helped move the press. Never knew any thing against Joseph Smith personally.

tion, or his adherents. And we do hereby recommend this resolution to the consideration of the several townships, to the Mass Convention, to be held at Carthage; hereby pledging ourselves to aid, to the utmost, complete consummation of the object in view, that we may thereby be utterly relieved of the alarm, anxiety, and trouble, to which we are now subjected."

"Utterly exterminate!" and "entire destruction, if necessary," are so much above the profession of freemen, and terms of enlightened nations, that we shall leave a candid community to judge what sort of stuff the "Mass Convention" of Carthage, Warsaw and the other allied powers were composed of; which on the 13th and 14th of June, thus liberally dealt out the destinies of the Latter day Saints. It is said somewhere that "sudden and violent resolutions often bring leisure repentance," but here is a case beyond repentance. O Americans! O freemen! O Christians, what is liberty worth? O sages! O patriots! O professors! What is religion worth? Come out like men, and answer these two questions:—What is liberty and religion worth if you cannot enjoy them? Who is so high, who is so low, who is so sage, and who is so rude, that he cannot stop one moment to blush for the sin of his country!

On the 17th of June the mob issued as follows: their

"LATEST ORDERS.—The citizens of this county are ordered to assemble at their various places of rendezvous, on Wednesday next, by the officer, from whom Smith was rescued, and there to receive general orders to co-operate as a posse to aid in arresting Smith.

"Citizens of the adjoining State, Territory and Counties, who feel interested in bringing to justice the most depraved wretch on earth, will observe that they can join our standard, and act with the posse comitatus without violating any law. We are all prepared in this county to do our duty. If the Governor orders out the Militia, there will be no difficulty—if not we are determined to try the posse comitatus; being assured that the citizens of surrounding counties, and of Missouri and Iowa will join us. As soon as the day for a general co-operation is set, we will notify by a hand bill, all the citizens in the adjacent country."

"Posse comitatus"—with a vengeance! the limits of a county extended over two states and a territory, Governor or no Governor! Well, now, to sustain the constitution of the state and the constitution of the United States, to magnify the law and make it honorable, will not all honest men between the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans and adjoining Continents form for the struggle. McDonough county, is all alive and ready for the word of command. From Keosauqua, Iowa, we have just received intelligence by a resident of that place, that the citizens are in arms in our behalf, and only wait our call. From Keokuk and the river towns we learn that all are arming. General Stapp of this Brigade, is requested to call out the militia, and hold himself in readiness.

Joe is evidently much alarmed, but he has gone too far to back out. He must toe the mark, or run. Compromise is out of the question. The delegates sent to the Governor have not yet returned. If they fail to procure his interference, a day will be set forthwith, for a general rally as a posse, to assist the officers of justice. As soon as this is done, we will issue a handbill giving notice of the fact. Our friends in surrounding communities, who desire to aid us, will please hold themselves in readiness for this general order. When the word is given, every thing depends on promptness.

Captain Grover last week obtained from Quincy 59 muskets. Men and arms are promised from St. Louis, and every thing betokens prosperity to our enterprise.

To our friends at a distance we say come! We are too weak in this county, without aid to effect our object. Come! you will be doing your God and your country service, in aiding us to rid earth of a most Heaven daring wretch.

6 o'clock, p. m.—D. W. Mathews, who was sent last Sunday to St. Louis, has just returned, by the Die Vernon. He has succeeded in procuring cannon; and has brought up a good supply of ammunition.

Mr. Sympton and Mr. Thompson, have just returned from their trip to Missouri, and report all right, and ready.

A gentleman who conversed with Governor Ford last week, reports, that his excellency said, that he would do all he could in case Joe again defied the laws to bring him to justice. This was before the news of our present difficulties reached him.

We expect a six pounder to-morrow night from Quincy.

8 o'clock, p. m.—We have just learned that Joe has ordered all his followers into Nauvoo. The settlements around are with all despatch obeying the order.

At Lima a company was formed today and reported themselves in readiness for orders.

E. A. Thompson, Esq., who saw Governor Ford last week states that an order has been granted by His Excellency, to try Joe Smith by Court Martial, for unofficer like conduct.

"Preparations for an appeal to arms!" Internal war! Mobbing and bloodshed; and for what? any outrage known, that our characters, our property, and our lives are assailed.

But are not William, and Wilson Law, honorable men? They have been looked upon as such, and generally treated as such, until within the last few months. We have been among the number of their friends, and when disclosure after disclosure of a suspicious character was being made, we trampled them under our feet, as unworthy of notice and could not believe that they would do any thing base, or dishonorable; until a full development of circumstances and a regular chain of evidence delivered under oath, forced us reluctantly to believe to the contrary. We had supposed that they were our friends, the friends of Joseph Smith, and the friends of this people, for they had been dandled on their lap and always made loud professions of friendship; but what friend? what patriot? what philanthropist? what honorable, and what but a debased bloodthirsty wretch, would try to excite a community to bring mob, bloodshed, and carnage upon a whole community for the crimes, or alleged crimes, of one or two individuals? Are the lives of fifteen or twenty thousand men, women and children, to be sacrificed indiscriminately, to glut the bloodthirsty appetite of this modern Moloch; this humble, meek man, who with the rankest hypocrisy declared, not much longer than two months ago, under oath, publicly before the city Council, "that he had never known any thing personally against Joseph Smith, that he always had been his friend; that he was now his friend, and that if Joseph Smith was not hurt, until he hurt him, he would live until he was as old as Methuselah." This we heard with our own ears, when we saw these things our eyes began to open, we saw that our confidence had been misplaced, we saw that we had been feeding a viper and cherishing an adder in the path. We certainly were very much disappointed, when we saw him unite with the Fosters, Higbees, and Jackson; we wondered that he could condescend to associate with such a gang; believing the old adage, that "birds of a feather will flock together;" we thought he was descending very low, but not until some recent developments, did the full truth rest upon our mind, that this people had long been cherishing one of the veriest sycophants and hypocrites in their bosom that ever disgraced the footstool of God. That man is an honorable man who meets you in the highway, and robs you of your purse, in comparison to the wretch, who embraces you with a kiss and plunges a dagger to your heart. And however reluctantly we are obliged to believe, that William Law has long been the secret enemy of Joseph Smith, and of this people; and that whilst he has been one of Joseph Smith's counsellors and professing the most sacred friendship, that he has been secretly plotting with a gang of scoundrels to take away his life. Well may the inspired penman say, "cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm."

During the time that O. P. Rockwell, was confined in jail in Mo. for the alleged murder of Ex-Governor Boggs, and plan to kidnap Joe Smith, that some of the company queried about getting access to him; but one of them said he knew they could if he could find Wm. Law: they called on Wm. Law, in the evening to get an interview to their great Prophet; and Law went with them to the gate, when they were stopped by the police, and it was well for him that we did not succeed in getting an introduction to him. Deponent said, did Wm. Law know your business? and he replied, yes! Deponent asked what have you against Joseph Smith? Did he ever injure you? The man replied "no, but he has others." Did you ever see him? Yes, I was one who helped to run the Mormons from Missouri; and related many circumstances concerning the Missouri mob. Deponent said to the man, he was acquainted with Wm. Law, considered he was an honorable man, and was led to doubt his being engaged with them in a conspiracy against Joseph Smith. He replied "God dam you, it is true whether you believe it or not." And repeatedly affirmed it. Deponent did not believe the statements of the man from Missouri as mentioned above, until after hearing the recent developments before the city Council.

TRUEMAN GILLETT, Jun.

Sworn and subscribed at the time and place above written before me.

WILLARD RICHARDS,
Recorder, C. N. [L.S.]

What are we to conclude from the above? Add to these the following testimony delivered before the city council:

"Theodore Turley, a mechanic, who being sworn, said that the Laws, (Wm. and Wilson,) had brought bogus dies to him to fix."

Couple this with the following oath:

"Lorenzo Wasson, sworn, said Joseph H. Jackson, told witness, that bogus making was going on in the city;—but it was too damned small business. Wanted witness to help him to procure money, for the General (Smith) was afraid to go into it, and with $500 he could get an engraving for bills, on the bank of Missouri, and on the state of New York, and could make money,—said many times witness did not know him; believed the General had been telling witness something. God damn him if he has I will kill him,—swore he would kill any man that should prove a traitor to him. Jackson said if he could get a company of men to suit him, he would go into the frontiers and live by high-way robbery, had got sick of the world."

Now let us ask, who was William Law? who were the people with whom he was associated, and what is the nature of this band organized against the mormons?

Is it surprising with this testimony before them and a great deal more of a similar kind which we cannot now together with other property belonging to Wm. Law, Wilson Law, Robert D. Foster, Charles A. Foster, F. M. Higbee, Chauncey L. Higbee and Charles Ivins, and breaking in pieces and burning the same in the streets."

George P. Stiles Esq. appeared as council for the defence and

Edward Bonny Esq. for the prosecution.

W. G. Ware sworn, said he was present when the city council passed an order for the destruction of the press; went up to the Temple and heard the Marshal read the order of the Mayor; did not know how they got into the building; the press was taken out and destroyed.

Defendant's council objected to witness stating who voted for the passage of the bill in the council, and read Burns' definition of a riot, and said there could be no necessary.

Counsellor Bonny read from the statute, page 173, and plead there might be an accessory to a riot.

Court decided there might be an accessory to any crime either before or after the fact.

Witness knew some who voted for the order in the city council, heard Gen. Dunham give orders for the destruction of the press; Dunham, Redfield and Richards took an active part in the destruction of the press. Did not know all the persons.

Cross examined—City Council considered the press a nuisance and ordered it to be abated; was present at the execution of the Mayor's orders; no unnecessary noise; all was done peaceably; saw no disorder; heard no language by the prisoners calculated to disturb the peace.

H. O. Norton sworn—was at the printing office; heard Marshal Green give orders to open the door. Markham carried out the press and type; recollected Dunham; could not identify any others; no contention between the Marshal and Higbee; Marshal asked Chas. A. Foster for the key which he refused to give; heard no threats concerning the destruction of the press at any time.

O. F. Moesieur sworn—saw many people gather around the printing office; went over, back, and over again; could not identify any person; heard no loud talking or noise.

P. T. Rolfe sworn—was at work in the printing office last Monday night; C. Higbee came in and said the council was about to destroy the press and took some papers from the desk; Marshal Green came with a company and demanded the key. Foster and Higbee forbid him; door was opened by Lytle, as witness thought; the press and fixtures were destroyed; some paper and a desk belonging to Dr. Foster containing several thousand dollars of property. $4000 auditor's warrants and other valuable papers.

Cross examined—Did not know the amount of warrants or papers; presumed they were destroyed; did not know they were destroyed; did not know whether they were destroyed; was from the office long enough to have them taken out. Said Green, Dunham, Markham, Holmes, Perry, Edwards and Harman helped move the press. Never knew any thing against Joseph Smith personally.

E. Wingott, [of Boston] concurred in Dr. Wakefield's statements; was by the door when it was opened, and knew that nothing more than a knee was put against it; all was done quietly; was present in city council when the order passed, nothing said in council except what was said in capacity of counsellor and aldermen,—was by the door all the time when the press and type, and things used in connexion with the press was destroyed; There was no other property taken from the building.

Cross examined.—Did not know the name of the man who opened the door—knew O. P. Rockwell.

Willard Richards read the resolutions of the city council of the 10th inst., declaring the press a nuisance &c.; and the Mayor's order to the Marshal to destroy the press; and the Lieut. Generals order to Major Gen. Dunham, to assist the Marshal with the Legion, if needed, to abate the nuisance; and the Marshal's return that the press and type were destroyed. [as published in the "Neighbor" June 19.]

Court queried about the destruction of the desk.

Dr. Wakefield was again called up; heard Marshal tell the officers and men, to hurt no property except the press, type and fixtures; and after the abatement Marshal enquired if his order had been obeyed, and the officers said it had.

E. Wingott called again; heard Mr. Foster ask Higbee for the key of the office, and afterwards saw him deliver the key to Mr. Higbee; there was nothing destroyed but what pertained to the press.—

Addison Everett [of New York] sworn;—saw the press and type taken out and burned—saw no other property burned; desk might have been taken away before—should not have seen it if it had been; saw no desk burned,—does not believe any desk was burned.

Joel S. Miles sworn—Foster said his docket was not burned. Witness was sure that Dr. Foster said he had taken other papers out of the desk.

W. G. Ware called again; saw Charles Foster coming from the office, and go into Foster's house, with books under his arm; looked like account books—saw nothing but the press and fixtures brought out except a chain, and the marshal ordered it carried back.

E. Wingott, recalled—stood close by the door; could see all that was done, did not believe a desk could be brought out and he not see it.

Dr. Wakefield recalled—Joseph Smith, and Hyrum were not on the Hill at all that evening.

Joseph W. Coolidge was discharged by the court and sworn; Charles Foster asked Francis Higbee for the key to the office, Higbee hesitated; Foster said he wanted to get a desk that had some valuable papers in it—Foster got the key and went in; did not see him remove the desk, might have removed it and witness not see it, there was no desk burned.

The counsellors submitted the case without plea; and the court discharged the prisoners.

And the drops like music rang—
And of those who marvelled how it shone,
Was a proud man, left, in his shame, alone;
And he shut his teeth with a smothered groan
And the Fountain sweetly sang.

And a rainbow spanned it changefully,
Like a bright ring broke in twain;
And the pale, fair girl who stopped to see,
Was sick with the pangs of poverty—

And figur' hunger to guilt she chose to flee
As the rainbow smiled again,
And all as gay, on another day,
The morning will have shone;

And at noon, unmarked through bright broad-

A hearse will take its silent way;
And the bard who sings will have passed away
And the Fountain will play on!

MESSAGE FROM PRESIDENT TYLER TO THE U. S. STATES, RELATIVE TO THE MESSENGER TO MEXICO.

To the Senate of the U. States:

In answer to the resolution of the senate of the 13th instant, requesting to be informed "whether a messenger has been sent to Mexico, with a view to obtain her consent to the treaty with Texas, and, if so, to communicate to the senate a copy of the despatches of which he is the bearer and a copy of the instructions given to said messenger; and also to inform the senate within what time said messenger is expected to return." I have to say, that no messenger has been sent to Mexico in order to obtain her consent to the treaty with Texas, it not being regarded by the executive as in any degree requisite to obtain such consent in order (should the senate ratify the treaty) to perfect the title of the U. States to the territory thus acquired—the title to the same being full and perfect without the assent of any third power. The executive has negotiated with Texas as an independent power of the world, long since recognized as such by the U. States and other powers, and as subordinate in all her rights of full sovereignty to no other power. A messenger has been despatched to our Minister at Mexico, as bearer of the despatch already communicated to the senate, and which is to be found in the letter addressed to Mr. Green, and forms a part of the documents ordered confidentially to be printed for the use of the senate. That despatch was dictated by a desire to preserve the peace of the two countries, by denying to Mexico all pretext for assuming a belligerent attitude to the United States, as she had threatened to do in the

the following story. He said he was lying in the grave yard the night before, when Brundage brought in a woman and child and buried them.—The grave was immediately opened, and the bodies of the woman and child were found in it. Brundage was forthwith arrested, and is now in the jail at Niagara awaiting his trial.

Important from Washington.—The National Intelligencer of Thursday morning last brings, us the following highly important intelligence from Washington: Late last evening, after an executive session of several hours, the senate removed the injunction of secrecy from the treaty, and documents accompanying it, for the annexation of Texas. We have not of course, had any opportunity of examining these papers, but we learn orally that by a communication from the President yesterday, the Senate was informed that he had ordered a military force to repair the frontier of Texas, to open a communication with the President of that republic, and act as circumstances might require; and also ordered a naval force to Vera cruz, to remain off that port, and prevent any naval expedition of Mexico, if any such should be attempted, from proceeding against Texas!

Great Flood.—The St. Louis papers of last Saturday give the particulars of a tremendous rise in the Mississippi river, which is higher than it has been for many years.—The Republican says that the cellars on the wharf were all filling with water, and the river was still rising notwithstanding an immense volume of water is pouring over the Illinois shore. The people are deserting their houses in Illinois town. A letter from Alton says that the Illinois side, at the point where it strikes the Illinois side, was making fearful work upon the shore, and it was apprehended that the abrasion might be so completed as to change the channel within the present year, leaving St. Louis an inland town.

Boats from above St. Louis report the Missouri and Osage rivers to be rising very rapidly and overflowing the bottoms on both sides.

ASTONISHING NEWS

Rapid Flight.—The New York Express of the 13th inst., gives the subjoined "Postscript," which if true, yet does all other rapid feats of travelling yet accomplished under the sun. We are willing to let our readers judge whether

An Earthly Paradise, where December is as pleasant as May.—The following is an extract from a description of California, one of the departments of Mexico, on the Pacific ocean, which recently appeared in the St. Louis New Era:

"The climate is perpetual spring, neither the heat of the summer nor the cold of the winter is experienced. It is as mild on the pacific side in lat. 45 deg. N. as it is in lat 34 deg N. on the Atlantic side. The cause of this difference of climate in the same latitude, I suppose to be the prevailing winds from the north during the summer, and from the south during the winter. In fact the effect is so great, that in many places on the coast, it is warmer in the winter than in the summer, even in lat. 37 and 38 deg. N. Standing water has never been known to freeze thicker than common window glass; running water is never known to freeze. No fires are required in sitting rooms, offices, or shops, at any season of the year; consequently fuel is never required for any other than culinary purposes;

It may be truly said of this country, that December is as pleasant as May. Now the vast herds of beasts, wild and domestic, instead of roaming over frozen and desolate hills or fields of ice and snow, driven by the howling tempest from side to side, or shivering in the chilling cavern or frozen stall, bellowing and howling for protection against nature's hard fate, are seen through this horbois and delightful region in herds innumerable, ranging promiscuously from river to river, and from hill to dale, cropping the inexhaustable and spontaneous vegetation.

What must have been the feelings of the widow of Cilley, when news was brought her of the death of her husband? Left with several small children to provide for—deprived of a beloved husband by a pack of blood thirsty murderers, who were certain to escape with impunity because of their position in life—plunged from comfortable circumstances into poverty—and laughed at by the villains who robbed her of her husband and means of support.—What must have been the state of her mind when all this ration? You who are happy in your families can judge of what would be your feelings under like circumstances. Every woman in the land is bound to use her influence against the adviser in this cold blooded murder!—Every man with the least spark of feeling in his bosom should

Important Treaty.—The treaty concluded between the German League and the United States is said to be now communicated to the Senate. It reduces the duty on tobacco about 40 per cent, and admits cotton, iard and rice at a mere nominal duty. In no case is the duty lowered on German products more than ten per cent., and that only on articles not the product of the United States.—Jeffersonian.

NAUVOO NEIGHBOR, EXTRA.

Friday, 5 o'clock, a. m., June 21.

☆ We wish to correct the false statement carried abroad, by our enemies that steamboats cannot land passengers at this city. Steamboats can land and take passengers as usual.

To disabuse the public mind, we wish briefly to state that the statements of the renegades from this place are false. They left the city at their own instance; they were not threatened or menaced—their mill is not burned; their office is not burned; T. C. Sharp, editor of the "Warsaw Signal," has not had his life threatened by Hyrum Smith, nor has that gentleman offered a reward to any person who would destroy that office. All these statements are grossly false.

REASON MAKES US MEN.

Nothing is better calculated to exalt men, than, in the midst of vexations, adversity, poverty, or passions, to use reason. The ebullitions of passion, should always be cooled by reason: then the 'sober second thought', brings us to reflection, and wisdom directs the mind, not to the comfort and happiness of one, but all. Under such a course of meditation, we have thought it advisable to re-publish a few of the Resolves and orders of the Carthaginians, Warsaw-vains, &c., for the purpose of mobbing, plundering, murdering, and "utterly exterminate," the latter day Saints. Among a multiplicity of other belligerent and other unchristian, un-American, and very mobocratical proceedings, the following are specimens:

"Resolved, That we hold ourselves at all times in readiness to co-operate with our fellow-citizens in this State, utterly exterminate, the wicked and abominable Mormon leaders, the authors of our troubles.

"Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed forthwith to notify all persons in our township suspected of being the tools of the Prophet, to leave

co-operate as a posse to aid in arresting Smith.

"Citizens of the adjoining State, Territory and Counties, who feel interested in bringing to justice the most depraved wretch on earth, will observe that they can join our standard, and act with the posse comitatus without violating any law. We are all prepared in this county to do our duty. If the Governor orders out the Militia, there will be no difficulty—if not we are determined to try the posse comitatus; being assured that the citizens of surrounding counties, and of Missouri and Iowa will join us. As soon as the day for a general co-operation is set, we will notify by a hand bill, all the citizens in the adjacent country."

"Posse comitatus"—with a vengeance! the limits of a county extended over two states and a territory; Governor or no Governor! Well, now, to sustain the constitution of the state and the constitution of the United States, to magnify the law and make it honorable, will not all honest men between the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans and adjoining Continents form a union and free the world from mobs and outlaws, that thus wantonly walk upon religious liberty,—murder with impunity, as was the case at Hawn's mill in Missouri! Now is the time for honest men to shew themselves! Now is the hour to test who is for constitutional law, and who for murder and robbery. Let patience have her perfect work.

WARSAW NEWS.

The following mobocratic ebullition is the latest news, from the seat of "appeal to arms" and the "We are too weak in this county, without aid to effect our object", that has come to hand.

POETRY.

Write as I do—there is no mistake about it—not always, even when he writes verses, but in the main, and decidedly. He has been a little hackneyed by the sensations of a life too public and a career too flattered for the Poet—he shows this in his every day prose, and in his pleasant but not masculine tales of Society, but his verses, even those written on the sober side of thirty, bespeak a still warm, sunny heart. Yet we like his early Poems better—such as these:

THE SOLDIER'S WIDOW.

[Written for a Picture.]

Wo for my vine-clad home!
That it should ever be so dark to me,
With its bright threshold, and its whispering [tree]
That I should ever come,
Fearing the only echo of a tread
Beneath the roof-tree of my glorious dead!

Lead on, my orphan boy!
Thy home is not so desolate to thee—
And thy low shiver in the linden tree
May bring to thee a joy!
But oh, how dark is the bright home before [ther],
To her with a joyous spirit before thee!

Lead on! for thou art now
My sole remaining helper. God hath spoken
And the strong heart I leaned upon is broken;
And I have seen his brow—
The forehead of my upright one, and just—Trod by the hoof of battle in the dust.

He will not meet thee there
Who blest thee at the even tide, my son!
And when the shadows of the night steal on,
He will not call to prayer.
The lips that melted, giving thee to God,
Are in the icy keeping of the sod!

Ah, my own boy! thy sire
Is with the sleepers of the valley cast.
And the proud glory of my life hath passed
With his high glance of fire.
Wo that the linden and the vine should bloom
And a just man gathered to the tomb.

Why—bear them proudly, boy!
It is the sword he girded on his thigh—
It is the helm he wore in victory—
And shall we have no joy!
For thy green vales, oh Switzerland, he died
I will forget my sorrow in my pride!
The following are written recently, and are good, though in a vein:

THE PITY OF THE PARK FOUNTAIN.

'Twas a summery day in the last of May—
Pleasant in sun or shade;
And the hours went by, as the poet's say,
Fragrant and fair on their flowery way;
And a herse crept slowly through Broadway,
And the fountain gaily play'd.

The fountain played right merrily,
And the world looked bright and gay;
And a youth went by with a resolute eye,
Whose heart was sick and whose brain was [dry];
And he prayed to God that he might die—
And the Fountain played away.

such by the States and other powers, and as subordinate in all her rights of full sovereignty to no other power. A messenger has been despatched to our Minister at Mexico, as bearer of the despatch already communicated to the senate, and which is to be found in the letter addressed to Mr. Green, and forms a part of the documents ordered confidentially to be printed for the use of the senate. That despatch was dictated by a desire to preserve the peace of the two countries, by denying to Mexico all pretext for assuming a belligerent attitude to the United States, as she had threatened to do in the event of the annexation of Texas to the United States, by the despatch of her Government which was communicated by me to congress at the opening of its present session. The messenger is expected to return before the 15th of June next, but he may be detained to a later day. The recently appointed envoy from the United States to Mexico will be sent so soon as the final action is had on the question of annexation, at which time, and not before, can his instructions be understandingly prepared.

JOHN TYLER.

Washington, May 15th, 1844.

Hermitage, March 11, 1844.

"The present golden moment to obtain Texas must not be lost, or Texas must from necessity be thrown into the arms of England, and be forever lost to the United States! Need I call your attention to the situation of the United States—England in possession of Texas, or in strict alliance, offensive and defensive, and contending for California? How easy would it be for Great Britain to interpose a force sufficient to prevent emigration to California from the United States, and supply her garrison from Texas. Every real American, when they view this, with the danger to New Orleans from British arms from Texas, must unite heart and hand in the annexation of Texas to the United States. It will be a strong iron hoop round our union, and a bulwark against all invasions or aggression. I say again let not this opportunity slip to regain Texas, or it elude our grasp forever, or cost us oceans of blood, and millions of money, to free us from the evils that may be brought upon us! I hope and trust that there will be as many patriots in the Senate, as will ratify the treaty, which I have no doubt will be promptly entered into. I again say to you, that this moment must not be lost, or real necessity may compel Texas to look elsewhere for protection and safety.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Murder.—Capt. Brundage, of the steamer Victory, which plies between Buffalo and Chippewa, has been arrested on a charge of murder. A woman and child were living with him. Some time ago the woman, who had some six or eight hundred dollars in cash, and her child disappeared, but no suspicions were aroused until one morning when the sexton went into the grave yard and discovered a newly made grave. He wondered who dug it and the accident giving rise to some remarks, it at last came to the ears of a half crazy fellow, called 'old Moses,' living in the neighborhood, who related that a fearful work upon the shore, and it was apprehended that the abrasion might be so completed as to change the channel within the present year, leaving St. Louis an inland town.

Boats from above St. Louis report the Missouri and Osage rivers to be rising very rapidly and overflowing the bottoms on both sides.

ASTONISHING NEWS.

Rapid Flight.—The New York Express of the 13th inst., gives the subjoined "Postscript," which if true out does all other rapid feats of travelling yet accomplished under the sun. We are willing to let our readers judge whether there can be any reliance placed on this extraordinary statement, or whether it may not turn out to be another "Moon Story."

Astonishing intelligence by private express from Charleston via Norfolk!—the Atlantic Ocean crossed in three days!—arrival at Sullivan's Island of a steering Balloon invented by Mr. Monk Mason!!

"We stop the press at a late hour to announce that, by a Private Express from Charleston, S. C., we were just put in possession of full details of the most extraordinary adventure ever accomplished by man. The Atlantic Ocean has been actually traversed in a balloon, and in the incredibly brief period of three days! Eight persons have crossed in the machine—among others Sir Everard Brighthurst and Mr. Monk Mason. We have barely time now to announce this most novel and unexpected intelligence; but we hope by 10 this morning to have ready an Extra with the detailed account of the voyage.

P. S.—The extra will be positively ready, and for sale at our counter, by 10 o'clock this morning. It will embrace all the particulars yet known. We have also placed in the hands of an excellent artist a representation of the "STEERING BALLOON," which will accompany the particulars of the voyage.

Robbery at Congress Hall, Albany.—The rooms of the Hon. Mr. Davezac, of New York, the Hon. Mr. Linn, of Schenectady, and Mr. Greig, of Cananauqua, were entered last night at Congress Hall, and robbed of money and valuables, to the amount of over three hundred dollars. Major Davezac lost a highly prized gold watch which cost him one hundred and fifty dollars, Mr. Greig a valuable watch, and Mr. Linn some forty dollars in money. The thief took every precaution to avoid detection, as is evident from the fact that on the table in Major Davezac's room he left a diamond ring worth much more than the watch, and which was lying alongside of it. The ring had the Major's name on it. Mr. Linn's watch also was lying on his table, but neither it nor a purse of gold in one pocket of his pants were taken—the thief satisfying himself with abstracting thence his wallet, taking out its contents and leaving it at the door. The thief has not been detected, but suspicion is strongly attached to a young man who arrived at the Hotel at about ten o'clock last evening, and who about ten o'clock before 5 o'clock. He left this morning before 5 o'clock. He is described as a middle sized man, wearing whiskers and a cap.—Albany Atlas, April 9.

with several small children to provide for—deprived of a beloved husband by a pack of blood thirsty murderers, who were certain to escape with impunity because of their position in life—plunged from comfortable circumstances into poverty—and laughed at by the villains who robbed her of her husband and means of support—What must have been the state of her mind when all this ration! You who are happy in your families can judge of what would be your feelings under like circumstances. Every woman in the land is bound to use her influence against the adviser in this cold blooded murder!—Every man with the least spark of feeling in his bosom should remember the desolation brought to the friends of poor Cilley! And none should forget that the murderers are yet at large, and that the man whose advice was asked and obtained by the murderers is now seeking to be made chief magistrate of the Union the notorious duellist Henry Clay.—[Lycoming Gaz.]

What Mr. Clay Liked.—Mr. Clay in his speech here last week, said that it was a difficult task for him to address a promiscuous assemblage, that he felt "more ease in the national hall, contending for some great measure, or in a court of justice with a good cause, a good client, and if you please a good fee!" We will observe here, that this remarkably witty observation caused a mighty stir among the Whigs present; for they no doubt, well recollected the fact, that he was once a bitter, violent opponent of the United States Bank; that he made a masterly speech against the expediency and constitutionality of a Bank. Well what then? So if after he selected attorney to the bank, and received $17,000! for his services. This silenced Mr. Clay's opposition, and ever since he has been the advocate of a United States Bank—O! the potency of the almighty dollar!

The Leprosy in New Brunswick.—We learn from the Miramichi Gleaner, that a medical commission, consisting of Drs. Key, Skene, Tolderry, and Gordon, have been investigating the nature, origin, and extent of the frightful and loathsome disease now existing at Tracadie, Tabisintac, and Neguack. These gentlemen have decided that the disease is the Greek Elephantiasis; not the Elephantiasis of the Arabians, but the leprosy of the middle age, of that description which the French designate the Tubercular, and which raged over nearly every part of Europe between the tenth and sixteenth centuries.

The disease is contagious, and no person in this Province who has been unfortunate enough to contract it has yet been cured. The medical gentlemen say that the disease has no affinity to scrofula, and that the idea of its having arisen from the poor diet of the French settlers, or from filthy habits, is not correct, as they find it existing, in some of the cleanest dwellings, and among the most respectable families. The disease appears to have spread rapidly during the past year, and the Commissioners have seen upwards of twenty cases, all of which they traced to one source.—St. John Paper.

for the purpose of mobbing, plundering, murdering, and "utterly exterminating," the latter day Saints. Among a multiplicity of other belligerent and other unchristian, un-American, and very mobocratical proceedings, the following are specimens:

"Resolved, That we hold ourselves at all times in readiness to co-operate with our fellow-citizens in this State, utterly exterminate, the wicked and abominable Mormon leaders, the authors of our troubles.

"Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed forthwith to notify all persons in our township suspected of being the tools of the Prophet, to leave immediately on pain of instant vengeance. And we do recommend the inhabitants of the adjacent townships to do the same, hereby pledging ourselves to render all the assistance they may require.

"Resolved, That the time, in our opinion has arrived, when the adherents of Smith, as a body, should be driven from the surrounding settlements, into Nauvoo. That the Prophet and his miscreant adherents, should then be demanded at their hands, and if not surrendered, a war of extermination should be waged, to their entire destruction, if necessary for our protection, of his adherents. And we do hereby recommend this resolution to the consideration of the several townships, to the Mass Convention, to be held at Carthage; hereby pledging ourselves to aid, to the utmost, complete consummation of the object in view, that we may thereby be utterly relieved of the alarm, anxiety, and trouble, to which we are now subjected."

"Utterly exterminate!" and "entire destruction, if necessary," are so much above the profession of freemen, and terms of enlightened nations, that we shall leave a candid community to judge what sort of stuff the "Mass Convention" of Carthage, Warsaw and the other allied powers were composed of; which on the 13th and 14th of June, thus liberally dealt out the destinies of the Latter day Saints. It is said somewhere that "sudden and violent resolutions often bring leisure repentance," but here is a case beyond repentance. O Americans! O freemen! O christians, what is liberty worth? O sages! O patriots! O professors! What is religion worth? Come out like men, and answer these two questions:—What is liberty and religion worth if you cannot enjoy them? Who is so high, who is so low, who is so sage, and who is so rude, that he cannot stop one moment to blush for the sin of his country!

On the 17th of June the mob issued as follows: their

WARSAW SIGNAL.—EXTRA.

June 19, 1844.

down (6 o'clock, Wednesday evening) and reported that she was not allowed to land her passengers at Nauvoo, the city having been declared by the prophet, under martial law.

THE PREPARATION.

Our town for the last week has been in a constant state of excitement. Business has been almost entirely suspended; and every able bodied man is under arms and almost constantly in drill.

Never did we see exhibited a more determined spirit. An injured and insulted community suffering under their long borne grievances, are determined by an appeal to arms, as a last resort, to redress wrongs that have become insupportable.

On Monday last, about 150 men mustered in this place under the command of General Knox. The attention paid by every man, and the anxiety manifested to acquire a knowledge of military movements, is a full guarantee for the good conduct of our men in the coming emergency.

In Carthage and Green Plains, the citizens are all in arms, and as far as we can hear throughout the county, every man is ready for the conflict.

We have assurances that our neighbors in Missouri and Iowa will aid us. In Clark county, Mo., we understand that many are holding themselves in readiness to march so soon as wanted. From Rushville we have just learned by express that 300 men have enlisted for the struggle. McDonough county, is all alive and ready for the word of command. From Keosauqua, Iowa, we have just received intelligence by a resident of that place, that the citizens are in arms in our behalf, and only wait our call. From Keokuk and the river towns we learn that all are arming. General Stapp of this Brigade, is requested to call out the militia, and hold himself in readiness.

Joe is evidently much alarmed, but he has gone too far to backout. He must toe the mark, or run. Compromise is out of the question. The delegates sent to the Governor have not yet returned. If they fail to procure his interference, a day will be set forthwith, for a general rally as a posse, to assist the officers of justice. As soon as this is done, we will issue a handbill giving notice of the fact. Our friends in surrounding communities, who desire to aid us, will please hold themselves in readiness for this general order. When the word is given, every thing depends on promptness.

Captain Grover last week obtained from Quincy 59 muskets. Men and arms are promised from St. Louis, and cells contained in the return, and into the cause of the imprisonment, whether the confinement be for any criminal or supposed criminal matter, or not; and then he is to discharge, bail, or remand, as the case shall appear to require." See Com. vol. 2, page 261.] The writ of Habeas Corpus or, have you the body? is the only safeguard to freedom that is beyond the control of malice and revenge if righteously administered; and every tribunal possesses the legitimate right constitutionally to grant it as much as to grant a warrant upon oath, for the apprehension of an offender; and every judge and lawyer of this realm must say so too, or they are traitors to their trust, and should be branded by his people as cowards to the rights of freemen.

The writ of Habeas Corpus is the antidote against the Placemore; is the second Magna Charta; and the bulwark of freedom. It can follow at the heels of malice; it can smother the seeds of vengeance; it can smother the first sparks of insurrection; it can expunge laws, and make the captive free, and the subject master; it can, that appears its highest power, more than the sword, without civilization, and without the knowledge of war, and without the aid of the printing press of the press, defend itself from all assault by the arms of men and angels.

every thing betokens prosperity to our enterprise.

To our friends at a distance we say come! We are too weak in this country, without aid to effect our object. Come! you will be doing your God and your country service, in aiding us to rid earth of a most Heaven daring wretch.

6 o'clock, p. m.—D. W. Mathews, who was sent last Sunday to St. Louis, has just returned, by the Die Vernon. He has succeeded in procuring canon; and has brought up a good supply of ammunition.

Mr. Sympton and Mr. Thompson, have just returned from their trip to Missouri, and report all right, and ready.

A gentleman who conversed with Governor Ford last week, reports, that his excellency said, that he would do all he could in case Joe again defied the laws to bring him to justice. This was before the news of our present difficulties reached him.

We expect a six pounder to-morrow night from Quincy.

8 o'clock, p. m.—We have just learned that Joe has ordered all his followers into Nauvoo. The settlements around are with all despatch obeying the order.

At Lima a company was formed to-day and reported themselves in readiness for orders.

E. A. Thompson, Esq., who saw Governor Ford last week states that an order has been granted by His Excellency, to try Joe Smith by Court Martial, for unofficer like conduct.

"Preparations for an appeal to arms!" Internal war! Mobbing and bloodshed; and for what? any outrage upon the community, committed with impunity? No! no! verily no! But two Laws, two Fosters, and two Higbees, with a few other discontented spirits, wish to wreak vengeance on a whole community because forsooth, that community will not lie still and let them destroy them and their rights. Now really if the baser sort of men rush out in war, and murder men, women, and children, for the supposed wrongs of others, they must be thirsty for blood. Where is common sense? where is humanity, and where is the efficient arm of the government, to shield the oppressed from such a tornado of internal wrath and persecution? We will see what the Governor of the State, and the President of the United States will say and do, in such an important, debasing, and power-defying case of "insurrection." If there is any value in the institutions of government, now is the time to exercise it, in favor of law and liberty.

A QUESTION!

Who are the leaders of this mobocratic party? and who the instigators of this excitement is a question that we have often had propounded to us; and now as we have a little leisure, we feel free to take crimes, of one or two individuals? Are the lives of fifteen or twenty thousand men, women and children, to be sacrificed indiscriminately, to glut the blood-thirsty appetite of this modern Moloch; this humble, meek man, who with the rankest hypocrisy declared, not much longer than two months ago, under oath, publicly before the city Council, "that he had never known any thing personally against Joseph Smith, that he always had been his friend; that he was now his friend, and that if Joseph Smith was not hurt, until he hurt him, he would live until he was as old as Methuselah." This we heard with our own ears, when we saw these things our eyes began to open, we saw that our confidence had been misplaced, we saw that we had been feeding a viper and cherishing an adder in the path. We certainly were very much disappointed, when we saw him unite with the Fosters, Higbees, and Jackson; we wondered that he could condescend to associate with such a gang; believing the old adage, that "birds of a feather will flock together;" we thought he was descending very low, but not until some recent developments, did the full truth rest upon our mind, that this people had long been cherishing one of the vilest sycophants and hypocrites in their bosom that ever disgraced the footstool of God. That man is an honorable man who meets you in the highway, and robs you of your purse, in comparison to the wretch, who embraces you with a kiss and plunges a dagger to your heart. And however reluctantly we are obliged to believe, that William Law has long been the secret enemy of Joseph Smith, and of this people; and that whilst he has been one of Joseph Smith's counsellors and professing the most sacred friendship, that he has been secretly plotting with a gang of scoundrels to take away his life. Well may the inspired penman say, "cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm."

During the time that O. P. Rockwell, was confined in jail in Mo. for the alleged murder of Ex-Governor Boggs, and at the time that a demand had been made by the executive of the State of Mo. upon the executive of this State, for the body of Gen. Joseph Smith, letters were seen by Mrs. Rockwell, (who was on a visit to her husband,) and conversations heard by her, to this effect, "that a plot was concocting to kidnap Joseph Smith and that one of Joseph Smith's nearest friends would lead them to him. Other developments of a similar kind were made, but no particular person identified. As there was some little misunderstanding between Sidney Rigdon, Esq. & Gen. Smith at the time, suspicion attached itself very strongly to him, Mr. Rigdon however cleared himself satisfactorily of the charge, and it was not known until recently who it was that was engaged in this diabolical plot. The following statement, shews clearly who the "BRUTUS" was!

Daniel Carns, sworn, said that about 10 o'clock at night, a boat came up the river with about a dozen men. Wm. Law came to the gate with him, witness on guard, stopped them. Law called Joseph to the door, and wanted an interview. Joseph said, Bro. Law you know better than to come here at this hour of the night, and Law retired—next morning Law wrote a letter to apologize, which witness heard read—which was written apparently to screen himself from the censure of a conspiracy.

mentioned above, until after hearing the recent developments before the city Council.

TRUMAN GILLET, Jun.

Sworn and subscribed at the time and place above written before me.

WILLARD RICHARDS,
Recorder, C. N. [L.S.]

What are we to conclude from the above? Add to these the following testimony delivered before the city council:

"Theodore Turley, a mechanic, who being sworn, said that the Laws, (Wm. and Wilson,) had brought bogus dues to him to fix."

Couple this with the following oath:

"Lorenzo Wasson, sworn, said Joseph H. Jackson, told witness, that bogus making was going on in the city;—but it was too damned small business. Wanted witness to help him to procure money, for the General (Smith) was afraid to go into it, and with $500 he could get an engraving for bills, on the bank of Missouri, and one on the state of New York, and could make money,—said many times witness did not know him; believed the General had been telling witness something. God damn him if he has I will kill him,—swore he would kill any man that should prove a traitor to him. Jackson said if he could get a company of men to suit him, he would go into the frontiers and live by high-way robbery, had got sick of the world."

Now let us ask, who was William Law? who were the people with whom he was associated, and what is the nature of this band organized against the mormons?

Is it surprising with this testimony before them and a great deal more of a similar kind which we cannot now transcribe that the city council should have taken the steps they did, with evidence before them that both Wm. Law and Dr. Foster were both perjured men, and that the paper was a libel from beginning to end.

Is not the above indubitable testimony concerning the character of Wm. Law? Are a virtuous people to be condemned because they have the moral courage to put a stop to blacklegs, counterfeiters, and the vilest sycophants and snakes, that ever poisoned community. Good heavens what are we coming to! Has it come counterfeiters, have sufficient influence to excite the feelings of community, so as to come armed against a virtuous, innocent, and law abiding people; and is there no power to check the torrent? Are there no persons to be found who have the moral courage to meet the hydra-headed monster, and stand up in defence of those institutions for which our fathers bled to maintain, after trade and

Court decided there, might be an accessory to any crime either before or after the fact.

Witness knew some who voted for the order in the city council, heard Gen. Dunham give orders for the destruction of the press; Dunham, Redfield and Richards took an active part in the destruction of the press. Did not know all the persons.

Cross examined—City Council considered the press a nuisance and ordered it to be abated; was present at the execution of the Mayor's orders; no unnecessary noise; all was done peaceably; saw no disorder; heard no language by the prisoners calculated to disturb the peace.

H. O. Norton sworn—was at the printing office; heard Marshal Green give orders to open the door. Markham carried out the press and type; recollected Dunham; could not identify any others; no contention between the Marshal and Higbee; Marshal asked Chas. A. Foster for the key which he refused to give; heard no threats concerning the destruction of the press at any time.

O. F. Moesser sworn—saw many people gather around the printing office; went over, back, and over again; could not identify any person; heard no loud talking or noise.

P. T. Rolfe sworn—was at work in the printing office last Monday night; C. Higbee came in and said the council was about to destroy the press and took some papers from the desk; Marshal Green came with a company and demanded the key. Foster and Higbee forbid him; door was opened by Lytle, as witness thought; the press and fixtures were destroyed; some paper and a desk belonging to Dr. Foster containing several thousand dollars of property, $1000 auditor's warrants and other valuable papers.

Cross examined—Did not know the amount of warrants or papers; presumed they were destroyed; did not know whether they were destroyed; was from the office long enough to have them taken out. Said Green, Dunham, Markham, Holmes, Perry, Edwards and Harman helped move the press. Never knew any thing against Joseph Smith personally.

B. Warrington sworn—Was present at the council when the bill passed to destroy the press.

Joseph Smith objected to calling in question the doings of the city council, and referred to the proceedings of Congress to show that all legislative bodies have a right to speak freely on any subject before them; and that Congress is not responsible for a riot which might arise on the execution of their order by the Marshal; that the execution of such order could not be a riot, but a legal transaction; that the doings of the city council could only be called in question by the powers above them; and that a Magistrate had not that power; that the city individuals were arraigned for a riot;—if the city council had transcended their powers they were amenable to the supreme court, and that judge Thomas had decided that an action could not lie, if no riot had been committed.

Councillor Bonny said if the act was committed under an ordinance of the city they might show it in justification.

Court decided that the gentlemen arraigned, were arraigned in their individreturn that the press and type were destroyed, [as published in the "Neighbor" June 19.]

Court queried about the destruction of the desk.

Dr. Wakefield was again called up; heard Marshal tell the officers and men, to hurt no property except the press, type and fixtures; and after the abatement Marshal enquired if his order had been obeyed, and the officers said it had.

E. Wingott called again; heard Mr. Foster ask Higbee for the key of the office, and afterwards saw him deliver the key to Mr. Higbee; there was nothing destroyed but what pertained to the press.

Addison Everett [of New York] sworn;—saw the press and type taken out and burned—saw no other property burned; desk might have been taken away before—should not have seen it if it had been; saw no desk burned,—does not believe any desk was burned.

Joel S. Miles sworn—Foster said his docket was not burned. Witness was sure that Dr. Foster said he had taken other papers out of the desk.

W. G. Ware called again; saw Charles Foster coming from the office, and go into Foster's house, with books under his arm; looked like account books—saw nothing but the press and fixtures brought out except a chain, and the marshal ordered it carried back.

E. Wingott, recalled—stood close by the door; could see all that was done, did not believe a desk could be brought out and he not see it.

Dr. Wakefield recalled—Joseph Smith and Hyrum were not on the Hill at that evening.

Joseph W. Coolidge was discharged by the court and sworn; Charles Foster asked Francis Higbee for the key to the office, Higbee hesitated; Foster said he wanted to get a desk that had some valuable papers in it—Foster got the key and went in; did not see him remove the desk; might have removed it and witness not see it, there was no desk burned.

The councillors submitted the case without plea; and the court discharged the prisoners.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1844.

FOR PRESIDENT,

GEN. JOSEPH SMITH,
NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,

SIDNEY RIGDON, ESQ.,
OF PENNSYLVANIA.

TO SPECULATORS.

There will be a good market in the city of Nauvoo, for provisions. Come on, then, good people, and aid us while we support free trade and sailors rights, and protection of person and property. No mobs, no libels, but virtue and religious toleration forever.

THE PAPA EKKLESIA:

try,—therefore he was not spoiled by the fulsome adulation of newspaper puffs and paragraphs which dazzled the esteem of Dickens, and raised his "airy ideans" above the level of reason and fair illustrations. While Seatfield's fairness raises him to honor in our nation, let Dickens and his "notes" sink together by repudiation and disgrace.

By the by, Sir E. L. Bulwer has been expected to pay a visit to our country and probably ere this he has encountered the civilities of fops, dandies and nice men who constitute the silk stocking and ruffle shirt elite of Broadway. No doubt he intends making a book about us in which to show up the state of our society as it is. We will see how he and Dickens will agree. Bulwer holds the decided supremacy over him in point of talent, education, genius and literary reputation. In speaking of his intended visit, the London Court Journal says:

"His ostensible object is the improvement of his health, which, we regret to hear, has been for a long time declining. We cannot doubt, however, that the rich ore he will gather in the course of his wanderings, will be used in the glowing alambic of his mind, and reproduced in some original and brilliant form."

THE RIGHTS OF MAN.

Every man in a government like ours, is born with certain rights, free from restraint; namely, the right to live, to talk, to trade and to defend and the government has its rights, by the consent of the people; and must necessarily be administered by those that the people place in authority. The United States, the several States, the counties, the cities, towns and people all possess sovereign power. The Union as the mansion; the several states as the apartments, and the people as the possessors, are by a fidelity and perpetually entitled to every thing above and below; from the depth of hell to the height of heaven. The elements are peoples; and the people are God's. Every man is a King in his own dominion.

But for the better security of life, liberty and the pursuits of enterprise, the majority have entered into a general, and natural contract to submit to certain rules and laws. Under these regulations then, hang the destinies of man, and the constitution of the United States, till the people annul it, is the magna charta. The constitution of the several States and the charters of the various cities, are the same, with the corporate powers of perpetual succession, as derived from the original. Law, as a rule of action, may govern any portion of the people, with their consent, where it does not interfere with the rights of others; and so from legislative bodies, as the life protecting power, from Congress to a corporation, each have the constitutional right to make all laws that may be required for the health, happiness, benefit, convenience of the people; and each in their several capacity possess, unlimited power to protect life, trade, speech and property.

All officers are sworn to support the constitution of the United States, and of the State wherein he officiates and faithfully demean himself in office. This oath embraces, then, the whole constitution of the State; with the sacred assurance that the officer will faithfully demean in his office. Here let us examine the fifth article of the amendment to the constitution:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject, for the same offence, to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of his efficient arm of the government, to shield the oppressed from such a tornado of internal wrath and persecution? We will see what the Governor of the State, and the President of the United States will say and do, in such an important, debasing, and power-debasing case of "insurrection." If there is any virtue in the American institutions of government, now is the time to exercise it, in favor of law and liberty.

A QUESTION?

Who are the leaders of this mobocratic party? and who the instigators of this excitement is a question that we have often had propounded to us; and now as we have a little leisure, we feel free to take up the subject and to answer the question.

Most of the leaders engaged in this outrage, are men whose characters are so notorious, and whose conduct has been so infamous, that it is unnecessary for us to say any thing about them; among those are Dr. Foster, Francis Higbee, Chauncey Higbee, and Charles Foster. Dr. Foster and the Higbee's as debauchees and gamblers, we believe have not a parallel in this city; they have long been a stink in the nostrils of this community; and so far from their being considered honorable, they have been looked upon as common disturbers of the peace, and a pest to society: the records of our city, bear ample testimony of and of this the parties themselves feel sufficiently convinced. Francis Higbee, while being reasoned with by Sidney Rigdon Esq., (one of his old friends) as to the impropriety of his present mode of procedure, said, "I have no character to lose." And it is by this reckless band, without character, without influence, and despised where they are known, that our characters, our property, and our lives are assailed.

But are not William, and Wilson Law, honorable men? They have been looked upon as such, and generally treated as such, until within the last few months. We have been among the number of their friends, and when disclosure after disclosure of a suspicious character was being made, we trampled them under our feet, as unworthy of notice and could not believe that they would do any thing base, or dishonorable; until a full development of circumstances and a regular chain of evidence delivered under oath, forced us reluctantly to believe to the contrary. We had supposed that they were our friends, the friends of Joseph Smith, and the friends of this people, for they had been dandied on their lap and always made loud professions of friendship; but what friend? what patriot? what philanthropist? what honorable, and what but a debased bloodthirsty wretch, would try to excite a community to bring mob, bloodshed, and carnage upon a whole community for the crimes, or alleged crimes of a particular person identified. As there was some little misunderstanding between Sidney Rigdon, Esq. & Gen. Smith at the time, suspicion attached itself very strongly to him, Mr. Rigdon however cleared himself satisfactorily of the charge, and it was not known until recently who it was that was engaged in this diabolical plot. The following statement however, made before the city Council, shews clearly who the "BRUTUS" was!

Daniel Carns, sworn, said that about 10 o'clock at night, a boat came up the river with about a dozen men. Wm. Law came to the gate with them, witness on guard, stopped them. Law called Joseph to the door, and wanted an interview. Joseph said, Bro. Law you know better than to come here at this hour of the night, and Law retired—next morning Law wrote a letter to apologize, which witness heard read—which was written apparently to screen himself from the censure of a conspiracy and the letter betrayed a conspiracy on the face of it.

A gentleman present at the city Council, when these disclosures were made, being in possession of facts relative to Wm. Law, but being as incredulous as ourselves relative to the dishonesty of Wm. Law, until he heard those disclosures has made the following affidavit.

State of Illinois, June 18th, 1844.

City of Nauvoo. Personally appeared Truman Gillet jun. before me Willard Richards, Recorder of the city of Nauvoo. And after being duly sworn, deposed and saith, that on or about the first day of June 1842, while passing up the Ohio river on Steamboat Massachusetts, deponent overheard two men, one a resident of Missouri, and the other of Ohio, as reported, conversing together concerning incidents on the Upper Mississippi; when one said to the other, "if Law could have succeeded in getting an introduction for us to Joe Smith, damn him, we would have gagged him, or nabbed him" and all hell could not have rescued him from our hands." The next morning deponent got into conversation with the man before mentioned from Missouri, who stated that he "had been on the upper Mississippi on business, that he stopped at Nauvoo on his way down, with some twelve or fourteen other men, who laid a plan to kidnap Joe Smith, that some of the company queried about getting access to him; but one of them said he knew they could if he could find Wm. Law; they called on Wm. Law, in the evening to get an interview to their great Prophet; and Law went with them to the gate, when they were stopped by the police, and it was well for him that we did not succeed in getting an introduction to him. Deponent said, did Wm. Law know your business? and he replied, yes! Deponent asked what have you against Joseph Smith? Did he ever injure you? The man replied "no, but he has others." Did you ever see him? Yes, I was one who helped to run the Mormons from Missouri," and related many circumstances concerning the Missouri mob. Deponent said to the man, he was acquainted with Wm. Law, considered he was an honorable man, and was led to doubt his being engaged with them in a conspiracy against Joseph Smith. He replied "God dam you, it is true whether you believe it or not." And repeatedly affirmed it. Deponent did not believe the statements of the man from Missouri as

Wm. Law? Are a virtuous people to be condemned because they have the moral courage to put a stop to blacklegs, counterfeiters, and the veryest sycophants and snakes, that ever poisoned community. Good heavens what are we coming to! Has it come to this, that virtuous, blacklegs, and counterfeiters, have sufficient influence to excite the feelings of community, so as to come armed against a virtuous, innocent, and law abiding people; and is there no power to check the torrent? Are there no persons to be found who have the moral courage to meet the hydra-headed monster; and stand up in defence of those institutions for which our fathers bled: to maintain, "free trade and sailors rights."

Answer ye patriots, and republicans!—shades of the venerable fathers of our country speak! Shall human rights, and republican institutions be trampled under foot, by lawless miscreants in the very temple of freedom, which yet reeks with the blood of our venerable sires? (More anon.)

State of Illinois. } ss.
County of Hancock. }

Justice's court, June 17th 1844, Daniel H. Wells, Justice of the Peace presiding.

State of Illinois vs Joseph Smith. Samuel Bennett, John Taylor Wm. W. Phelps, Hyrum Smith, John P. Green, Stephen Perry, Dinic B. Huntington, Jonathan Daulum, Stephen Markham, Jonathan Holmes, Jesse C. Harman, John Lytle, Joseph W. Cook, Harvey D. Redfield, O. Porter Rockwell and Levi Richards.

Defendants were brought before the court by Joel S. Miles, constable of the county aforesaid, by virtue of a warrant issued by the court on complaint of W.G. Ware, for a Riot committed in the city of Nauvoo, county aforesaid, on or about the 10th day of June 1844, by forcibly entering a brick building, in said city occupied as a printing office, and taking therefrom by force, and with force of arms a printing press, types and paper, together with other property belonging to Wm. Law, Wilson Law, Robert D. Foster, Charles A. Foster, F. M. Higbee, Chauncey L. Higbee and Charles Ivins, and breaking in pieces and burning the same in the streets.

George P. Stiles Esq. appeared as counsel for the defence and

Edward Bonny Esq. for the prosecution.

W.G. Ware sworn, said he was present when the city council passed an order for the destruction of the press; went up to the Temple and heard the Marshal read the order of the Mayor; did not know how they got into the building; the press was taken out and destroyed.

Defendant's counsel objected to witness' stating who voted for the passage of the bill in the council, and read Burns' definition of a riot, and said there could be no necessary.

Counsellor Bonny read from the statute, page 173, and plead there might be an accessory to a riot.

ject before them; and that Congress is not responsible for a riot which might arise on the execution of their order by the Marshal; that the execution of such order could not be a riot, but a legal transaction; that the doings of the city council could only be called in question by the powers above them; and that a Magistrate had not that power; that the city individuals were arraigned for a riot;—if the city council had transcended their powers they were amenable to the supreme court, and that judge Thomas had decided that an action could not lie, if no riot had been committed.

Counsellor Bonny said if the act was committed under an ordinance of the city they might show it in justification.

Court decided that the gentlemen arraigned, were arraigned in their individual capacities, and could not be recognized by the court in their official capacity.

Witness said that all he heard the prisoners say, was said as counsellors.

Testimony on the prosecution closed.

Counsellor Stiles moved that the prisoners be dismissed for want of a case being made out.

Counsellor Bonny read the riot act, and plead a case had been made out.

Motion overruled by the court.

Dr. Wakefield, Willard Richards, and Edward Wingott sworn.

Dr. J. R. Wakefield. (of New York) said he went on the Hill after the order passed the Council, saw some portion of the Legion collected, walking quietly along as though they were walking to the dead march in 'Saul,' there was no noise or tumult. Higbee asked the Marshal his authority, Marshall stated his authority from the Mayor for abating the nuisance. Higbee set them all at defiance, some twelve men were called out who went up stairs and opened the door, did not know how the door was opened, there was not more than one thump; Marshal Green asked one of the officers if any thing was destroyed except what belonged to the Pre-s and the officer replied no! All was done in perfect order, as peaceably as people move on a Sunday: was present all the time, all that was done, was done in their official capacity as officers of the city.

Counsellor Bonney objected to the testimony, as it was not before the court that there was any city.

Court decided that any knowledge in possession of the Court was testimony in the Court.

E. Wingott, [of Boston] concurred in Dr. Wakefield's statements, was by the door when it was opened, and knew that nothing more than a knee was put against it; all was done quietly; was present in city council when the order passed, nothing said in council except what was said in capacity of counsellors and aldermen,—was by the door all the time when the press and type, and things used in connexion with the press was destroyed; There was no other property taken from the building.

Cross examined.—Did not know the name of the man who opened the door—knew O. P. Rockwell.

Willard Richards read the resolutions of the city council of the 10th inst., declaring the press a nuisance &c.; and the Mayor's order to the Marshal to destroy the press; and the Lieut. General's order to Major Gen. Dunham, to assist the Marshal with the Legion if needed, to abate the nuisance; and the Marshal's

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT:

SIDNEY RIGDON, ESQ.,
OF PENNSYLVANIA.

TO SPECULATORS.

There will be a good market in the city of Nauvoo, for provisions. Come on, then, good people, and aid us while we support free trade and sailors rights, and protection of person and property. No mobs, no libels, but virtue and religious toleration forever.

HE PASA EKKLESIA:

Or an Original History of the religious Denominations, at present existing in the United States, Philadelphia, 1844. Pp. 734.

We take pleasure in announcing the above valuable work, by J. D. Rupp, as worthy an extensive patronage. It certainly excels all the histories extant, in point of intrinsic merit, as to the true creeds, beliefs, discipline, and multifarious modes, by which men try to serve God; even the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," speaks for itself, as organized by direct revelation. The wisdom of the work consists more especially in giving every denomination an equal chance to furnish their own "reason for a hope hereafter," whether the Lord hath revealed the secret according to Amos the prophet, or not. Every sect is its own witness. Such a work is actually worth its weight in gold. The author has our blessing for his success.

SEATSFIELD, THE GERMAN AUTHOR.

The late publication of Seatsfield's "Life in the New World"—illustrative of men and manners in the United States—is represented by the New York papers to be a most capital work, presenting correct pictures of the society and manners of our country. In his descriptions of American scenery, he is said to hold the "mirror up to nature" and embellish his scenes with such a flood of elegance as at once to fix upon every page the impress of talent and genius not easily transcended. "His ambition," says the Herald—and that puts it beyond dispute—"is to present faithful pictures of society, in all its phases, in this country, and to arouse and stimulate the German people, by their contemplation, to enter at once on their career of freedom and prosperity, which now seems opening before them."—This is a noble ambition in the author which ascends far above the ideal worlds of wonder which have won for "Bizz" his mushroom popularity.

This is something that heretofore has not been done for America. The majority of trans-atlantic authors—such as Marryatt, Mrs. Trollope and Dickens, for examples—are to be stuffed up with aristocratic notions, and blinded by national prejudice, to properly appreciate republican institutions, and value the manners of unostentatious society. Seatsfield, it appears, travelled silently through our couneral capacity possess, unlimited power to protect life, trade, speech and property.

All officers are sworn to support the constitution of the United States, and of the State wherein he officiates and faithfully demean himself in office. This oath embraces, then, the whole constitution of the State; with the sacred assurance that the officers will faithfully demean in his office. Here let us examine the fifth article of the amendment to the constitution:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject, for the same offence, to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law: nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

Now it is among the common rules of law that he that has power to take liberty has power to restore it; and from Maine to the Rocky mountains, if the United States claim jurisdiction thus far, from the president to a justice of the peace, every officer should be bound by his oath (as a conservator of the peace) to grant writs of habeas corpus to all criminals arrested, as well as to those in prison, because the constitution of the United States has peremptorily declared, that "the privilege of the writ of Habeas Corpus SHOULD NOT BE SUSPENDED, unless when, in case of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it." And if any officer of justice, having authority, refuses to grant this writ when petitioned so to do requisitely, law or no law, he PERJURES HIMSELF in the true sense, and real meaning of responsibility, as bound by oath, in the sight of man and God; and for the safety of right, there should be a chance in the oaths of grand jurors to make inquiry into such cases, a part of their duty.

In the language of Judge Kent, "upon the Habeas Corpus, the judge is not confined to the facts contained in the return, and into the cause of the imprisonment, whether the commitment be for any criminal or supposed criminal matter, or not; and then he is to discharge, bail, or remand, as the case shall appear to require." [See Com. vol. 2, page 26.] The writ of Habeas Corpus or "have you the body," is the only safeguard to freedom that is beyond the control of malice and revenge if righteously administered; and every tribunal possesses the legitimate right constitutionally to grant it as much as to grant a warrant, upon oath, for the apprehension of an offender; and every judge and lawyer of this realm must say so too, or they are traitors to their trust, and should be branded by the people as cowards to the rights of freemen. The writ of Habeas Corpus in the sublime language of Blackstone, is the "second Magna Charta," and "the bulwark of freedom." It can follow at the heels of malice; it can sheath the sword of revenge; it can quench the fire of false swearing; it can open prison doors, and let the captive go free, and the officer, lawyer or man, that opposes its healthy hand, is meaner than the savage, without civilization, and ought to lie down in sorrow and rise up in anguish, till the grating gates of the prison house of ungodly men, open to receive him into more congenial accommodations.

The rights and improvements of property can be enjoyed to almost any extent, provided they do not come in contact with the same rights and improvements of others, plough the oceans with ships; navigate the lakes and rivers for convenience and fast; the lesser streams for mills; establish slaughter houses, meeting houses, convents, printing presses, &c.; and all is well, unless they infringe upon others' rights, or the peace, or injure the reputation or happiness of community, or disturb the general peace of society: in which case, says Judge Kent, 'The government may, by general regulations, interdict such uses of property as would create nuisance, and become dangerous to the lives, or health, or peace, or comfort of the citizens.' [See page 276, Cont.]

Nuisances are of various kinds; and any thing that destroys life, injures health, reputation, or the common happiness of man; must be so considered, and can be abated or removed by authority. Mill dams, slaughter houses, presses that issue libels upon community or individuals, and even men and women, (by insanity and intemperance) may become nuisances, and Congress has no right to make any law touching the freedom of these, or religion, the right is reserved to corporations, or states; where the power is not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states or the people; the people have a right to judge by legal legislation their own grievances, correct the abuse, and guard against the evil for the future.

The tenor by which charters are granted and continued, need not in this place be discussed. Every charter must be interpreted according to the reading, and must continue according to its stipulations.

The charter of the Constitution of the United States, as well as the several states, is, in general, the same, and together with the reserved rights, embrace every thing above and below, far as the grant extends, with the exception of the jurisdiction of the authority to try transgression, or adjudicate in larger sums, and this is a matter of mere superiority delegated to the few, against the integrity of the many; for who does not know, that municipalities, with four or five judges, would be more apt to come to the real merits of the case than one judge.

To conclude, the intent, aim, and essence of all the constitutions and laws of our country, are to give every person an equal right and justice in religious belief and worship; and in the enjoyment and possession of property, and the enjoyment and happiness of life. These facts of themselves, are sufficient reasons then, to warrant us in saying; the charter you can bring courts and justice to the people, the better the sooner administered; the better, and at the least expense the better, whether the remedy is found in the justness, municipal or supreme courts.

There is a noble and independent spirit it breathed through the following article. If every editor had the boldness to take the same stand relative to our home disturbances in Hancock county, much trouble, turmoil and excitement would be saved the country. If law has been violated by the citizens of this city, the law provides a remedy—let that have its course and we are content. We are a law abiding people, desirous to live in peace with our neighbors, and the only pretext that men have to excite them to hostilities and 'extermination' is our religion. This is a truth to which we bear record to the world and we call on all honorable men, who honor the constitution and laws of their country, to see us protected in the exercise of these sacred rights. Let a healthy public sentiment be expressed denunciatory of the spirit of mobocracy, and the hydra-headed monster will hide itself forever beneath the overwhelming wave of shame and honest indignation.

Why all this commotion because a certain nuisance has been removed in our city? The Mayor and city council have been twice tried & acquitted, and are now having their third trial at Carthage, in compliance with the requisition of the Governor. They deliver themselves up to the law, and let the law settle the matter—law is the best conservator of the peace. All law abiding men will be satisfied with this.

From the People's (St. Louis) Organ.

THE MORMONS.

It would seem from the newspaper noise, that we are to have the scenes of Jackson county in 1833, and Caldwell county in 1838, re-enacted again at Nauvoo. 'It seems that a schism has been effected in the city of Zion, among the followers of the Prophet, and they are some interlopers, procured a press, and poured out their wrath upon the Prophet and his party. This wrath was highly tinged with slanderous charges against male and female, together with such noxious epithets as are calculated to stir up the blood.

The blood of the Prophet and his city dignitaries, was set in motion, and by color of their law and their municipal corporate body, made a descent upon this public nuisance as they declared it, and totally demolished the scandalous machine, the printing press. Now if it be true that there is a schism in the church of the latter day saints, why not let them alone to devour each other? What business have the Gentiles to interfere in this matter? Some of our squeamish editors, bowed out lustily about the liberty of the press. What have they to do with the liberty of the press of Nauvoo? Let the saints settle between themselves. How long would a scurrilous paper circulate in this community, our neighbors are trembling over beams to get at their neighbors' secrets. Have we no civil law in this land? Nauvoo seems to suffer the same of the Mormons but an immediate resort to arms, to bloodshed, to massacre, and extermination.

tion. Cannon, arms, and military stores have gone forward, as we are informed, from this city. We doubt it very much. We cannot think we have men amongst us so fool-hardy; besides, where did the cannon come from? Are they the property of the State or of the United States? We hope for the sake of poor human nature, that there is more smoke than fire about this third Mormon war. All parties concerned in the other two, disgraced themselves and the State. We hope hereafter, there is to be no blood spilt in these Mormon crusades. We cannot see what monstrous peculiarities there are in a community of Mormons, that cannot be made amenable to law. When a difficulty occurs with the Mormons, all seem to grasp the rifle instinctively, as though no law but the club law was ever heard of among us. Let the hostile pause and enquire of the oracles of humanity, of religion, of civil liberty, and of law, before they become the assassins of their fellow citizens.

The public arms held by the Nauvoo Legion, was, on the 24th inst., given up to the State, by order of the Governor.

For the Neighbor.

Wonderful things in Nauvoo! Terrible things from the great Mormon Empire! Church and State! Religion and Politics! The modern PROPHET, a Candidate for President!!! Such are the exclamations of some of the remarkably intelligent citizens of our enlightened Republic. They seem thunderstruck at our audacity, in nominating a righteous man for the Presidency. All the great Reformers and learned Doctors have told us, that ecclesiastical and civil government must never be united; and warned us to be careful how we mingle religion with politics. Therefore, we must have a Deist and Infidel, or an Atheist, at the head of the government: lest forsooth, if we have a Christian, Church and State will be united. Great God! what an idea!!! We must have a wicked man for President, lest a righteous man should mingle religion with politics. When such is the policy of a nation, we cannot wonder, that its citizens are oppressed, and its government dwindles away into insignificance.

If the advocates of such a wretched sentiment, had examined their Bibles, the foundation of all law, they would have discovered that such were not the opinions which governed the councils of heaven. For the Almighty continually revealed his will unto his people, and gave them directions, with regard to the management of their government; their wars, their conduct to other nations, and all affairs of a temporal nature. And when we examine the history of the Jews, the chosen people of God, we find that when they were governed by such righteous men as Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, and Solomon; they enjoyed the smiles of heaven, they conquered all their enemies, they flourished at home and abroad, they increased in numbers, wealth, honor and glory; and they lived in contentment, peace and happiness. But when they were ruled by such wicked men as Saul, Rehobaham, Ahab, Manasseh and Zedekiah, we see them decreasing in wealth and power, overcome by their enemies, divided among themselves, oppressed by their rulers, their country destroyed, themselves taken captive, and suffering the vengeance of a just God, offended by the depravity of their rulers. Truly "when the wicked rule the people mourn."

But our citizens seem to be ignorant of these facts, and to be determined to try the same course of conduct. Indeed they have tried it, until we are now on the very verge of anarchy and ruin; and the people smarting under their wrongs and oppression, are sounding, throughout the length and breadth of the land, the trumpet of Reform. From the north to the south, from the east to the west, the cry is heard in tones of thunder, Retrenchment and Reform!!! The time has come: we have long enough suffered under the rule of wicked men. Let us now have a righteous man at the head of the government. Citizens of the United States awake! be no longer trampled upon; make an effort now for your redemption. Arise in the majesty of your strength and shake off the chains which have so long fettered you; we have, long enough, had a president over a party; we have long enough, had a president over office holders and Aristocrats. Let us now have a President over the whole people.—We can expect no reformation under such rulers, as have disgraced the country for the last ten years; we must look for a different man. Let us have a man of pure and upright principles—of an independent mind—of true patriotism—a man who will execute the laws with justice and equity, regardless of consequences—a friend to the poor—an advocate of liberty—in short a Christian and a man of God. But where shall we find such a man? Who is there possessed of such a character in this degenerated age? where is the man that will carry out such principles? Let the latter day Saints answer—let all patriotic men answer—let all honest, upright lovers of their country answer—and let all the citizens of this vast republic answer, at the polls next fall, GEN. JOSEPH SMITH.

LIBERTAS.

The Servile Insurrection in Cuba.—We are permitted to make the following extract from a letter of a recent date written by an American gentleman in Cuba to his friend in this city.

"At this time we are under very great excitement. In consequence of a servile insurrection, having recently been discovered in the island, and particularly in this vicinity. Whites and blacks are alike implicated, and many American citizens have been arrested and placed in irons and the stocks, whom we have every reason to believe innocent. They are arrested merely on the single accusation or extorted evidence of the slaves, under the torture of the lash. The most trifling conversation, or the least suspicious act, is sufficient to send one to prison, where he is neither allowed opportunity for defense, nor the consolation or sympathies of his friends or countrymen. There is a strong feeling against Americans, under the impression that the Government will seek no redress, which I most heartily hope may prove without foundation. Fear and terror are depicted on the countenances of all foreigners, and every one expects that he may be the next victim."

[Journal of Comm. res.]

We have been furnished with the subjoined list of foreigners imprisoned at Cardenas, near Matanzas, for alleged or supposed complicity in the plot:

Englishmen.—Henry Elkins, engineer; Danl. Downing, engineer; and a third name unknown.—Citizens of United States.—Borby, engineer; Samuel Moffit, carpenter, and Henry Cavalier, engineer. Com. Adv.

From Key West.—We have the 'Light of the Reef,' of the 13th and 20th ult.—The former states that the long continued drought at that place still continues, and that there has been no rain of importance for three months past. The 'Reef,' of the 20th, contains the following particulars received by an arrival from Havana, of the late negro conspiracy, which was to begin at Matanzas and to be followed up throughout the entire island of Cuba.

It is calculated (says that paper) that upwards of 3,000 negroes have been killed, and they are actually strangling 25 daily, by the public executors of Matanzas. There were, besides, upwards of 3,000 confined in the jails of Havana, Matanzas and Cardenas; amongst whom were 80 white women in the jail of Havana, who had agreed to marry the chiefs of the negroes. A mulatto was to be made President, and in his house was found a picture representing him in full uniform, with the daughter of the Marquis Arquois as his wife, and the Marchioness of Arquois washing the feet of the couple—be with a poniard, threatening her if she would not perform that office.

One of their plans was to put poison in the bread, and to fall upon the troops afterwards, and after killing or dispersing them, they would fall upon the white men and black women. The white children were to be thrown into pots of boiling oil, and only a few of the white and mulatto women were to be reserved for servants. The whole of the white women were to be killed excepting those of between 15 and 30 years of age, who were to be kept for their wives.

Fire in Waterbury, Ct.—The extensive Rolling Mills, Fire works, Pin Factory, &c. of Messrs. Brown and Ellon, in the village of Waterbury, were destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning last. It is impossible to impure accurately the real loss—but it is probably in the neighborhood of $20,000—insurance, it is said, is effected on the property for $15,000.

From Havana.—Verbal intelligence to the 29th of April has been received at New York, by the barque General Harrison. The tenor is the same as for some time past—continual arrests at Havana and Matanzas, and a fearful frequency of executions. Four lawyers had been arrested, implicated, it was said, by the confession of some blacks under torture of the lash.

An order had been issued by the Government, ordering all colored persons to leave the island in fifteen days, under a heavy penalty, which will be rigidly enforced. It was rumored at Havana, the day before the General Harrison left, that one of the foreign consuls had been killed, together with six colored females at the city of St. Domingo. All was consternation at that place.

Mr. Clay's Democracy.—If the gentlemen will not allow us to have black slaves, they must have white ones: for we cannot cut our firewood and black our shoes and have our wives and daughters work in the kitchen." [Henry Clay.]

Gen. Harrison's opinion of Mr. Clay.—"I will do my duty, even if Mr. Clay is to be benefited by it, for I have experienced only ungenerous treatment in requital for years of devoted service."

[Gen. Harrison.]

American Enterprise.—Largest Contract ever Made.—The Emperor of Russia has contracted with Mr. Ross Winans, of Baltimore, and Messrs. Eastwick & Harrison, of Philadelphia, for the construction of one hundred and sixty-two Locomotives, with tenders for each, and five thousand three hundred burthen cars, together with duplicates of such parts of the machinery as may require to be renewed. Thirty locomotive engines, and one thousand car trucks are to be finished in 1845, and the like number is to be completed in each subsequent year to 1848, inclusive. The whole cost of the machinery here contracted for will be more than four millions of dollars. The locomotives and cars are intended for the Railroad between St. Petersburg and Moscow, which is four hundred miles in length. The whole line of road is now a great state of forwardness, under the superintendence of our scientific countryman, Major George Whistler, and will probably be completed in three years from this date.

Upper California is said to be the most fertile spot of earth known. It produces spontaneously oats, clover and flax, in great abundance, and of an excellent quality. It is generally covered with a sort of short, fine grass, of which horses and cattle are very fond. The oats in many parts of the country are found 5 or 6 feet in height. The clover generally grows two, or three feet high, and resembles our common red and white clover. The flax is of excellent quality. The soil is generally a black, deep vegetable loam; that of the hills and mountains is usually a light brown loam, or vegetable earth. The sub soil is generally gravel and sand, or uncultivated clay.

The principal grain grown as yet in California is wheat, which is raised in great abundance throughout the country. The crop ranges between 30 and 60 bushels to the acre, or to a bushel of sowing. As high as 133 fold has been produced; the spontaneous growth of the next year being 61 bushels the acre! The wheat raised in California is of a very different kind from the American; one s'alk producing several stalks or heads. It is of an excellent quality and makes very superior flour. Indian corn, beans, peas, tobacco and all kinds of vegetables are grown with great success in all parts of the country. There is no part of the world, perhaps, more favorable to the growing of rice, cotton, and cane than California. Apples, pears, peaches, figs, almonds, olives, dates, oranges, lemons, citrons, pomegranates and grapes, may all be produced in great abundance. In fact, all the tropical fruits are, or may be produced in this climate.

In many parts of the country timber is very abundant, especially on the coast, where oak, ash, arbutus, arbutus and several species of cedar and pine are found. In the interior the timber is principally confined to the streams; but there are many sections of the streams which are well timbered. Both on the coast and in the interior is found the most admirable timber for ship-building.
